DISMAL, gloomy, dreary, sad. (F.-L.) 'More fowle than dismal day'; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7. 26. The oldest use of the word appears to be in the phrase 'in the dismal', signifying 'at an unlucky time' or 'in the evil days'. It occurs in Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 1206; where the knight, in describing with great perturbation of mind he told his tale of love to his lady, says: 'I not [know not] wel how that I began, Ful ekil rehersen hit I can; And eek, as helpe me God withal, I trowe hit was in the dismal, That was the ten woundes of Egypte.' The sense is: 'I believe it was in an unlucky time similar to the days of the ten plagues of Egypt.' The same phrase—in the dismal—occurs in The Pilgrim of Sweete Susan (Lain's Ance. Pop. Poet. of Scotland), l. 305; and in Polin. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 393, l. 477. β When the equivalence of dis-mal to 'evil days' was forgotten, the word days was (tautologically) added. Thus L. dis-mal has: 'Her dismale daies, and her fatal houres'; Storie of Thebes, pt. iii. (ed. 1561, fol. 370). See further in my note to Chaucer, ljk. Duch. 1206; Brand, Pop. Antiq., ed. Ellis, ii. 45; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, ii. 329. = AF. dis mal, explained as les mal jours (evil days) in MS. DISMAY, to terrify, discourage. (Hybrid; F.-L. and OIIG.) In early use, in King Alisaunder, 2801. = OF. desmay*, a form not found (though Palsgrave has 'I dismaye, I put a person in fere or drele, je desmaye, and je esmaye; p. 519) but equivalent to Span. desmayar, to dismay, dishearten, also, to be discouraged, to lose heart (cf. Port. desmaier, Ital. smagare). The OF. desmay* was supplanted in French by the verb esmay, to dismay, terrify, strike powerless. These two verbs are formed in the same way, and only differ in the forms of the prefixes, which are equivalent respectively to the L. dis-, apart, and to L. ex-, out. Both are hybrid words, formed, with L. prefixes, from the OHG. magan (G. mügen), to be able, to have might or power. β Hence we have OF. desmay and esmay, to lose power, to faint, fail, be discouraged, in a neuter sense; afterwards used actively to signify to render powerless with terror, to astonish, astound, dismay, terrify. γ The OIIG. magan is the same word with AS. magan, and E. may; see May (1). δ Cf. also Ital. smagare, formerly dismagare, to lose courage; Florio gives both spellings, and notes also the active sense 'to quell', i.e. to dismay. Der. dismay, sb.

In Gammer Gurton's Needle, we find: 'dost but dodge', i.e. thou dost but quibble; Hazlitt's Old Plays, iii. 254 (cf. p. 193). Of uncertain origin. α. The base seems to be that which appears in the Lowland Scotch dod, to jog, North Eng. dad, to shake; whence the frequentative forms seen in North Eng. dadde, duddle, to walk unsteadily, dodder, to shake, tremble, totter, as also in dodge, or dodge, to walk in a slow clumsy manner; doggie, or dodgie, to totter in walking, &c. According to Diez, this Port. word was borrowed from late ME. dold, stupid; formed from AS. dol, dull, stupid. See Dold in N.E.D.; and cf. dol. † Similarly the booby was named, also by the Portuguese. See the long article on the dodo in the Engl. Cyclopædia. Walg-vogel in Dutch means 'nauseous bird'; it seems that the sailors killed them so easily that they were surfeited of them.

Saxon. iii. 113; Doggen-ford, Kemble, Cod. Dipl. vi. 231. Hence were borrowed Du. dog, a mastiff; Swed. dogge, a mastiff; Dan. dogge, a bull-dog. Root unknown. 'The stores are very low sir, some dolly petticoats and manteaus we have, and half a dozen pair of laced shoes'; Dryden, Kind Keeper, iv. 1. 'The famous Dolly . . . who raised a fortune by finding out materials for stuffs, &c.'; Spectator, no. 283 (1712). Thus dole is a doublet of dāl (1), q. v. † The difference between dāl and dole appears to be due to the suffix; dāl is from a type daila*; and dole from a type daila*.

DOLLAR, a silver coin. (Low G.—G.) In Shak. Macb. i. 2. 62. — Low G. daler, a dollar. Adapted and borrowed from G. thaler, a dollar. β. The G. thal is cognate with E. dale. Thus dollar = dale-er. See Dale. ¶ The Du. form is daalder.

Walter Gregor, p. 5. β. The stem is dun, a familiar name for a horse, as used in the common phrase 'dun is in the mire'; as to which see Chaucer, C. T. Mancip. Prolog. i. 5; Shak. Romeo, i. 4. 41. DOT, a small mark, speck. (E.) Not in early use, and uncommon in old authors. It occurs in Johnson's Dict., and the phrase 'dotted lines' occurs in Burke's Letters (Todd). Levins (1570) has: 'A dot, obstruetorium.' Cotgrave has: 'Caillon, a dot, clot, or congealed lump.' The only other early trace I can find of it is in Palsgrave, q. v. by Halliwell, who uses dot in the sense of 'a small lump, or pat. Cf. prov. Eng. dot, a small lump, a small child. AS. dot, only in the sense of 'the head of a boil;' A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 40. Cf. DOWN (3), adv. and prep. in a descending direction. (E. and C.) The prep. down is a mere corruption, by loss of the initial, of ME. a-down, which again is for AS. of-dūne, i. e. off or from the hill. The loss of the prefix is of early date; dun (for a-dune) occurs in Layamon, 6864, in the phrase 'he dun lei' = he lay down. It will be observed that this form dun was originally an adverb, not a preposition. See Down (2), and Adown. Der. down-cast, -fall, -hearted, -hill, -right, -ward, -wards. Dunward (downward) occurs in Layamon, 13106.

The prov. G. (Altmark) dussen means 'to daze one by a blow on the head' (Danneil); cf. Low G. dusen, to be dazed by a blow on the head. Perhaps allied to Diszy and Doze.

DOWSE (2), to plunge into water; see Douse.

DOWSE (3), to extinguish. (E.) A cant term; 'douse the glim,' i. e. extinguish the light. Probably only a particular use of douse (1), to strike. Possibly suggested by dunt, to extinguish.

It also gives: 'Drab, s. (in commerce) a strong kind of cloth, cloth double milled.' Bailey (1721) has: 'Drab, Drab, cloth.' It would appear that drab was applied to the colour of undyed cloth.—F. drap, cloth.—Late L. acc. drappum, from nom. drappus, in Charlemagne's Capitularies (Brachet). Cf. Lith. drapanos, white linen. See Drape and Trap (2).

[Found very early, spelt dragman, in King Alisaunders, l. 3401; from F. dragman.]—F. dragoman, dragman.—Ital. dragomanno, an interpreter. A word of Eastern origin, introduced from Constantinople by the Crusaders, who had borrowed it from the mediæval Gk. δραγμάνος, an interpreter (Brachet).—Arab. tarjūmān (formerly tarjūmān), an interpreter, translator, dragoman; *Palmer's Pers. See Dragon. Der. dragonn-ade, a French word. ¶ Littre gives 1585 as the date of the first use of dragons, and quotes the supposition of Voltaire, that they were so named from OF. dragon, in the sense of 'standard'; but this is unsupported. The fact is rather, that they were so called because armed with fire-arms called dragons; and this is strongly supported by the use of E. dragon in the sense of a kind of carbine, as early as 1622 (N.E.D.). And these carbines were so called because they 'breathed fire,' like the fabulous dragons of old. The dragons were at first infantry soldiers, till 1784.

DRA (3), to draw off gradually. (E.) In Shak. Macb. i. 3. 18. Not found in ME. AS. drāhugēan, drāhuan, drānian, in the phr. See Dry. Der. drain, sb.; drain-age, drain-er. See Notes on Eng. Etym., p. 73.

DRA (3), the male of the duck. (E.) 'As doth the whyte doke after hir drake'; Chaucer, C. T. 3576; cf. Havelok, 1241. This ME. drake answers to *AS. draca, not found, but of the same form as AS. draca, a dragon, though the latter is merely borrowed from the L. draco (see Dragon). β. We find a similar equivalence of form in the Low G. drake, (1) a drake; (2) a kite (Bremen Wört.); Low G. drake, draak, (1) a kite; (2) a drake; (3) a meteor (Beighams); MDan. drage, (1) a dragon; (2) a drake (Kalkar). Cf. also Swed. and, a duck, and -drake, a drake (from Low G.). G. enterich, OHG. anetracho, MHG. anetrache (Schade), for anut-trakho* (Kluge); prob. for anut (AS. end) duck, and trakho, of unknown meaning, the same in form as trakho, a dragon. Three notes MSwed. drake, a dragon, a war-ship, and -drake, a drake. Levins (1570) has: 'drake, birde, anas;' and 'drake, dragon, draco.' Cf. G. drache, drachen, a dragon, a kite. γ. The *AS. draca is probably Teutonic. Perhaps connected with Icel. draka or drík, a streak; Swed. dial. drakig; Dan. dial. draget, marked (on the back) with a white stripe.

Kluge suggests comparison with G. trug-bild, a phantom. If so, the Teut. type was dræmno-, m.; from Teut. dræug, second grade of drægan-* (OHG. trægan, G. tragen), to deceive. Cf. DREDGE (1), a drag-net. (E.) Also spelt drudge. 'Drudger, one that fishes for oysters'; Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. 'Drudgers, fishers for oysters'; Kersey, ed. 1715; cf. MF. drege (prob. from E.). 'a kind of fish-net, forbidden to be used except for oysters'; Cot.

The NorthE. form is drag (see Supp. to Jamieson). It answers to an AS. form dreg* or drega* (from drag-jo-*); from AS. drag-an, to draw. See Draw. Cf. MDu. drege, 'a drag'; Ilexham. ¶ There is an AS. drag-net, a draw-net, Voc. 105. 4; but this would give drag-net; see Draw.

DREDGE (2), to sprinkle flour on meat, &c. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) 'Burnt figs drag'd [dredged] with meal and powdered sugar'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Scornful Lady, Act ii. sc. 3. 'Dredge you a dish of plovers'; id. Moody Brother, Act ii. sc. 2. To dredge is to sprinkle as in sowing drag, or mixed corn; thus Holland says that 'choler is a miscellane seed, as it were, and a dredge, made of all the passions of the mind'; Plutarch, p. 108 (K.). 'Dredge or Dreg, oats and barley mingled together'; Kersey, ed. 1715.—OF. dragie, dragie aux chevans, 'provender of divers sorts of pulse mingled together; also the coarse grain called bolymong, French-wheat, Block-wheat, or Luck-wheat'; Cot. Allied to Ital. tragea, a sugar-plum; and supposed (by Diez) to be derived from late L. tragemata. Diez quotes from Papias: 'collubia sunt apud Hebraeos, quæ nos vocamus tragēmata vel villia munuscula, ut cicer fruxim' &c.—Gk. τραγίματα, dried fruits, pl. of τράγμα, something nice to eat.—Gk. τράγειν and aor. ἐ-τράγην, to gnaw; also to eat dried fruits; allied to τράγλις, a hole, a cave (cf. DRIBBLE, to let fall in small drops. (E.) The reading dribbling in Shak. Meas. for Meas. i. 3. 2, may be an error for dribbing. Dribble is the frequentative of drub, which is a variant of drup. 'Lyke drunkardis that dribbis', i.e. drip, slaver; Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 641. Cf. Dan. dial. drible, dröble, to dribble, M Dan. drybe, to drip; Jutland dribble, to dribble. DRILL (1), to bore holes, to train soldiers. (Du.) Cotgrave explains F. trappan as 'a stone-cutter's drill, wherewith he bores little holes in marble'. Ben Jonson hints at the Dutch origin of the word in the sense of 'to train soldiers'. 'He that but saw thy curious captain's drill Would think no more of Flushing or the Brill'; Underwoods, lxii, l. 29.—MDu. drillen, or trillen, 'motitare, nutare, vacillare, ulro citroque cursitare, gyros agere, gyrate, rotare, volvere, tornare, terebrare'; Kilian; mod. Du. drillen, to drill, bore, to turn round, shake, brandish, to drill, form to arms, to turn hither and thither, to go through the manual exercise. Sewell's Dutch Dict. gives drillen, to drill, shake, brandish; met den piek drillen, to shake a pike; to exercise in the management of arms. β. The orig. sense is 'to turn round and round', whence (1) to turn men about or drill them, (2) to turn a pike about, or brandish it. Allied to MHG. drillen, to turn round (pp. gedrillen), and to Low G. droll, twisted tight. Teut. type drellan-* (pt. i. drall*), to twist; cf. AS. pearl, strict. Der. drill, sb.

DRILL (2), to sow corn in rows. (Low G.) We find an old word drill used in the sense of 'rill'. 'So does a thirsty land drink up all the dew of heaven that wets its face, and the greater shower makes no torrent, nor digs so much as a little furrow, that the drils of the water might pass into rivers, or refresh their neighbour's weariness." Bp. Taylor, vol. i. ser. 6 (R.). We also find the verb drill, to trickle. "And water'd with cool rivulets, that drill'd Along the borders;" Sandys, Ecclesiastes, c. ii. β. This verb cannot be separated from trill, used in precisely the same sense; as in 'Few drops . . . adowne it trill'd,' i.e. trickled; Spenser F. Q. ii. 12. 78. In Chaucer, C. T. 13604 (Group B, 1864), Tyrwhitt prints trilled where the Ellesmere MS. has tryled; and it is clear that trill has the same sense. It seems to be really the same word as the above, but with a sense more common in Low G. The W. Flem. indrillen means 'to drill in,' to bury grain to a slight depth in the earth (De Ho); and Berghaus notes not only the Low G. verb drillen, but drill-plog (drill-plough) as used in drill-kultuur. Trill is properly the Scand. form. See Trill (2).

DRILLING, a twilled linen or cotton fabric. (G.-L.) A corruption of G. drillick, ticking, huckaback. And the G. word is a corruption from L. trilic, stem of trilis, having or consisting of three threads.—L. tri-, from tres, three; and licum, a thrum, a thread.

DRIP, to fall in drops. (Scand.) 'Dryppe or drope, gutta, stilla, cadula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 132. 'Drypyn or drypyn, stillo, gutto;' id. 'Drypynge, or droyppynge, stillacio;' id. Drīp is a secondary weak verb, closely allied to the sb. drop, and is of Scand. origin.—Dan. dryppe, to drip; dryp, a drop; cf. Icel. dreypa, to let drop, from drauf, 2nd grade of the strong verb drápa, to drip. The Dan. dryppe represents a Tent. type drēpan-, from drup-, weak grade of dreupan-* as seen in AS. dreopan, strong vb., pp. dropan; see a-dreopan in Grein; OSax. dreopan, to drip; pt. t. drōp; OHG. trifan, G. triefen, to drip, trickle; pt. t. truff. 'Drynken and druelen;' J. Ploorman, B. x. 41. 'Thei don but druele peron;' id. x. 11; where the C-text (xii. 9) has druele. This druelen answers to AS. drēftan, to driel or curl at the nose; Voc. 161. 34. From the base drab-, whence also Drift. Cf. Low G. drabbeln, to slaver; Bremen Wörterbuch. Also Swed. drävel, foolish talk; like E. drivel, sb. Der. drivel, sb., drivell-ing, drivell-er.

Formed, with suffix -ian, from druncen, lit. drunken, pp. of drincan, to drink. ¶ Similarly, we find Swed. drunkna, to be drowned, from drucken, drunken, pp. of drieka, to drink; and Dan. drūne, to be drowned, from drucken, drunken, old pp. of drikke, to drink. See Drunken. ¶ It may be added that this will appear more plainly from the Lindisfarne MS., Luke, xii. 45; where the Lat. inubrari is translated by 'druncia vel bette se druncienig,' i.e. to drown or that he may be drunken. Cf. the numerous forms (without k) of Jutland drūne (Feilberg). See Notes on E. Etym., p. 76.

DROWSE, DROWZE, to sluggish. (E.) Formerly drowse; Milton, P. L. xi. 131; viii. 289; whence drouse, id. II Penseroso, 83. Not found (as yet) in the Mid. Eng. period. AS. drūsan, to be sluggish; 'lagu drūsade' = the lake lay sluggish; Beowulf, ed. Grein, 1660. The base drū- is a weaker grade of Tent. dreus-*, as seen in AS. drēosan, to mourn; Grein, i. 206, which is the same as AS. drēosan, to fall; id. β. So, too, OHG. trāre, to cast down the eyes, to mourn (mod. G. trauern), is related to OHG. trūreg, mournful, and to the E. dreary. See Dreary. Cf. Pomeran. druse, slumber. Der. drumzy (drumzy in Palgrave), drumzy-i-wan.

DRUB, to beat. (Arab.) In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. l. 1042. He also has the sb. drubs, id. pt. iii. c. 3. l. 209. First introduced in connexion with the East, and applied to the punishment of the bastinado. Phillips (1706) has: 'Drub, to beat the soles of the feet with the stick, a punishment used in Turkey.' Prob. from Arab. darb (zarb), a beating with a stick; from Arab. darab daraba (zaraba), he beat; Rich. Dict. p. 952 (N.E.D.). β . Ibre (in 1769) quotes Swed. drabba, to beat; with the conjecture of Spengel (1645-1714) that it is from Arab. darab, 'percutere, verberari facere.' Der. drub, sb.; drubbing.

DRUDGE, to perform menial work. (E.) Shak. has the sb. drudge, Merch. of Ven. iii. 2. 102. ME. druggen; Chaucer has 'to druge and drawe'; C. T. 1418 (A 1416). [Irish drugaire, a drudger, drudge, slave, and Irish drugaireachd, drudgery, slavery, are from E.] It answers to an AS. druggan*, not found, but regularly formed from drug, weak grade of dragan, to work, perform, endure (= Teut. dragan*, Goth. dringan, LowSc. dræt). Cf. Icel. drjúg-virkir, one who works slowly but surely; Norw. drugga, to go slowly, like one under a heavy burden (Körling). Der. drudge, sb.; drudge-ery.

DRUG, a medical ingredient. (F.) ME. droge, drugge; the pl. drugges, drugges is in Chaucer, Six-text, A 426; where the Harl. MS. has drugges, ProL i. 428. [But drugges and drugges cannot be the same word; the former is from OF. dragie, discussed s.v. Dredge (2), q.v., the latter is OF. droge, = OF. (and mod. F.) drogue, a drug; cf. Ital., Span., and Port. droga, a drug. β . Remoter origin uncertain; Diez derives it from Du. drug, dry; and Sewel's Du. Dict. has: 'Droegen, gedroogde kuyden en wortels, drugges'; but he has prob. confused the F. with the Du. word. The word may be Eastern. Körling, § 3116, suggests a Slavonic origin, viz. OSlav. drug, Pol. drogi, costly. Der. drug, drug, drug, drug.

DRUGGET, a coarse woollen cloth. (F.) 'And, coarsely clad in Norwich drugget, came'; Dryden, Mac Flecknoe, l. 33. — MF. druguet, 'a kind of stuff that's half silk, half wool'; Cot. Cf. Span. druguete. A dimin., with suffix -et, from F. drogue, (1) a drug; (2), trash, rubbish, stuff (Hamilton and Legros, French Dict.); i.e. in the latter sense. But it is probable that drogue, trash, is not the same word as drogue, a drug.

DRUID, a priest of the ancient Britons. (F. — L. — C.) 'The British Druids.' Howell, Foreign Travel, ed. 1642, sect. 10. — F. Druide, a Druid. — L. pl. Druides; Caesar, De Bello Gallico, vi. 13. Of Celtic origin. From OIrish druid, as in druid, dat. and acc. of drui, a magician, sorcerer; Irish draoi, druidh, an augur, magician; Gael. draoi, druidh, druidh, a magician, sorcerer. Origin undetermined; the attempt to connect it with Irish and Gael. darach, darag, an oak, is by no means convincing. ¶ The AS. drū, a magician, is from British (W. dryu).

DRUM, a cylindrical musical instrument. (U.) 'The drummes crie dub-a-dub'; Gascoigne, Flowers; ed. Hazlitt, vol. i. p. 83, l. 26. First found, spelt drome, in 1541 (N.E.D.). An imperfect adaptation of MDu. tromme, Du. trom, trommel, a drum; trommelen, to drum. Cf. G. trommel, a drum; esp. Strassburg drum, a drum (C. Schmidt); Dan. drum, a booming sound. Der. drum, verb; drum-head, drum-major, drum-stick. See also Thrum (2).

DRUMBLE, to be sluggish. (Scand.) Shak. has: 'look how you drumble!'; Merry Wives, iii. 3. 156. — Norw. drumla, to be half asleep; allied to drumba, drumma, to straggle, lag behind (as cattle); see Ross. Cf. Swed. drumla, to be clumsy, drummal, a blockhead (Oman).

DRUNKARD, one addicted to drinking. (E.; with F. suffix.) In the A. V., Joel i. 5; and in the Bible of 1551. Palgrave has drunkard. Formed from the base drunk- of the pp. drunken, with the F. suffix -ard, of OHG. origin, used with an intensive force. This suffix is of the same origin with E. hard; Brachet, Etym. French Dict. introd. § 196. ¶ The ME. word is dronkeleu.

DRUNKEN, DRUNK, inebriated. (E.) ME. drunken, drunken; Chaucer, C. T. 1264. AS. druncen, pp. of drincan, to drink, but often used as an adj.; Grein, i. 207; see Drink. Der. drunkenness.

DRUPE, a fleshy fruit containing a stone. (F. — L. — Gk.) A botanical term. Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. — F. drupe, a drupe, stone-fruit. — L. drūpa, an over-ripe, wrinkled olive (Pliny). — Gk. drūpa, an over-ripe olive; perhaps a contraction from, or allied to, Gk. drūperis, ripened on the tree; [a word which is frequently varied to drūperis, i.e. falling from the tree.] — Gk. drūp, a tree; and drūp, to cook, ripen. See Tree and Cook. Der. drup-ae-ous, with suffix -L. -aeus.

DRY, free from moisture. (E.) ME. drupe, OEang. Hom. i. 87, l. 12; drupe, drye, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 385 and 412; drye, Chaucer, C. T. 8775 (E 899). AS. dryge, drige, Grein, i. 207. Cf. Du. droog, dry; G. trocken, dry. Also Icel. draugr, a dry log. All from a Teut. root drug-*, to be dry; cf. AS. drīog-an, to last, endure, &c. The orig. sense may have been lasting, hard. See Drudge. Der. dry, verb; -ly, -ness; -goods, -mure, -rol, -saller; see also drought.

DRYAD, a nymph of the woods. (L. — Gk.) Milton has Dryad, P. L. ix. 387; and the pl. Dryades, Comus, 964. — L. Dryad-, stem of Dryas, a Dryad. — Gk. δρυάς, stem of δρύω, a nymph of the woods. — Gk. δρύω, a tree; cognate with E. Tree, q.v.

DUAL, consisting of two. (L.) 'This dualit . . . is founded in every creature'; T. Usk, Test of Love, b. ii. ch. 13. l. 30. — L. duālis, dual. — L. duo, two. See Two. Der. duāli-, duāli-.

DUAN, a canto. (Gaelic.) In Macpherson's Ossian; and used by Burns (The Vision). — Gael. duan, a song, canto; OIrish dūan; see Macchain.

DUB, to confer knighthood by a stroke on the shoulder. (E.) ME. dubben, Havelok, 2042. AS. dubban; 'dubbed his sunu . . . to ridere', dubbed his son knight; AS. Chron. an. 1086. β . A much-disputed word; but, apparently, of Teut. origin; if not native, it may be of Scand. origin. The statement (in N. E. D.) that there is no such Germanic verb as dubban, is hardly borne out. The Icel. dubba may be foreign; but the Teut. forms dih, dab, dob, dub, expressive of light movements, cannot all be unoriginal. Cf. Norw. dabba, to tap with the foot (Ross); F. dab; Swed. dial. dabb, a viscous clot; E. dab; Norw. dibba, to nod the head, to trip lightly (Ross); Swed. dial. dibb, to touch lightly; Dan. dobba, a float (because it bobs); Swed. dial. dobb, dubb, a float, also (as a verb) to duck or bob under; Norw. dubba, to nod (Aasen); EFries. dubbe, a blow, dubben, to strike; Low G. dobber, a buoy; G. tupfen, to dab. The OF. adobber, to dub, is therefore correctly derived by Diez from a Teut. base dub, to dab or tap. Cf. F. dub-a-dub (see Drum); evidently of imitative origin.

DUBIOUS, doubtful. (L.) In Milton, P. L. i. 104; and in Hall, Edw. IV. an. 9. § 14. — L. dubius, doubtful. — L. dubium, doubt; neut. of dubius, doubtful, moving in two directions; formed from L. duo, two. See Two. Der. dubious-ly, -ness.

DUCAL, belonging to a duke. (F. — L.) F. ducal, Cot. — Late L. ducilis, adj. — L. duc-, stem of dux, a leader; see Duke.

Cot. — Ital. ducatto, a ducat; a duchy. — Late L. ducatus, a duchy. β . So called because first coined in the duchy of Apulia (about A.D. 1140); and, after 1284, they bore the legend 'sit tibi, Christie, datus, quem tu regis, iste ducatus.' See Duchy.

DUCHESS, the wife of a duke. (F. — L.) Chaucer wrote The Book of the Duchesse. — OF. duchesse, fem. of duc, a duke; with suffix -esse = L. -issa = Gk. -issa. See Duke.

DUCK (1), a bird. (E.) ME. dok, duke; P. Plowman, B. v. 75; xvii. 62. The word duk-e means 'diver'; the final -e = AS. m. -a, f. -e, a suffix denoting the agent, as in hunt-a, a hunter. AS. duce, a duck; see Cart. Saxon., ed. Birch, ii. 162, l. 3. See below. + Dan. duk-and, a diver (bird); from duk- - dukke, to dive, and + (= G. ente), a duck; Swed. dyk-fågel, a diver (bird). See Duck (2). The short u is due to the following t, as in suck. Der. duck-ling, with double dimin. suffix -l and -ing; cf. gos-ling.

DUCK (2), to dive, bob the head down. (E.) ME. duken, douken; the pres. pt. doukand, diving, occurs in The Wars of Alexander, l. 4090; and the pp. duked in the Cursor Mundi, 23203. It answers to an AS. ducan* (pt. t. ducan*, pp. docen*), not found. + Du. duiken, to stoop, dive; Dan. duke, to duck, plunge; Swed. dyka, to dive; G. tauchen, to dive. Der. duck (1).

DUCTILE, malleable. (F. — L.) 'Soft dispositions, which ductile be'; Donne, To the Countess of Huntingdon, l. 27; and see Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 845. — F. ductile, 'easie to be hammered'; Cot. — L. ductilis, easily led; cf. ductus, pp. of ducere, to lead. See Duke. Der. ductil-ity.

DUDE, a fop, exquisite. (Low G.) Modern. — G. dude, a foolish fellow (Grimm); shortened from Low G. dueden-dop, dueden-kop, a lazy fellow; EFries. du-dop, a drowsy fellow. Cf. EFries. dudden, to be drowsy; see Dawdle.

DUDGEON (1), resentment. (F.?) 'When civil dudgeon first grew high'; Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. l. 1. The form endugine is also found; see additions to Nares. Origin wholly unknown; though the form would seem to be French.

DUDGEON (2), the haft of a dagger. (Unknown.) 'And on thy blade and dudgeon gouts of blood'; Mach. ii. 1. 46. See Clark and Wright, notes to Macbeth; Furness, notes to ditto. The evidence goes to show that some daggers were called dudgeon-hafted, which Gifford explains by saying that 'the wood was gouged out in crooked channels, like what is now, and perhaps was then, called snail-creeping'; note on Jonson's Works, v. 221. 'The root of the box-tree was also called dudgeon, apparently because it was curiously marked; 'the root [of box]. . . is dugdin and ful of work'; Holland's Pliny, b. xvi. c. 16; where the context shows the sense to be 'crisp'd damask-wise' or 'full of waving.' β. In the earliest examples, the sense seems to be 'boxwood'; at any rate, it is a material used by a cutler. A cutler speaks of 'yucry [ivory], dageon, horn, mappyl, and the toel that be-longeth to my craft'; Arnold's Chron. 1502, repr. 1811, p. 245. In the York Wills, iii. 96 (Surtees Soc.), we find in 1439, 'j dagger, cum manubrio de dageon.' 'Ronnyng, as dajoun or masere'; Prompt. Parv. p. 436. The earliest is AF. dageon, in 1380; see Riley, Memorials of London, p. 439.

DUDS, rags, poor clothes. (Scand.) ME. 'dudde, clothe, amphibulus? Prompt. Parv. Related to Icel. dúði, swaddling clothes; dúða, to swathe, wrap up. Cf. Dowdy. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 78.

DUG, a teat. (E.) In Shak. Romeo, i. 3. 26. 'Tete, pappe, or dugge'; Palsgrave. The exact original is not forthcoming; it can hardly be allied to Swed. dugga, Dan. dægge, to suckle, fondle; or to Goth. daddjan, to suckle. β. On the other hand, it corresponds to Skt. duh (for dhugh), to milk; whence dughā, a milch cow, dūhā-s, a milking.

DUGGONG, a swimming mammal, sea-cow. (Malay.) Malay dūyōng, a sea-cow; Marsden's Malay Dict. p. 138.

DULCET, sweet. (F.—L.) In Shak. Mids. N. D. ii. 1. 151; and used by Colgrave to translate OF. doucet. The spelling was refashioned after L. dulcis; cf. M. Ital. dolcetto, somewhat sweet (Florio). Formed, with dimin. suffix -et (with force of E. -ish), from OF. duls, sweet; see dols in Supp. to Godefroy. —L. dulcis, sweet. See Douceur; and see below.

DULCIMER, a musical instrument. (F.—Span.—I. and Gk.) In the Bible, A. V. Dan. iii. 5; and in Baret's Alvearie. —OF. doulemer (Roquefort); cf. doulemele in Godefroy. —Span. dulcemele, a dulcimer; so called from its sweet sound. —L. dulce melos, a sweet song; dulce is neut. of dulcis (see above); and melos = Gk. melos, for which see Melody.

DULL, stupid, foolish. (E.) ME. dul; Chaucer, C. T. 10593 (F 279). [Also as a verb; 'it dulleth me'; id. 16561 (G 1093).] In the Ancien Riwle we have 'dulle neilles', i.e. blunt nails, as a various reading of 'dulte neilles'; see Dolt. Dull also appears as ME. dilt; answering to a Teut. type dul-joz*. Closely allied to AS. dol, foolish, stupid; Grein, l. 194. Cf. Du. dol, G. toll, mad; answering to Teut. type dul-oz*. All from Teut. dul*, for duwl*, weak grade of

Der. dull, verb; dull-ly, -ness; dull-sighted, -witted; also dull-ard (with suffix as in drunk-ard, q.v.); also dol-l, q.v. DULSE, an edible species of seaweed. (C.) See Jamieson, E. D. D., and N. E. D. From Irish and Gael. dulseag, dulse. According to Macleod, it means 'water-leaft'; from Irish and Gael. duille, leaf, and uis(e), water.

DUMB, silent, unable to speak. (E.) ME. domb, dumb; Chaucer, C. T. 776 (A 774). AS. dumb, mute; Grein, i. 212. 4. The form dumb, with the orig. sense of 'stupid', is prob. allied to Goth. daubs, deaf. See further under Deaf. Der. dumb-ly, -ness; dumb-bell, -show; also dumm-y (= dumb-y). ¶ The dumb-bell exercise was called 'a ringing of the dumb bells'; which explains the name. See Spectator, no. 115, § 7.

DUMPS, melancholy, sadness. (Scand.) 'As one in doleful dumps'; Chevy Chase, later version, l. 198. The sing. is dump, somewhat rare. 'He's in a deep dump now'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Humorous Lieut. A. iv. sc. 6. Palsgrave has: 'I dump, I fall in a dumpe or musynge upon thynges.' The most closely allied word is Swed. dial, dumpa, melancholy (Rietz); which is formed as a pp. from Swed. dial, dimba, to steam, reek; cf. Dan. dump, dull, low. β. Further allied to G. dumpf, damp, Du. dampig, damp, hazy, misty, Du. dampen, to quench, extinguish, and to E. damp. Also to E. Fries. dump, heavy, moist. Cf. the phr. 'to damp one's spirits.' See Damp. Der. dump-ish, dump-ish-ly, dump-ish-ness.

DUN (2), to urge for payment. (Scand.) 'I shall be dunning thee every day'; Lord Bacon, Apophthegms, no. 288. Cf. ME. dunning, a loud noise, Prompt. Parv. p. 135. —Icel. duna, to thunder, make a hollow noise; dnyja, to rattle, make a din; koma einum dyn fyrir dyrr, to make a din before one's door, take one by surprise; Swed. dåna, to make a noise, to ring. β. These words are cognate with AS. dynian, to make a din, and AS. dun is thus related to din. See Din. Der. dun, sb.

DUNCE, a stupid person. (Proper name.) A proper name: originally in the phrase 'a Duns man.' 'A Duns man'; Wyndall, Works, p. 88; 'a great Duns man, so great a preacher'; Barnes, Works, p. 232; cf. p. 272. DUNE, a low sand-hill. (F.—Du.—C.) First in 1790. —F. dune. —MDu. dune (Du. dūn); cognate with AS. dūn, a down, of Celtic origin. See Down (2).

DUPPE, a person easily deceived. (F.) A late word. In Pope, Dunciad, iv. 502. = F. dupe, a dupe. Origin uncertain. Webster and Littré say that it is the same as the OF. name for a hoopoe, because the bird is easily caught. Cotgrave has: 'Dupe, f. a whoop, or hoop; a bird that hath on her head a great crest, or tuft of feathers, and loves ordure so well, that she nestles in it.' This word dupe is probably (like hoopoe) onomatopoeic, and imitative of the bird's cry. ¶ Cf. Bret. houperik, (1) a hoopoe, (2) a dupe. We have similar ideas in gull, goose, and booby. (Mens. iii. 1. 67, &c.), comes from that of long sufferance or long endurance of hardship. Der. dust-er, dust-y, dust-i-ness.

The orig. sense is to mislead, cause to err, whence the intransitive sense of to err, to wander aimlessly. Causal of AS. duelian (pt. t. dwal, pp. duolen) to be torpid or dull, to err, found only in the pp. geduolen (Grein); cf. ge-dwal-god, false god, and duala, error, in the Northumb. version of S. (whence also MF. embassade); orig. fem. of pp. of ambasciare, to send on a mission, from ambascia, a mission (of Celtic origin). See further under Ambassador.

EMBATTLE (1), to furnish with battlements. (F.) ME. embattelen, embattellen; Chaucer, C. T. 14866 (H 4050; Laskownske MS.). = OF. em or en (< L. in = in), prefix; and OF. bastiller, to embattle. See Battlement. ¶ 1. The simple verb battailen or battalen occurs early; the pp. battailist or battailit, i.e. embattled, occurs in Barbour's Bruce, ii. 221, iv. 134; and the sb. battailynge, an embattlement, in the same, iv. 136. 2. Obviously, these words were accommodated to the spelling of ME. battale (better bataille), a battle; and from the first a confusion with battle has been common.

EMBATTLE (2), to range in order of battle. (F.—L.) In Shak. Hen. V, iv. 2. 14. ME. embattailen; Gower, C. A. i. 221; bk. ii. 1837. = OF. embattailier, the same (Godefroy). A coined word, from F. prefix em (< L. in, in); and OF. bataille, a battle, a battalion; see Battle.

EMBER-DAYS, fast-days at four seasons of the year. (E.) A corruption of ME. ymber. 'The Wednesday Gospel in ymber weeks in Septembre monethe;' Wyclif's Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 203, cf. pp. 205, 207. 'Umbridays' (another MS. ymbr, ymbr), i.e. ember-days (or ember-weeks); Ancrer Kivle, p. 70. AS. ymbrēn, pl. ymbrēnu; as in þā fēower ymbrēnu, the four ember-days; Wulfstan, ed. Napier, p. 136, l. 17. 1. 'On þāre pentecostenes wūc to þām ymbrēne' = in Pentecost week according to the ymbrēn, i.e. in due times; rubric to Luke, viii. 40. 'On ðeum ymbrēn-fæstene' = at every ember-fast; Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 608. 2. The orig. form of the word is ymbr-ryne, and the orig. sense 'a running round,' 'circuit,' or 'cours'; compounded of AS. ymbe, ymbe, around, cognate with G. um-, L. ambi-; and ryne, a running, from rinnan, to run. See Ambi, prefix, and Run. ¶ This is the best explanation; for numerous examples and references, see symbrin in AS. Dictionary. It rightly distinguishes between MSwed. ymbadagor, borrowed from AS. and obsolete, and the Swed. tampdagor, corrupted (like G. quatember) from L. quatour tempora, the four seasons.

Leechdoms, iii. 30, l. 18. — Icel. eimyrja, embers; Dan. emmer, embers; Swed. mörja, in comp. ask-mörja, ash-embers; OIIIG. eimurja, embers; Bavarian aimern, emmeru, pl., Schmeller, i. 75. β stem type aim-uz-jön*, weak fem.; for the suffix, cf. Goth. juk-uzi (teut. juk-uz-jü), allied to juk, a yoke. The base aim- may be compared with Icel. eim-r, vapour; prov. E. ome (< AS. ām*), vapour; Dan. em, Swed. imma, steam.

EMBEZZLE, to steal sily, filch. (F.—L.) Formerly embessyll or embessell. Palsgrave's F. Dict. Spelt embesille in The Lament of Mary Magdalen, st. 39; pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 319. The earliest spellings are embesil, imbeshel, and the sense is not only to filch, but also to destroy fraudulently, as in 'the sayd boke . . . was embesheylid, or loste'; Fabian, ed. Ellis, p. 293. — AF. embessiller, to make away with; Royal Wills, p. 155 (A. D. 1397); (also AF. beseler, besiler; Notes on E. See emblaier in Godefroy, and emblaier in Littré. All these forms are from Late L. imblādāre, to sow with corn. — L. im-, for in, in prefix; and Late L. blādum (F. blé), contraction of ablādum = L. ablātum, i. e. Origin doubtful; nor is it known whether these words are allied to Icel. aptan, Swed. afnan, Dan. afnen, evening. Cf. Brugmann, i. § 980. ¶ Not connected with even, ad. Der. even-song, Chaucer, C. T. 832 (A 830); even-tide, Ancren Riwe, p. 404. = AS. æfen-tid, Grein; also even-ing, q. v.

From Teut. base fag, whence also OSax. fagian, A. fagan, to join, suit. G. fügen, to join. U. wegen (see Kluge and Franck); and cf. OHG. gi-fag, content; Goth. fulla-fah-jan, to satisfy. The same base occurs in Fair (1).

FACIES, dregs. (L.) 'I sent you of his facies there calcined;' Ben Jonson, Alchemist, ii. 1. — L. facies, dregs, pl. of fax (stem fac-); of unknown origin. Der. fec-ul-ent, in Kersey's Dict., from L. faculentus.

FAG, to drudge. (E.) 'Fag, to fail, grow weary, faint;' also, 'to beat, to bang;' Ash's Dict. 1775. 'To fag, dehecre;' Levins, to, 21, ed. 1570. Of uncertain origin; but prob. a corruption of flag, to drip; see Todd. See Flag (1). See below.

FAG-END, a remnant. (E.) 'Fag, the fringe at the end of a piece of cloth, the fringe at the end of a rope;' Ash's Dict. ed. 1775. 'Fagg (a sea-term), the fringed end of a rope;' id. 'The fag-end of the world;' Massinger, Virgin Martyr, Act. ii. sc. 3. Origin unknown. Perhaps for flag-end = loose end; see Flag (1), and Fag. Thus, in the Boken of St. Albans (1486), fol. B1, we find 'The federis at the wynges next the body be calde the flagg or the fagg federis.'

FAGGOT, FAGOT, a bundle of sticks. (F.—Scand.) In Shak. Tit. And. iii. 1. 69; 1 Hen. VI. v. 4. 55. ME. fagot, Cursor Mundi, l. 3164. — F. fagot, 'a fagot, a bundle of sticks;' Cot. Cf. Ital. fagotto, fangotto, a bundle of sticks; which was prob. borrowed from French; the F. fagot being found before 1300. Formed, with dimin. suffix -ot, from Norw. fagg, a bundle (Ross). The Norw. fagg also means a short, clumsy person; and prov. E. faggot is likewise used as a depreciatory term, often applied to children and women; whilst we also find prov. E. fudge with the precise sense of 'bundle.' The Norw. fagga, vb., means to bundle together or to cobble up, and is prob. related to fagga, to suit. See Fadge. β. I feel inclined to connect Ital. fagotto (if distinct from fagotto) with Icel. fag, an armful, as in skidar-fag, viðar-fag, an armful of fuel; fanga-knappur, a bundle of hay, an armful; from Icel. fā, to fetch, get, grasp; see Fang. ¶ The W. fagot is borrowed from E. Der. faggot, verb.

FAHRENHEIT, the name of a kind of thermometer. (G.) From the name of a Prussian physicist (1686–1736), inventor of the mercurial thermometer. (N. E. D.)

Perhaps allied to AS. feallan, to fall. See Fall. Brugmann, i. § 757. Der. fall, sb., Wint. Tale, ii. 3. 170; fail-ing; fail-ure (substituted for an earlier failer, from AF. failer, F. failir, infin. mood used substantively), used by Burke, On the Sublime, pt. iv. § 24 (R.); and see fallible, fallacy, false, fault, fault.

FAINT, weak, feeble. (F.—L.) In early use. ME. feint, seynt; King Alisaunder, 612; Gower, C. A. ii. 5; bk. iv. 118. — OF. feint, pp. of feindre, to feign; so that the orig. sense is 'feigned;' see Bartsch, Chrest. Française, p. 515, l. 3. See Feign. ¶ Cf. ME. feintise, signifying (1) faintness, (2) cowardice; Glos. to Will. of Palerne; P. Plozman, B. v. 5. Der. faint-ly, Shak. Oth. i. 1. 113; faint-ness, *Mids. Nt. FAIRY, a supernatural being. (F.—L.) ME. faerie, fairye, faury, 'enchantment;' P. Plozman, B. prol. 6; Chaucer, C. T. 6441 (D 859). [The modern use of the word is improper; the right word for the elf being fay. The mistake was made long ago; and fully established before Shakespeare's time.] — OF. faerie, enchantment. — OF. fue (F. fé), a fairy; see Fay. Der. fair-y, adj.

FAITH, belief. (F.—L.) The final -th is analogous to the E. suffix -th, as seen in truth, wealth, health, and other similar sbs. β. ME. feiþ, feith, feyth; as well as fey. The earliest example of the spelling feith is in Genesis and Exodus, i. 2187 (ab. 1250). We find feith in the Cursor Mundi, l. 3405; and fai occurs in the same poem, ll. 2354 (riming with delay), and l. 7562 (riming with nai). — OF. fei, feid, fei. — L. fidem, acc. of fides, faith, + Gk. πίστις, faith; πίστις, to persuade; πίστωβα, I trust. (✓ BIHIDH.) Allied to Bide. Brugmann, i. § 202. ¶ The assumption that OF. fei, feid was at first pronounced as feip, feib, is needless. The AF. fei appears in Phil. de Thuan, l. des Créatures, i. 244 (before 1150); I believe the -th to be a purely E. addition. Der. feith-ful, ful-ly, ful-ness, -less, -less-ly, -less-ness. From the same root are fid-el-ity, af-fi-nance, con-fide, de-fy, dis-fid-ent, per-fid-y.

Allied to fec-tere, to bend; Brugmann, i. § 529 (2). ¶ The word was really taken from the F. fauchon, and afterwards altered to falchion by the influence of the Ital. form. Der. from L. falx are also falc-on, de-falc-ate.

FALCON, a bird of prey. (F.—L.) ME. faukon, King Alisaunder, 567; faucōn, Chaucer, C. T. 10725 (F 411). — AF. faucōn, Stat. of the Realm, i. 293 (1340); OF. faucōn, ME. faulcon, 'a faukon;' Cot. — Late L. falciōnem, acc. of falciō, a falcon; so called from the hooked shape of the claws. 'Falcones dicuntur, quorum digiti pollices in pelibus intro sunt curuati;' Festus, p. 88; qu. in White and Riddle. That is, falco is derived from falc, stem of falx, a sickle; see above. The l in falcon was inserted in the 15th century.

Der. falcon-er; falcon-ry, from ME. faulconnerie 'a faulconry;' Cot. FALDSTOOL, a folding-stool. (F.—Low L.—OHG.) Now applied to a low desk at which the litany is said; but formerly to a folding-stool or portable seat. Gower has: 'That Phillis in the same throwe Was shapen into a nutte-tre . . . And, after Phillis, philberd This tre was cleped in the yerd'; C. A. ii. 30. [This is an allusion to the story of Phyllis and Demophon in Ovid, and of course does not account for the word, as it takes no notice of the last syllable.] B. From AF. philbert, a filbert; of which the pl. philbers occurs in Britton, ed. Nichols, l. 371, note 5. Short for noix de philbert, as the name is still noix de filbert in Normandy (Moisy). From the proper name Philibert. Cograve has: 'Philibert, a proper name for a man; and particularly the name of a certain Burgundian [Burgundian] saint; whereof *chaîne de S. Similarly, a filbert is called in German Lambertsnuss as if for Lambert's nut (St. Lambert's day is Sept. 17); but according to Weigand the real origin, sense of Lambertsnuss was 'nut from Lombardy'.

FILCH, to steal, pilfer. (Scand.) [Robt. of Brunne has filehid; tr. of Langtoft, p. 282; but this seems to be a different word.] Filch first appears in 1581, as a slang term; and its origin is quite uncertain. [This change of sc to es or is is common in AS.; as in æscian = æscian = æscian; mod. E. to ask and prov. E. to ax.] See flaxe in Voc. 240. 3; flaxe, id. 109. 5. 'Twa fatu, on folcise flaxan gebæte' = two vessels, vulgarly called flasks; Gregory's Dialogues, ii. 18 (Bosworth); where the L. text has 'quæ vulgo flasciones vocantur.' It find also Icel. flaska

(an old word); Dan. flask; Swed. flaska; G. flasche; OHG. flasco. β. But it is improbable that the word is really Teutonic; it seems to be rather from Late L. flasca, a flask, of uncertain origin; the deriv. flasco occurs in Gregory (as above), ab. A. D. 600. Perhaps from L. nasiculum, a little vessel (Diez). We also find W. flang, Gael. flang (from E.). Dor. flagon, q.v.

FLATTER, to coax, soothe. (F.—Scand.; or F.) ME. flateren (with one t); P. Plowman, B. xx. 109. Perhaps from (or at any rate influenced by) OF. flater (later flater), 'to flatter, soothe, smooth; . . . also to claw, stroke, clap gently'; Cot. But this would have only given a *ME. form flat-en; so that the -er is an E. addition. β. The OF. flat-er is from Icel. flát-r, flat; with the notion of making smooth. γ. But the base flat may have been of imitative origin, like flak, whence MSwed. flackra, to flatter (Ihre); Swed. dial. flaka, to caress (Rietz). Cf. ME. flacken, to move to and fro, and G. flach, flat; and note ME. flateren as a variant of flateren, Ancrén Riwe, p. 222. ¶ The sb. flattery is from OF. flaterie, F. flatterie; which, indeed, may have suggested the suffix -er.

FLATULENT, full of wind, windy. (F.—L.) In Minshew; also in Holland's Plutarch, p. 577 (R.). — MF. flatulent, 'flatulent, windy'; Cot. — Late L. flatulentus; not in Ducange, but regularly formed from the base flatu-, by analogy with temulentus, drunken. — L. flatu, a blowing, a breath. — L. flatus, pp. of flare, to blow; cognate with G. blaw. 'With . . . fethers flaut-a-flaut', i.e. showily displayed; Gascoigne, Steel Glass, 1163. Prov. E. flaut, flaut, to gad about, esp. in finery; flauty or flauty, giddy, flighty. OF. Scand. origin. Cf. Norw. flauta, to gad about; from flana, to climb, to rove about, to gad about; flana, a gad-about, flanen, adj. obtrusive, forward (of children). So also Jutland flautet, adj., as en flautet flau, a gad-about (flaunting) hussy, from a verb flaute (Kok); Jutland flante, a giddy girl, flantet, foolish (Feilberg); Dan. flane, a giddy girl, flane, to flirt. Also Swed. dial. flana, to be unsteady, to be extravagantly hilarious, flana, a flirt; whence also Swed. dial. flanka, to be unsteady, waver, hang and wave about, ramble; and the adj. and adv. flankt, loosely, flutteringly (which Gascoigne's flaut-a-flaut). Perhaps also allied to Bavarian flandern, to flutter, flaut, Schmeller, i. 792. Cf. Gk. πλάτναι, a wandering; see PLANOT.

FLAVOUR, the taste, scent. (F.—L.) Milton, Sams. Agon., 544, says of wine 'the flavor or the smell, Or taste that cheers the heart of Gods or men,' &c. He here seems to distinguish flavour from both smell and taste; but he may have meant the former. ME. flavor (= flavor); Early E. Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 87. But Wymtown has flawoure, scent, Chron. ix. 26. 107; Henryson has flawer, Moral Fables, p. 66 (N. E. D.). The word must have been modified by the influence of savour. — OF. flaur, flaur, flaur, smell. Cf. Ital. fiatore, a bad odour; answering to a Late L. acc. type flatur-em*. — L. flatus, pp. of flare, to blow. (Körting, § 3825.)

FLAW, a crack, break. (Scand.) ME. flawe, used in the sense of 'flake'; 'flawes of fyre' = flakes of fire; Allit. Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 255b. — Swed. flaga, a flaw, crack, breach; also, a flake; Norw. flaga, a piece flaked off; a place (on a tree-stem) without bark (Ross); see FLAKE. Cf. *prov. FLAWN, a kind of custard. (F.—OHG.) 'Fill ouen full of flawnes'; Tusser, Husb. § 90. st. 5. ME. flawn; 'Pastecs and flawnes'; Havelok, 644. — F. flon, OF. flawn. Cotgrave gives flans, 'flawns, custards, egg-pies; also, round plates of metall'; and flawnes, 'round plates of metall.' (Cf. Span. flawn, flawn, plate of metal; Ital. flandone, 'a kind of flawn'; Florio; Low L. flado, flato, a flawn.) — OHG. flado, a broad flat cake, flawn; MHG. vlade; G. fladen, a kind of pan-cake. β. Cf. G. kuh-fladen, a piece of cow-dung; MDu. vlade, 'a flawn'; Hexham; MF. flathe, a flawn, Wright, Vocab. i. 127; a flat fish (Prompt. Parv.). Further allied to Gk. πλατύς, broad, πλατῶνα, a dish in which cakes were baked, a platter. (See Scheler, Diez, Kluge.)

FLAX, the name of a plant. (E.) ME. flax, Chaucer, C. T. 678 (A. 676). AS. flax; G. flachs; OHG. flachs, ed. Sommer, Vestium Nomina, i. 10. — Flax; G. flachs; OHG. vlachs, flaks. β. Cf. Goth. flakta, a plaiting of the hair; it is probable that flax is from the same root; see Curtius, i. 203. If so, the root is PLEK, to weave; whence also

Gk. πλάττω, to weave, plait. Der. flax-en, where -en is an AS. adj. suffix.

FLAY, to strip off skin, slice off. (E.) Formerly spelt flea; see Rich. and Halliwell. ME. flean, pt. t. flow, pp. flain; Havelok, 2502. AS. flean (in a gloss); Bosworth. [Cotgrave gives only the dimin. flammette, 'a kind of lancet'.] —Late L. flētona, a lancet (Voc. 400. 11); shortened from flētonotum, phlebotomum, a lancet. —Gk. φλεβοτόμιον, a lancet. —Gk. φλεβό-, decl. stem of φλέω, a vein; and -τομή, and grade of τέμνω, to cut. See Phlebotomy. ¶ This pardonable abbreviation of too long a word is countenanced by Du. vlijm, G. fiete, and MIIG. fiedeme, all various corruptions of the same surgical word.

FLÉCK, a spot. (Scand.) ME. has only the verb stekken, to spot; Chaucer, C. T. 16033 (G 565). —Icel. flekk, a spot; flekka, to stain, spot; Swed. fläck, a spot; fläcka, to spot; Du. vlek, sb.; vlekken, vb.; G. flack, sb.; flecken, vb., to spot, stain, put on a patch.

Teut. type fugjoz*, adj.; from fug-, weak grade of flegan-, to fly. Cf. also Icel. fleggr, able to fly; Icel. fleggr, to make to fly, causal of flygja, to fly. See Fly (1). Der. fledge-ling.

FLEE, to escape, run away. (E.) Not the same word as fly. ME. fleen, pt. t. fleh, fleih; Cursor Mundi, 2818. [We also find the pt. t. fledde, and fly, fled; Chaucer, C. T. 2932; Havelok, 1431.] AS. fleon (pt. t. fleah). + OSax. fliohan, G. flicchen; Icel. flyja (pt. t. flá, also flyðja); Swed. fly (pt. t. flydde); Goth. fliuhan. Teut. type fliuhan-* (pt. t. flauhan); so that f is again ihl, and there was at first no connexion with the verb to fly, which was at an early date confused with it. ¶ The pt. t. fled, ME. fledde, was due to Icel. flyði, Swed. flydde (above).

FLEECE, a sheep's coat of wool. (E.) Here -ce stands for s, as often. ME. flees, Prompt. Parv. p. 166; Wyclif, Gen. xxx. 35. AS. fleas (Hosw.); earlier fleas (O. E. Texts); also (with mutation) flys, Ps. lxxi. 6 (ed. Spelman). + Du. vlies; G. fleece; MHG. vliis; cf. also G. flans, a woollen coat, MHG. vliis, a sheep-skin. Norw. fira, to titter, giggle, laugh at nothing; Aasen. Dan. dial. fira, to jeer. Also Norw. flisa, to titter; Swed. flissa, to titter. β. Another variation of this verb is Swed. flina, to titter; Swed. dial. flina, to make a wry face (Rietz).

FLEET (1), a number of ships. (E.) ME. flete, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1189; flede, Layamon, 2155. AS. fleot, a ship, Grein, i. 304. [It seems afterwards to have been used collectively.] —AS. flēotan, 'to fleet', i.e. to float, swim. + OSax. flīdan, Du. vlieten, to flow; G. fliessen, to flow; Icel. fljóta, Swed. flyta, Dan. flyde. Teut. type flietan-, pt. t. flaut, pp. flutanoz*; Idg. base plēd-*, as in Lith. plūdis, a float of a fishing-net. (✓PLEU.) Cf. Gk. πλέω, to sail; Skt. plāti, pri, to swim, float, flow. β. Hence also the more usual AS. form flota, a ship, Grein, i. 305 (=ME. flote, Havelok, 738); which is cognate with Icel. floti, (1) a raft, (2) a fleet. See Fleet (2).

FLEET (2), a creek, bay. (E.) In the place-names North-fleet, Fleet Street, &c. Fleet Street was so named from the Fleet ditch; and fleet was a name given to any shallow creek, or stream or channel of water; see E. D. D. ME. fleet, Prompt. Parv. p. 166. AS. flēot, a bay of the sea, as in seas flēot = bay of the sea; tr. of Beda, i. 34. Cf. also AS. flēote, a stream. The orig. sense was 'that which flows'; and the deriv. is from the old verb flēot, to float, flow; see above. Cf. OFries. flēt, Icel. fljót, a stream; Du. vliet, a rill, a brook.

FLEET (3), swift. (E.) In Shak. L. L. v. 2. 261. It does not seem to appear in ME., but the AS. form is flēotig (=fleet-y), Grein, i. 304. It is a derivative from the old verb to fleet, and = fleeting; see Fleet (4). Cf. Icel. fljót, fleet, swift; from the verb fljóta; see Fleet (1). Der. flēt-ly, -ness.

Teut. type flaiskos*, neut. Der. flesh, verb, K. John, v. 1. 71; flesh-ed; -less, -ly, -y, -ily, -iness.

FLÉUR-DE-LIS, flower of the lily. (F.—L.) ME. floure-de-lice, Minot's Poems (Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 131, l. 25). —OF. fleur de lis; whence also E. flower-de-luce, Winter's T. iv. 4. 127. Here lis is from the old pl. form, because there were three flowers-de-lis on the royal shield; the OF. noun, sing. was lil. —L. lilium, a lily. See Flower and Lily.

FLEXIBLE, easily bent. (F.—L.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 50; and Hoccleve, De Regim. Princ., 3358. —F. flexible, 'flexible'; Cot. —L. flexibilis, easily bent. —L. flexus, pp. of flectere, to bend. Der. flexible-ness, flexibil-y, flexibil-i-ty; from L. flexus are also flex-ion (wrongly flect-ion), -or, -ile, -ure; from the same source, circum-flex, de-flect, in-flex-ion (wrongly in-flect-ion), re-flect.

FLICKER, to flutter, waiver. (E.) ME. flickeren, to flutter; Chaucer, Troil. iv. 1221. AS. flicerian, Deut. xxxii. 11; also flicorian, Ælfric, Hom. ii. 156. β. Here flicerian is a frequentative form from the base flic-, an attenuated form of the base FLAK, to bent; the sense is 'to beat slightly and often.' γ. This is made clear by the occurrence of the stronger form flaker in the ME. flakeren, Ancrer Riwle, p. 222; of which the later form flacker occurs in Coverdale's Bible, Ezek. x. 19: 'And the cherubims flackered with their wings.' See Flag (1). ¶ The Icel. flakra, to flutter = E. flacker; Du. flickeren, to sparkle = E. flicker. Cf. Prov. Du. flik, a light blow (Molema).

FLIGHT (1), the act of flying. (E.) ME. flight, Chaucer, C. T. 190. AS. flyht, Grein, i. 306; allied to AS. flye-g, flight. Teut. type fluhitz*; from flug-, weak grade of flegan-, to fly. Der. flight-y, -iness. See Fly (1).

FLIMSY, weak, slight. (Scand.?) 'Flimsy, limber, slight'; Phillips, ed. 1706. In Pope, Prolog. to Satires, l. 94. Lit. 'like the skim on milk.' Formed by adding -y to Dan. dial. flims, flems, skim on milk; cf. Efrics. flem, flim, a film. These forms are allied to E. film. If the ending was -y (as from Efrics. flem), cf. tip-sy, bump-y, also limp-sy, given by Webster as the synonym of flimsy in the U. S. A. Der. flimsi-ness.

FLINCH, to shrink back. (F.—Teut.?) In Shak. All's Well, ii. 1. 190. —OF. flechier, flinchier, to turn aside, bend (given by Godefroy, s.v. flechier). Perhaps from OIIG. hluencan*, answering to G. lenken, to bend, turn. This G. lenken is from OIIG. hluanca, the side (Kluge); see Flank. ¶ The initial f would then be accounted for, as in flank, from OIIG. hl. See Link (1).

FLING, to throw, dart, scatter about. (Scand.) The pt. t. flang = flung, occurs in King Alisunder, 2749. Cf. These forms presuppose a strong verb fling-a*, which the E. form perhaps represents.

FLINT, a hard stone. (E.) ME. flint, Havelok, 2667. AS. flint, a rock; Numb. xx. 10. + Dan. flint; Swed. flinta; Gk. πλινθος, a brick; Brugmann, i. § 575, 704. Der. flint-y, -iness.

FLIP (2), a mixture of beer and spirit with sugar, heated. (E.) 'Eat biscuit, and drink flip;' Congreve, Love for Love, A. iii. sc. 4 (Ben). From flip (above), to beat up. Moisy (Dict. of Norman patois) spells it philippe, as if from F. Philippe; but it is borrowed from E.

FLIPPANT, pert, saucy. (Scand.) 'A most flippant tongue she had;' Chapman, All Fools, Act v. sc. 1, prose speech by Gonzano. The suffix -ant is due to the Northern E. pres. pt. in -ant; hence flippant = flippant, i.e. prattling, babbling. (Or else -ant imitates the F. pres. part., as in ramp-ant. From the base flip-, weak grade allied to Icel. flæpa, to babble, prattle; Swed. dial. flæpa, to talk nonsense (Kietz). Cf. flap, the lip. Der. flippant-ness, flippant-y.

FLIRT, to trifle in wooing. (E.) In old authors 'to mock,' or 'scoff,' and often spelt flurt; see The Two Noble Kinsmen, ed. Skeat, i. 2. 18 (and the note). The oldest sense of flirt was 'to jerk lightly away'; see N. E. D. and E. D. D. We find E. Fries. firtt, firtt, a light blow; firtje, a giddy girl. Der. firtt, sb.; firtt-alion.

From flut, weak grade of Icel. flyta (Swed. flyta, Dan. flyde), to float, flow. See FLEET (1). Cf. Icel. flyta, to hasten; flyta, to carry, cause to flit; flytusk (reflexive), to flit, remove. Der. flitt-ing, P. lvi. 8 (P. lli. version). Also flitter-mouse, i. e. a bat; see FLUTTER.

G. flick (in comp.), a patch. Perhaps allied to FLECK.

FLOAT, to swim on a liquid surface. (E.) ME. floten, flotan, flotten; [very rare, the usual form being floten (AS. flotan)]; see FLEET (4). 'A whal . . . by that bot flotte' = a whale floated by the boat; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 248. AS. flotan; as in 'an scip flotende', a ship floating; A. S. Chron., an. 1031. Cf. AS. flota, a ship (Grein); allied words to which are Icel. flota, a float, raft, whence flotan, to float to the top; Swed. flotta, a float, raft, flotta, to float; G. flot, a raft, whence flussen, to float; see also FLEET (1). Teut. type flutjan*, to float; from flut*, weak grade of flutan*, to float, whence mod. E. float. See FLEET (1). ¶ Partly confused with F. flotter (OF. floter), to float; from the same Teut. base flut*. See FLOTTA. Der. flota, sb.; float-er, -age, -ing, -ation; also flotsam, q. v.

FLOG, to beat, whip. (L.?) A late word. It occurs in Cowper's Tirocinium, l. 329; and in Swift (Taddy); also in Coles' Dict. ed. 1671, which gives: 'Flog (cant word), to whip.' Perhaps a school-boy's abbreviation from the L. Angellire, to whip, once a familiar word. See FLAGELLATE. ¶ This is paralleled by the use of Low G. flogger, as a common variant of stegel, a flail; where stegel represents L. flagellum.

FLOOD, a great flow of water. (E.) ME. flod, P. Plowman, B. vi. 326. AS. flod, Grein, i. 305. = Du. loed; Icel. flod; Swed. and Dan. flod; Goth. flōdas, a river; G. fluth. Cot. gives 'swee flosche, slave silk'; whence the E. word seems to have been borrowed. [Cf. Ital. flossin, flaccid, soft, weak; whence flossia seta, 'raveling or slave silke'; Florio. The Venetian form, according to Wedgwood, is fosso, which exactly agrees with the E. floss.] An adj. formation from OF. flocher, to form into 'flocks' or tufts. = OF. floc; see FLOCK (2).

Thus the orig. sense was to fluctuate, hover on the waves; and the form of the word is due to Flot. The word was afterwards applied to other vibratory motions, esp. to the flapping of wings; cf. Low G. fluttern, flutter, flit about, Bremen Wörterbuch, i. 431, which is closely allied to flit; cf. prov. E. flittermouse, a bat; also E. Plowman, C. xiii. 25; and the ME. sb. forfetur, forfature, Gower, C. A. ii. 153; bk. v. 780. — OF. forfai, forfet, forfait, a crime punishable by fine, a fine (Suppl. to Godfrey; cf. AF. forfeit, Laws of Will. I., § 1); also pp. of forfaire, orig. forfaire, to trespass, transgress. — Late L. forisfactum, a trespass, a fine; also pp. of forisfacere, to transgress, do amiss, lit. 'to act beyond.' — L. foris, out of doors, facere, to do. See Foreign; and see Fact. Der. forfeit, vb., -ure, -able; and cf. counter-feit.

FOREFEND, FOREFEND, to avert, forbid. (Hybrid; E. and F.) In Shaks. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 541. ME. forfenden, Wyclif, Job, xxvii. 31. An extraordinary compound, due to L. for- (as in for-bid), and fend, a familiar abbreviation of defend, just as fence (still in use) is a familiar abbreviation of defence. See For- (2) and Fence. ¶ The spelling forefend is bad.

FORGE, a smith's workshop. (F. — L.) In Gower, C. A. i. 78; bk. i. 1087; hence ME. forgen, to forge, Chaucer, C. T. 11951 (C 17). — OF. forge, a forge; whence forgier, to forge. — Folk-l. fawrga* < fawrega* (Schwan); for L. fabrica, a workshop, also a fabric. Cf. Span. forja, a forge, forjar, to forge; mod. Prov. fabreja, fawreja, to forge (Mistral). Thus forge is a doublet of fabric. Der. forge, vb., forg-er, -er-y. See further under Fabric.

FORGET, to lose remembrance of, neglect. (E.) ME. forgeten, forjeten; Chaucer, C. T. 1916 (A 1914). AS. forgetan; Grein, i. 324; also forgetan (E. F. Texts). — AS. for-, prefix; and gitan, to get. See For- (2) and Get. Cf. Du. vergeten; G. vergessen. Der. forget-ful (which has supplanted AS. forgitil): -ful-ly, -ful-ness, -forget-me-not (Palsgrave, p. 1024, l. 1).

FORGIVE, to give away, remit. (E.) ME. forgiuen (with u = v), forgiuen, forgeuen; Chaucer, C. T. 8402 (E 526). AS. forġifan; Grein, i. 323. — AS. for-, prefix; and gifan, to give. See For- (2) and Give. Cf. Du. vergeven; Swed. forgifva, to give away, forgive; G. vergeben; Goth. fragiban, to give, grant; Dan. tilgive, to forgive, pardon (with prefix til in place of for). Der. forgiv-ing, forgiv-ness.

FORGO, FOREGO, to give up. (E.) The spelling forego is as absurd as it is general; it is due to confusion with foregone, in the sense of 'gone before', from a verb forego of which the infinitive is little used. ME. forġon, Chaucer, C. T. 8047 (E 171). AS. forġan, to pass over; 'he forġan þæs huses duru' = he will pass over the door of the house; Exod. xii. 23. — AS. for-, prefix; and ġan, to go. See For- (2) and Go.

FORJUDGE, a better spelling of Forejudge (2), q. v.

FORK, a pronged instrument. (L.) ME. forke; the pl. forkis is in King Alisaunder, 1191. Chaucer has 'a forked berd' = beard, C. T. 272 (A 270). AS. for; Elfric's Homilies, i. 430. — L. furca, a fork; of uncertain origin. Der. fork, vb., -ed, -ed-ness; -y, -i-ness; also car-fax, q. v. Brugmann, i. § 605 (3). ¶ The Du. work, Icel. forkr, F. fourche (whence fourch-ette) are all from L. furca.

FORLORN, quite lost, desolate, wretched. (E.) ME. forlorn, used by Chaucer in an active sense = quite lost; C. T. 11861 (F 1557). It is the pp. of ME. forloren, to lose entirely. AS. forloren, pp. of forlōsan, to destroy, lose utterly; Grein, i. 328. — AS. for-, prefix; and lōren, pp. of lōsan, to lose, whence ME. lorn, Chaucer, C. T. 3536. Cf. Dan. forlōren, lost, used as an adj.; Swed. förlorad, pp. of förlora, to lose wholly; Du. verlorren, pp. of verlieren, to lose; G. verlorren, pp. of verlieren, to lose; Goth. fraihsan, to lose. See FOR- (2) and LOSE. Der. forlorn hope, in North's Plutarch, p. 309 (R.), or p. 372, ed. 1631; a vanguard; a military phrase borrowed from MDu. de verlorren hoop — the forlorn hope (of an army); Kilian. Cotgrave has: 'Perdu, lost, forlorn, past hope of recovery. Enfans perdus, perdition, or the forlorn hope of a camp, are commonly gentlemen of companies.' For Du. hoop, see HOPE (2).

FORM, figure, appearance, shape. (F.—L.) ME. forme, King Alisaunder, 388; whence formen, fourmen, to form, id. 5687. — OF. forme. — L. forma, shape. — ✓DHIER, to hold, maintain; cf. Skt. dhr, to bear, maintain, support; dharman, virtue, right, law, duty, character, resemblance. Brugmann, ii. § 72. Der. form, vb.; form-al, Sir T. More, Works, p. 125 f.; -al-ly, -al-ism, -al-ist, -al-ity; -al-ion, -al-ive, cf. L. formatus, pp. of formare, to form; form-con, sb.; form-ul-a, from L. formula, dimin. of forma; -ul-ar-y. Also form-er, de-form, in-form, per-form, re-form, trans-form, uni-form, &c. ¶ Form, a bench, is the same word. See F. forme in Cotgrave.

FORMER, more in front, past. (E.) First in latest text of AS. Gospels, Matt. xxi. 36 (ab. 1160). In Shak. Jul. Cas. v. 1. 80. Spenser has formerly, F. Q. ii. 12. 67. a. The word is really of secondary formation, and due to the mistake of supposing the ME. formet (now foremost) to be a single superlative instead of a double one; see this explained under FOREMOST. b. Just as ME. form-et was formed from AS. forma by adding -et to the base form, so form-er was made by adding -er to the same base; hence form-er is a comparative made from the old superlative for-m-a. Cf. L. pri-mus, 1st. y. We may therefore resolve for-m-er into for- (—for-), -m-, superlative suffix, and -er, comparative suffix. Der. former-ly.

FORMIC, pertaining to ants. (L.) First in 1671; chiefly used of 'formic acid.' Short for 'formic-acid' — L. formica, an ant. Brugmann, i. § 413 (8). Der. choro-form.

FORMIDABLE, causing fear. (F.—L.) In Milton, P. L. ii. 649. Fisher has formidable; Works (E. E. T. S.); Ps. 38, p. 53, l. 27. — F. formidable, 'fearful'; Cot. — L. formidabilis, terrible. — L. formidare, to dread; formido, fear. Der. formidab-ly, formidable-ness.

FORMULA, a prescribed form. (L.) In Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. — L. formula, dimin. of forma, a form; see FORM. Der. formul-ate, -or-y.

FORNICATE, to commit lewdness. (L.) The E. verb fornicate is of late use, appearing in the Works of Bp. Hall (K.); and first in 1552. It was certainly developed from the sls. fornication and fornicator, both in early use. Chaucer has fornication, C. T. 6886 (1) 1302; and fornicator is in P. Plowman, C. iii. 191 (footnote). These are, respectively, OF. fornication and fornicateur; Cot. — L. fornicatus, pp. of fornicare, to seek a brothel. — L. fornic-, base of fornix (1) a vault, an arch, (2) a brothel. Perhaps allied to FURNACE; cf. OL. fornus, L. furnus, an oven (of vaulted shape). Der. fornication, fornicat-or, explained above.

FORSAKE, to give up, neglect. (E.) ME. forsaken, Chaucer, C. T. 14227 (B 3437). AS. forsacan, Alfred's tr. of Orosius, i. 12, sect. 3. The orig. sense seems to be 'to contend strongly against,' or 'oppose.' AS. for-, intensive prefix; and sacan, to contend, Exod. ii. 13. b. This verb sacan is a strong verb, cognate with Goth. sakan, to strive, dispute; and is represented in E. by the derived sb. sake. Cf. Dan. forsage, to forsake; Swed. försaka; Du. verzaaken. See FOR- (2) and SAKE.

FORSOOTH, in truth, verily. (E.) ME. for sothe — for the truth, verily; P. Plowman, B. iv. 2. — AS. for, for; and sōð, dat. of sōð, truth. See SCOTH.

FORSWEAR, to deny on oath, esp. falsely. (E.) ME. forsweren, Prompt. Parv. p. 173; earlier forswerien, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 13, l. 11. AS. forswarian; Grein, i. 332. — AS. for-, prefix; and swerien, to swear. See FOR- (2) and SWEAR.

FORT, a stronghold. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, i. 4. 28. — OF. fort, 'a fort, hold'; Cot. — Late L. fortis (domus), strong (house). — L. fortis, strong. See FORO. Der. fort-al-ice, q. v.; fort-if-y, q. v.; fort-i-land, q. v.; fort-ress, q. v. From L. fortis we have also Ital. forte, loud (in music), with its superl. fortissimo.

From ME. fourten = fourteen; and niht, old pl. = nights. The AS. form was feowerigne niht; Laws of Ine, § 55. b. Similarly, we have sevenight = seven night; the phr. seofon niht (= a week) occurs in Caedmon, ed. Grein, l. 1349. It was usual to reckon by nights and winters, not by days and years; see Tacitus, Germania, c. xi. Der. fortnight-ly.

T. 2689 (A 2687).—OF. fondrer, chiefly in the comp. afondrer (obsolete) and effondrer, to fall in (still in use), as well as in the sb. fondrière, a place to founder in, a slough, bog; see fond in Burguy, and fondrière in Hatzfeld. The sense seems to have been 'to sink in', and the deriv. is from F. fond, the bottom of anything.—L. fundus, the bottom; see Found (1). ¶ The form of the OF. verb should rather have been fonder; the r is intercalated, as in chavure = chavre, hemp, from L. cannabis; and may have been due to the influence of OF. fondre, to melt; see Found (2). We have similar instances in E. part-r-idge, r-essure, cart-r-idge, &c.

FOUNDLING, a deserted child. (E.) ME. fundeling, Will. of Palerne, 481; fundling, King Horn, 218.—AS. fund, weak grade of fundan, to find; and -ling = -ling, double dimin. suffix. + Du. vondeling; similarly formed. See Find.

FOUR, twice two. (E.) ME. fewer, fouer, four, four, Layamon, 25, 194, 1902, 2092, 25398. Chaucer adds a final e, and treats it as a pl. adj. 'With four whiche holes in the trays' C. Thus it is from Aug*, weak grade of Teut. Augan*, to fly. See Fugleman and Fly. Brugmann, i. § 491. Der. foul-er = ME. fouler, Wyclif, Prov. vi. 5; foul-ing-piece.

We also find Icel. fau, Goth. fauhā, fem., a vixen; Tent. type fukā*. Both from a base fukh-*. A suggested connexion with Skt. puchkhā, 'tail', is doubtful. Der. fox-hound, fox-y; also fox-glove, a flower = AS. foxes glōfa, Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 327 (cf. Norw. revkandke = foxglove, from rev, a fox, also Norw. revbjolla (fox-bell), a foxglove; and prov. E. fox-fingers, a fox-glove). And see vix-en.

'Hoping . . . to give you a friendly foy,' Howell, Letters, vol. ii. let. 12 (1634).—MDu. foy (Du. foij, [a]) 'banquet given by one at his parting from his friends'; Hexham. Prob. from F. voie, a way, journey; from L. via, a way; as suggested by Kilian. ¶ But Franck derives it from F. foi, from L. acc. fidem; because Late L. fidē occurs with the sense of 'payment.'

FRACAS, an uproar. (F.—Ital.—L.) Not in Johnson; borrowed from mod. F. fracas, a crash, din.—F. fracasser, to shatter; borrowed from Ital. in 15th cent. (Hatzfeld).—Ital. francassare, to break in pieces; whence fracasso, a crash.—Ital. fra-, prefix, from fra, prep. amongst, short for L. infra, within; and cassare, to break. Imitated (or translated) from L. interrumpere, to break in amongst, destroy (Dier). The vb. cassare is from L. quassare, to shatter, intensive of quater, to shake. See Quash.

FRACTIOUS, peevish. (E.; partly F.—L.) Not found in early literature; it is given in Todd's Johnson, without a quotation. A prov. E. word, fratchous, fratchious, as if from the North. E. fratch, to squabble, quarrel, clash with another; see E. D. D. Cf. ME. frachen, to creak as a cart; 'Frachkyne, as newe cartys'; Prompt. Parv. p. 175. Of imitative origin. But it also occurs (in 1725) in the sense of 'refractory,' as if formed from fraction, in the (obsolete) sense of 'dissension'; see N. E. D. See Fraction (above).

The older form is freil, whence freil by dissimilation. figellum, a whip; but also a vine-shoot, whence baskets for grapes could conveniently be made. ¶ Verified by observing that both freil and figellum had the peculiar sense of a certain measure of wax; thus Godefroy has 'quatre seaus de chandele de cire'; and Duange, s.v. figellum, has 'unum figellum cere, quorum sex debent ponierare libram'. Cf. GK. φραγέλιον, for figellum, in John ii. 15 (Atheneum, Mar. 9, 1901).

Apparently an altered spelling of OF. frēt, the freight of a ship, also the hire that's paid for a ship; Cot. —OHG. frēht, earnings, hire (supposed to be the same word as G. fracht, a cargo). β. The OHG. frēht is thought to represent an OHG. type fra-ahhtiz*; from fra-, prefix (see FRET (1)), and ahhtiz* > AS. æht, acquisition, property, from agan, to own. See OWN (1). Der. freight, vb., freight-are.

Contracted from fra-etan*, as is clearly shown by the Gothic form; from Teut. fra-, intensive prefix, and etan, to eat. — Swed. frita, to corrode; Du. vreten (ver-eten); G. fressen (ver-essen); Goth. fraitan, from fra-, intensive prefix, and itan, to eat. See FOR (2) and EAT. Der. fret-ful, Shak. 2 Hen. Plowman, A. ii. 11. — OF. fretter, to adorn; from frete, an (interlaced) fret (in heraldry, F. frette). See FRET (3). ¶ It can hardly have been influenced by AS. frætuan, to adorn, as this would become ME. frætan, frætwen; see Matt. xii. 44 (AS. version). Der. fret-work.

FRET (3), a kind of grating. (F. — L. or G.). A term in heraldry, meaning 'a bearing composed of bars crossed and interlaced.' See explanation in Minshew, ed. 1627. Kersey, ed. 1715, has: 'in heraldry, a bearing wherein several lines run crossing one another.' — OF. frete, F. frette, a fret. Cotgrave gives 'frette, fretty, a term of blazon [heraldry].' According to Diez, frettes, pl., means an iron grating. Roquefort gives: 'fretter, to cross, interlace.' Cf. Span. fretes, 'frets, narrow bands of a shield, a term in heraldry' (Meadows); from a sing. frete. β. Of doubtful origin. According to Diez, from a Late L. type ferritta*; from L. ferrium, iron; cf. Ital. ferriata, a grate of iron (Florio). Another suggestion (also doubtful) is to derive it from OSax. feter-, in feter-ös, pl., fetters, AS. feter, a fetter. See Körtling, §§ 3700, 3715. Der. fret-ly.

FRET (4), a stop on a musical instrument. (F. — L.). In Shak. Tam. Shrew, ii. 150. A fret was a stop such as is seen on a guitar, to regulate the fingering; formed by thin pieces of metal or wires running like bars across the neck of the instrument; see Levins. I take it to be a particular use of OF. frete, a ferrule; or 'the iron band or hoop that keeps a wooden tool from riving;' Cot. Cf. Ital. ferretti, little irons, tags for points (Florio). Perhaps the same word as the above; but this is doubtful.

'To fribble away is to waste foolishly and triflingly.' — W. Flemish fribbelen, wirbelen, to rub between the finger and thumb (as a thread), to roll together by rubbing (De Ro); cf. Low G. wirbelen, to rub between the fingers, to rub away. (Hence, to twiddle, trifle.) Frequentative of Du. Of unknown origin (Brachet). ¶ Perhaps a derivative of frigare, to fry; with c inserted by a fancied connexion with fricare, to rub; cf. Körtling, § 3990. We once had fricasy in the sense of rubbing; as in 'fricasyes or rubbings;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 32.

FRICITION, rubbing, attrition. (F. — L.). 'Hard and vehement friction;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxviii. c. 4. — F. friction, a friction, or friction; Cot. — L. frictiōnem, acc. of frictio, a rubbing. — L. fric-

FRIEZE (1), a coarse woollen cloth. (F. — Du.). Palsgrave (1530) has: 'Fryse, rough cloth, drap frise.' Cf. 'a gowne of gene frise,' in 1418; Fifty E. E. Wills, ed. Furnivall, p. 37, l. 1. 'Panni lanei de Frise;' Earl of Derby's Expeditions, 1390–3, p. 280, l. 25. He also gives drap de frise as an equivalent expression; lit. cloth of Friesland. — Du. Vriesland, Friesland; Vries, a Frieslander. ¶ The ME. Frise, meaning 'Friesland,' occurs in the Roman of the Rose, 1003. Similarly, the term 'cheval de Frise' means 'horse of Friesland,' because there first used in defensive warfare.

FRIEZE (2), part of the entablature of a column. (F. — L.). In Shak. Macb. i. 6. 6. — MF. frize ' (in architecture) the broad and flat band, or member, that's next below the cornish [cornice], or between it and the architrave; called also by our workmen the frize;' Cot. Cf. Span. friso, a frieze, Ital. fregio, 'a fringe, lace, border, ornament, or garnishment;' Florio. Whether F. frise is from Ital. fregio is not clear. The source is L. Phrygium (opu), Phrygian work; cf. Phrygium chlamydem, embroidered cloak. Att. iii. 484.

FRIGATE, a large ship. (F. — Ital.). In Cotgrave; spelt frigat in Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 665 (last line). — MF. freigate, 'a frigate, a swift pinnace;' Cot. — Ital. fregata, 'a frigate, a spiall ship;' Florio. ¶ Of uncertain origin; Diez supposes it to stand for fargata*, a supposed contracted form of fabricata, i.e. constructed, from fabricare, to build; but this explanation is not now accepted. Der. frigat-oon (Ital. fregatone), frigatate-bird.

FRIGHT, terror. (F.). ME. frýgt; Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 948. It stands for fyrt, by the shifting of r so common in English, as in bride, bird, brimstone, &c. (ONorthumb. fyrrhto, Matt. xxviii. 4; AS. fyrrhto, fyrrhta, fright; Grein, i. 362. Cf. fyrrht, timid; fyrrhtian, to terrify. — OSax. forhta, fright; Goth. faurhtei, fright; faurhtjan, to fear; G. furcht, OHG. forhta, fororta, forakta, fright; G. furchten, to fear. Allied to OSax. for h, OHG. forakta, Goth. faurhts, timid, fearful. Der. fríght, verb (later form fríght-en); Shak. uses the form fríght only; fríght-ful, Rich. III. iv. 4. 169; ful-ly, ful-ness.

FRIGID, cold, chilly. (L.). 'The frigid region;' Chapman, The Ball, A. iv. sc. 2 (Lamont). Frīgidity is in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 1. § 4. — L. frigidus, cold. — L. frīgēre, to be cold. — L. frigus, sb. cold. — Gk. ψύχος, cold; see Brugmann, i. § 875. Der. frigid-ly, -ness, -i-ty.

FRILL, a ruffle on a shirt. (Low G.). In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. The N.E.D. quotes 'that can fril and paint herself' (1574); and 'their flaunting ruffles, their borrowed frilles' (1591). Of Teutonic (prob. Low G.) origin; but insufficiently recorded. Represented by W. Flem. frul, frulle, a wrinkled plait, wrinkled fold in a small shroud or band; De Bo cites 'frullen round the bottom of a dress; and 'sleeves with frullen.' Another trace of it occurs in Swed. dial. fräll, froll, a wrinkled or curled strip, as on a woman's cap, whence fryllig, wrinkled. This points to a Teut. frulle*, a frill, whence a verb fryllan*; so that the E. form frill appears to be verbal.

FRINGE, a border of loose threads. (F. — L.). Palsgrave has: 'Fring, frenge.' Chaucer has frenges, pl.; Ho. of Fame, iii. 228. — OF. frenge, fringe (Supp. to Godefroy); F. frange. Cot. has: 'Frangé, fringe.' The Wallachian form (according to Cibac) is frimbie, which stands for fimbrie*, by a transposition of r, for greater ease of pronunciation; cf. F. brébis from L. verrucem. — L. fimbria, fringe; chiefly in the pl. fimbriae, curled ends of threads, fibres. Brugmann, i. § 875. See Fibre. Der. fringe, verb, fringed, Temp. i. 2. 408; fring-y.

FRIPPERY, worn out clothes, trifles. (F. — L.). 'Some frippery to hide nakedness;' Ford, Fancies Chaste and Noble, A. i. sc. 1 (R.).

Shak. has it in the sense of an old-clothes' shop; Temp. iv. 225. = MF. fripierie, 'a friperie, broker's shop, street of brokers, or of frippers'; Cot. = MF. fripier, 'a fripper, or broker; a mender or trimmer up of old garments, and a seller of them so mended'; id. = OF. frappe (also serpe, felpe), frayed out fringe, rag, old clothes (Godefroy). Prob. from L. fibra, a fibre; Körtling, § 3724.

'Fresshe, gorgeous, gay, frisque, Palsgrave, p. 313; Walloon frisque, a gay girl (Sigart). = OHG. frisc, G. frisch, fresh, brisk, lively; see FRESH. Cf. Norm. dial. frisquet, frisky (whence E. frisky); Moisy. Der. frisk-y, equivalent to the old adj. frisk; frisk-i-ly, i-ness; frisk-er, a printer's term for a light frame often in motion.

FRITH (1), an enclosure, forest, wood. (E.) It occurs as a place-name in Chapel-le-Frith, Derbyshire, and is common in Kent in the names of woods; but is obsolete. Drayton has: 'Both in the ufty frith and in the mossy fell', Polyolbion, song 17. ME. frith, peace, Layamon, l. 2549; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 90; also in the sense of enclosed land, enclosure, park for hunting, forest, wood; thus in Layamon, 1432, where the older MS. speaks of hunting in the king's frith [frith], the later MS. speaks of hunting in the king's park [parc]. See numerous examples in Miltner, and cf. AS. frith-gard, an enclosed space, lit. 'peace-yard' or 'safety-yard', for which see Thorpe, Anc. Laws, ii. 298; also MSwed. fridgard, an enclosure for animals (Ihre). AS. frith, peace; freob, freobu, fridu, peace, security, asylum; Grein, i. 343, 347, 348. + Icel. frithr, peace, security, personal security; Dan. fred; Swed. fred, MSwed. frid. Cf. Du. rede, peace, quiet; G. frieden. Teut. type frithuz*. From frith*, base of fri-juz*, free; see FREE. ¶ The ME. frith sometimes means 'wooded country'; this may be a different word; viz. from AS. gefrýðe (Birch, Cart. Sax. iii. 120). Borrowed forms are W. fridd, park, forest; Irish frith, a wild mountainous place; Gael. frith, a forest for deer.

FRITH (2), FIRTH, an estuary. (Scand.) ME. frith, Barbour's Bruce, xvi. 542, 547. = Icel. frithr, pl. frithir, a firth, bay; Dan. ford; Swed. ford. Teut. type, ferthuz*; Noreen, § 139. Allied to L. fortus, a haven; see FORD. (Not connected with L. frētum.)

FRITILLARY, a genus of lilaceous plants. (L.) In Phillips, d. 1706. Called Fretellaria in Bacon, Essay 46 (Of Gardens). So called because chequered markings on the corolla were associated with a frutillus, which (according to Gerard) was by some supposed to mean a chessboard. Englished from Late L. frutillaria, coined from L. frutillus, a dice-box.

FRITTER (1), a kind of pancake. (F. — L.) Spelt frytours in Prompt. Parv. Cotgrave has: 'Friteau, a fritter.' But the E. word after answers to OF. friture, a frying, a kind of fried fish. Both ritena and friture are related to OF. frit, fried. = L. frictus, fried, pp. of frigere, to fry. See FRY (1). Der. fritter, vb., to reduce to slices, waste.

FRITTER (2), a fragment. (F. — L.) 'One that makes fritters of English'; Merry Wives, v. 5. 151 [but this may belong to the word above]. Johnson has: 'Fritter, a fragment, a small piece'; but its examples from Bacon and Butler are wrong, as the reading is litters in both. Pope has the verb fritter, to break into fragments, wice; see Duncian, i. 278, iv. 56. = OF. freture, fraiture, a fracture, a fragment (Godefroy). = L. fractura, a breaking; from fract-, pp. tem of frangere, to break. See FRACTURE, BREAK.

FRIVOLOUS, trifling. (L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, v. 1. 28. Cotgrave translates F. frivole by 'frivolous, vain.' = L. frivolus, silly, trifling; with change of L. -us to E. -ous, as in abstemious, arduous, &c. The orig. sense of frivolous seems to have been 'rubbed away'; also applied to refuse, broken sherds, &c. = Frivola sunt propter uasa utilla quassa; Festus. = L. fruire, fricere, to rub; see FRICTION. Der. frivolous-ly, -ness; also frivol-i-ty, from F. frivolité.

FRIZ, FRIZZ, to curl, render rough. (F. — Du.) More often used in the frequentative form frizzle. = Maccenas, if I meete with hee without my frized top; Drant, tr. of Horace, Epist. i. 1. 94 Lat. text). 'Her haire frized short'; Pepys, Diary, Nov. 22, 1660. = MF. frizer, 'to fizzle, criske, curl'; Cot. B. The orig. sense perhaps was to roughen the nap of a cloth, to make it look like frieze. This is rendered probable by Span. frisar, to fizzle, to raise the nap in a frieze; from Span. frisa, frieze. = OF. frize, 'the cloth called frize'; Cot. Cf. MDu. vrissen [from F. friser], 'to fizzle cloth'; Texham. See FRISE (1). Der. frizz-le.

FROG (1), a small amphibious animal. (E.) ME. frogge, Rob. of Glouc. p. 69, l. 1562; pl. fruggen, O. E. Homilies, i. 51, l. 30. AS. froga (pl. froggan), and frax (pl. fraxas); Ps. lxxvii. 50. Of these, frax = fracs* = frasc*, cognate with Icel. frakr, Du. vorsch, G. frisch. β. The ME. forms are various; we find froke, frosche, frash, fraske, and frogge, all in Prompt. Parv. p. 180.

FROG (2), a horny substance in a horse's foot. (E. 1) a. The frog of a horse's foot is shaped like a fork, and I suspect it to be a corruption of fork, q.v. Cf. F. fourchette, 'a fork'; (vct.) a frush or frog; Hamilton. β. On the other hand, it was certainly understood as being named after a frug (though it is hard to see why), because it was also called a frush, which much resembles frash, a ME. form of frog; see FROG (1); though this might also be a substitute for F. fourche, a fork, and this for F. fourchette. 'Frush of frog', the tender part of a horse's hoof, next the heel; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.

FROLIC, adj., sportive, gay, merry. (Du.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 394. Gascoigne speaks of a 'fraliche fauour' = a merry look; Fruits of Warre, st. 40. It seems to have been one of the rather numerous words imported from Dutch in the reign of Elizabeth. = MDu. vrolick, 'frolic, merrie'; Hexham; Du. wrolijk, frolic, merry, gay. + G. fröhlich, merry. β. Formed by help of the suffix -lijk (= E. -like, -ly) from the base wro, orig. an adj. with the sense of 'merry', found in OSax. fröh, OFries. frō, and preserved in mod. Similarly, gammer is a familiar name for an old woman, as in the old play of 'Gammer Gurton's Needle,' in which 'gaffer vicar' also occurs; A. v. sc. 2. The words are corruptions of granfather and grammer, which are the West of England forms of grandfather and grandmother; see E. D. D.

First in 1496; Palsgrave has: 'Gayne or gettyng,' p. 224; and 'I gayne, I wyne,' p. 559.—OF. gain, m., F. gagne, f. sb.; from OF. gaigner, F. gagner, to gain; see Gain (2) below. ¶ It displaced ME. gain, advantage, which was of Scand. origin; from Icel. gagn, gain, advantage; Swed. gagn, Dan. gavn. Allied to the (obsolete) ME. verb gainen, to profit, be of use, avail, gen. used impersonally; see Chaucer, C. T. 1178 (A 1176); this answers to Icel. and Swed. gagna, to encounter, to suit. Der. gain-ful, gain-ful-ly, gain-ful-ness, gain-less, gain-less-ness.

GAIN (2), to acquire, get, win. (F.—Teut.) Not in early use. 'Yea, though he gaine and cram his purse with cronies;' Gascoigne, Fruits of Warre, st. 69. Again, he has just above, in st. 66: 'To get a gaine by any trade or kinde.' See Gain (1). [This verb superseded the old use of the ME. gainen, to profit.] β. The etymology of F. gagner, OF. gaigner (Colgrave), gaignier, gaignier (Burguy)—Ital. guadagnare, is from the OHG. weidenen (for weidin-jan*), to pasture, which was the orig. sense, and is still preserved in the F. sb. gagnage, pasture, pasture-land.—OHG. weida (G. weide), pasture, pasture-ground; cf. MHG. weiden, to pasture, hunt.—Icel. veidr, hunting, fishing, the chase; veida, to catch, to hunt; AS. wād, a hunt; Grein, ii. 636. Cf. L. uicari, to hunt. GAINSBAY, to speak against. (Scand. and E.) In the A. V. Iuke, xxi. 15. ME. geinserein, a rare word. 'That thei not sein-seye my sonde'—that they may not gainsay my message; Cursor Mundi, 5769 (Trinity MS.). The Cotton MS. reads: 'þat þai nocht sai agains mi said.' β. The latter part of the word is E. say, q. v. The prefix is rather the Icel. gagn, against, than the AS. gegn, against, as occurring in the sb. gegnwude, a speech against anything. The latter is better known in the comp. ongagn, ongian, signifying again or against. See Again. Der. gainsay-er, A. V. Titus, i. 9; gainsaying, A. V. Acts, x. 29.

Marked by Brachet as 'of unknown origin.' β. However, the form of the word shows it to be of Teutonic origin; and prob. from the same source as MHG. wester, a child's chrisom-cloth (G. wester-hemd) and the Goth. wa-til, clothing; cf. Skt. wastra, a cloth, garment; see Vesture, Vest. But see Körtling, § 10014.

GALA, pomp, festivity. (F.—Ital.—OIlg.) Chiefly in the comp. 'a gala-day' or 'a gala-dress.' Modern; not in Johnson. Cf. Icel. gala, a breeze, fall-gala, a breeze from the fells. β. The Icel. galinn, furious, is from gala, to sing, enchant. Cf. F. galerne, a north-west wind.

F. β. Galant is the pres. part. of OF. galer, to rejoice; Cotgrave has 'galer le bon temps, to make merry, to pass the time pleasantly'. - OF. gale, show, mirth, festivity; the same word as Ital. Span. and Port. gala, ornament, festive attire. γ. Der. gallant; sb., whence also gallant, vb.; gallant-ly, gallant-ness; also gallant-ry (Spectator, no. 4) from MF. gallanterie, 'gallantness'; Cot. Also see gala, gall-on.

GALLIARD, a lively dance. (F. - G.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 3. 127, 137. 'Damsyng of galaryds'; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, bk. ii. c. 33. - F. gallarde, fem. of gallard, lively; cf. galop gallard, 'the galliard'; Cot. Span. gallarda [in which ll is pronounced as ly], a kind of lively Spanish dance; Span. gallarda, pleasant, gay, lively. β. Of uncertain origin; Dicx rejects a connexion with gala and gallant (Span. galante) on account of the double l and the F. form gallard. The OF. gallard meant 'valiant' or 'bold'; perhaps of Celtic origin. Cf. Bret. galloud, power, galloudek, strong; Corn. galludoc, able; Irish and Gael. galach, valiant, brave; W. gallu, to be able. Cf. Lith. gallu, I am able (Thurneysen).

GALLIGASKINS, large hose or trousers. (F. - Ital. - L.) A Cotgrave has: 'Garguesques, a fashion of strait Venetians without cod-peccus.' Also: 'Gregarques, slops, gregs, galligaskins, Venetians.' Also: 'Gregar, wide slops, gregs, galligaskins, Venetians, great Gascon or Spanish hose.' Also: 'Gregarque, the same as Gregois, Grecian, Greekish.' β. Here it is clear that Garguesques is a corruption of Gregarques; that Gregarques originally meant Greekish; and that Gregar (whence obs. E. gregs) is a mere contraction of Gregarque. γ. And further, Gregarque is borrowed from Ital. Grechesco, (Greekish, a form given by Florio; which is derived with suffix -esco = E. -ish) from Ital. Greco, Greek. - L. Graecus, Greek. δ. Finally, it seems probable that galligaskin is nothing but a derivative of Ital. Grechesco, a name given (as shown by the evidence) to a particular kind of hose or breeches originally worn at Venice. The corruption seems to have been due to a mistaken notion on the part of some of the wearers of galligaskins, that they came, not from Venice, but from Gascony. ¶ This suggestion is due to Wedgwood; it would seem that galligaskins = garigaskins < garguesques; where the suffix -an is the same as in Grecian, &c. The word was also influenced by E. galley; they were thought to be 'like shipmen's hose'; N. E. D.

GALLINAUFREY, a hodge-podge, a ragout. (F.) Robinson, in his tr. of More's Utopia, has: 'a tragical comely or gallymaufrey;' ed. Arber, p. 64. - F. gallinaufrey a hodge-podge; spelt calmaufrey in the 14th cent. (Hatzfeld). Of unknown origin.

GALLINACEOUS, pertaining to a certain order of birds. (L.) Modern. Englished from L. gallinaceus, belonging to poultry. Formed from L. gallina, a hen. - L. gallus, a cock.

GALLIOT, a small galley. (F. - Late L.) ME. galiote, Minot's Poems, Expedition of Edw. III to Brabant, l. 81 (Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 129). - OF. galiote, 'a galliot'; Cot. - Late L. galenia, a small galley; dimin. of galea, a galley. Cf. Ital. galeotta, a galliot. See Galley.

GALLIOT, a small glazed earthen pot. (F. and E.) In Beaum. and Fletcher, Nice Valour, iii. 1. 43. Similarly earthen tiles were called galley-tiles. Wedgwood (ed. 1872) quotes from Stow: 'About the year 1570, I. Andries and I. Janson, potters, came from Antwerp and settled in Norwich, where they followed their trade, making galley-tiles and apothecaries vessels.' [Gallipot]. Apparently so called because at first brought over in galley. Cf. galley-halfpenny. See N. E. D. Phillips, ed. 1706, says that the galley-men came in galley from Genoa, 'landed their goods at a place in Thames-street nam'd galley-key, and trailed with their own silver small coin call'd galley-halfpenny'. From Galley and Pot.

GALLON, a measure holding 4 quarts. (F.) ME. galon, galun, galoun; P. Plowman, B. v. 224, 343; Chaucer, C. T. 16973 (H 24). Spelt galun in King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1123. - OF. galion, galon, galon, galion (Godefroy); Late L. galina (also galio), an English measure for liquids; 1 buccage. β. The suffix -on is augmentative; and a shorter form appears in mod. F. jale, a bowl, which evidently stands for an older form gale*, just as jalon is for galon. Thus the sense is 'a large bowl'. Of unknown origin.

GALLOON, a kind of lace or narrow ribbon. (F. - OHG.) The compound galloon-lace occurs in Beaum. and Fletcher, Philaster, v. 4. 46. Cotgrave has: 'Galoon, galloon-lace.' - F. galon, as in Cotgrave (like E. balloon from F. balloon); cf. Span. galon, galloon, lace; orig. any kind of finery for festive occasions. - OF. gale, Span. gala, parade, finery, court-dress; the suffix -on being augmentative, as in balloons. See Gallant, Gala.

GALLOP, to ride very fast. (F. - Teut.) 'Styll he galoped forth right'; Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 140. We also find the form wallope, in the Romance of Partenay, ed. Skeat, 4827 (and note on p. 259); and the pres. pt. walopande, Morte Arthur, ed. Brock, 2827. - OF. galoper, to gallop; of which an older form must have been waloper, as shown by the derivative walopin in Roquefort, spelt galopin in mod. F. The sb. galop also appears as walop in OFrench (Bartsch); and may be the original whence the verb was derived. The sense was perhaps 'Celtic running'. - OSax. Wala, a Celt; and Wlapan, to run, to leap; see Walnut and Leap. The Norw. walkopp, a gallop (Aasen); lit. 'a bounding over a field', or 'field-hop', would account for the word even better; but is merely an adaptation from Teutonic. Der. gallop-ade.

GALLOW, to terrify. (E.) In Shak. King Lear, iii. 2. 44. Prov. E. (Somerset). gaily. ME. galwen. AS. galwan, in the comp.

agalwan, to astonish; 'ja wear' ic agelwed' = then was I astonished; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxiv. § 5; lib. iii. pr. 10.

GALLOWAY, a nag, pony. (Scotland.) So called from Galloway in Scotland; the word occurs in Dryton's Polyolbion, s. 3. l. 28. Cf. Galloway-nag in Shak. 2 Hen. IV. ii. 4. 205.

GALLOW-GLASS, GALLOGLASS, a heavy-armed foot-soldier. (Irish.) In Macbeth, i. 2. 13. = Irish galloglach, a servant, a heavy-armed soldier. = Irish gall, a foreigner, an Englishman; oglach, a youth, servant, soldier (from og, Olrish oac, oe, young). It meant 'an English servant'; according to Spenser, View of Ireland, Globe ed. p. 640; but gall orig. referred to Danes (Windisch). (N. and Q. 6 S. x. 145.)

GALLAWS, a gibbet, an instrument for hanging criminals. (E.) ME. galwes, Chaucer, C. T. 6240 (D 658). AS. galga, gealga, a cross, gibbet, gallows; Grein, i. 492. Hence was formed ME. galwe, by the usual change from -ga to -we (and later still to -ow); and it became usual to employ the word in the plural galwes, so that the mod. E. gallows is also, strictly speaking, a plural form. + Icel. gálgi, the gallows, a gibbet; Dan. and Swed. galge, a gibbet; Du. galg; Goth. galga, a cross; G. galgen. Teut. type galgon-*; cf. Lith. žalgis, a pole (ž = zh).

GALOCHE, a kind of shoe or slipper. (F. = Late L. = Gk.) ME. galoch, Chaucer, C. T. 10869 (F 555); P. Plowman, B. xviii. 14. = F. galoch, 'a wooden shoe or patten, made all of a piece, without any lath or tie of leather, and worn by the poor clown in winter'; Cot. = Late L. galopia*, calopia*, formed from calopus* = Gk. καλάπους (Hatzfeld); we find late L. calopedalia, a clog, wooden shoe (Brachet); also calopodium = Gk. καλονόδιον, dimin. of καλόνιος, καλόνιος, a shoe-maker's last; = Gk. κάλω, stem of κάλω, wood; and πούς (gen. ποδός), a foot, cognate with F. foot.

GALORE, abundantly, in plenty. (C.) First in 1675. Also spelt galore, gilor in Jamieson, and galore in Todd's Johnson. 'Galloor, plenty, North'; Crose (1790). = Irish galen, sufficiently; where go, lit. 'to', is a particle which, when prefixed to an adjective, renders it an adverb, and leor, adj., means sufficient; Gael. gu leor, gu leoir, which is the same. Cf. Irish lia, more, allied to L. plus (Stokes-Fick, p. 41).

GALT (1), GAULT, a series of beds of clay and marl. (Scand.) A modern geological term. Prov. E. galt, clay, brick-earth, Suffolk (Halliwell). GAMBADO, a kind of legging. (F. = Ital. = L.) 'Gambadoes, much worn in the west, whereby, while one rides on horseback, his legs are in a coach, clean and warm.' Fuller's Worthies, Cornwall (R.). An E. adaptation, simulating Spanish, of F. gambade, of which the usual sense is 'gambol'; see Gambol.

GAMBESON, a military tunic, sometimes padded. (F. = Teut.) 'A band of Moorish knights gaily arrayed in gambesons of crimson silk.' Longfellow, Outre-Mer (Ancient Spanish Ballads). ME. gambison, King Alisaunder, 5151. = OF. gambison, gambeson, wambison (Godefroy); = Late L. wambason. So called from covering the belly. = OHG. wambis, belly; see Womb.

GAMBIT, an opening at chess. (F. = Ital. = L.) F. gambit. = Ital. gambetto, a tripping up. = Ital. gambie, the leg; see Gambol.

GAMBLE, to play for money. (E.) Comparatively a modern word. It occurs in Cowper, Tirocinium, 246; and Burns has gambling, Twa Dogs, 154. Formed, by suffix -le (which has a frequentative force), from the verb to game, the b being merely excrement; so that gamble = game-le. This form, game-le (Yorkshire, see F. D. D.) has taken the place of the ME. gamenies or gamenen, to play at games, to gamble, which occurs in King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 5461. AS. gamenian, to play at a game, in the Liber Scintillarum, § 55 (p. 172). = AS. gamen, a game. See Game. Der. game.

GAMBOGE, a gum-resin, of a bright yellow colour. (Asiatic.) In Johnson's Dict. 'brought from India by the Dutch, about A. D. 1600.' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. The word is a corruption of Cambodia, the name of the district where it is found. Cambodia is in the Annamese territory, not far from the gulf of Siam. 'The derivation is given by Dampier in 1699; Supp. to Voy. round the World, vi. 105; (N. E. D.).'

GAMBOL, a frisk, caper. (F. = Ital. = L.) In Shak. Hamlet, v. 1. 209. Older spellings are gambold, Phaer, tr. of Virgil, Æn. vi.

Speaking, fol. 73 (R.). = OF. gambade, 'a gamboll'; Cot. = Ital. gambata, a kick (Brachet). = Ital. gamba, the leg; the same word as F. jambe, OF. gambe. = Late L. gamba, earlier spelling camba; cf. acc. pl. cambas, glossed by AS. komne in A. S. Leechdoms, vol. i. p. 121; 'the bend' of the leg. Cf. Gael. and W. cam, crooked, answering to Ocelt. kambos* (icm. kambā*), bent, crooked; Stokes-Fick, p. 78. ¶ The spelling with l seems to have been due to the confusion of the F. suffix -ade with F. suffix -aude, the latter of which stands for an older -alde. Hence gambade was first corrupted to gambaude (Skelton); then written gambauld (Udall) or gambold (Phaer); and lastly gambol (Shakespeare), with loss of final d. Der. gambol, vb., Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 168.

GAME, sport, amusement. (E.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 1. 240. ME. game, Chaucer, C. T. 1808 (A 1806); older form gamen, spelt gamyn and gamyn in Barbour's Bruce, ed. Der. game, vb., gam-ing; game-some, ME. gamsom (= gamen-som), Will. of Palerne, 4193; game-ster (Merry Wives, iii. 1. 37), where the suffix -ster, orig. feminine, has a sinister sense, Koch, Engl. Gram. iii. 47; also game-cock, game-keeper. Doublet, gimmon (2).

Cotgrave explains jambon by 'a gammon'; and Florio explains Ital. gambone by 'a hanche [haunch], a gammon'. Formed, with suffix -on, from OF. gambe, a leg. See Gambol.

GAMMON (2), nonsense, orig. a jest. (E.) A slang word; but really the ME. gamen preserved; see Backgammon and Game. Cf. 'This gammon shall begin'; Chester Plays, v. 260. And Stanishur has gamenig, i. e. 'gambling'; Virgil, ed. Arber, p. 153.

GAMUT, the musical scale. (Hybrid; F. = Gk. and L.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iii. 1. 67, 71. A compound word, made up from OF. game or gamme, and ut. 1. Gower has gamme in the sense of 'a musical scale'; C. A. iii. 60; bk. vii. 172. = OF. game, gamme, 'gamut, in music'; Cot. = Gk. γάμμα, the name of the third letter of the alphabet. Cf. Heb. gimel, the third letter of the alphabet, so named from its supposed resemblance to a camel, called in Hebrew gāmal (Farrar, Chapters on Language, 136). Brachet says: 'Guy of Arezzo [born about A. D. 990] named the notes of the musical scale a, b, c, d, e, f, g, in which a was the low la on the violoncello; then, to indicate one note below this a, he used the Gk. γ, which thus standing in front of the whole scale, has given its name to it.' 2. The word ut is Latin, and is the old name for the first note in singing, now called do. The same Guy of Arezzo is said to have named the notes after certain syllables of a monkish hymn to S. John, in a stanza written in apophthegm. The lines are: 'Ut queant laxis resonare fibris Mira gestorum famuli tuorum Solene polluti labii reatum Sante Iohannes'; the last term si being made from the initials of the final words.

GANDER, the male of the goose. (E.) ME. gandra, Mandeville's Travels, p. 216. AS. gandra; Ælfric's Gram. De Tertia Declinatione, sect. xviii; where it translates L. anser. Teut. type gan-ron-*. See further under Gannet, Goose.

GANG (1), a crew of persons. (Scand.) The word gang occurs in ME. in the sense of 'a going', or 'a course'. The peculiar use of gang in the sense of a 'crew' is late, and is rather Scand. than L. In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Gang, a company, a crew'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. He adds that 'in sea-affairs, gangs are the several companies of mariners belonging to a ship.' But in the sense of a 'set' of things, it occurs as early as 1340 in Northern E. (N. E. D.). = Icel. gangr, a going; also, collectively, a gang, as misagangr, a gang of mice, húfagangr, a gang of thieves. Cf. Swed. gång, a going, a time; Dan. gang, walk, gait; AS. gang, a going, a procession; Du. gang, course, pace, gait, tack, way, alley, passage; Goth. gaggis (= gangs), a way, street. β. The ME. gang, a course, way, is from AS. gang, a journey (Bosworth); which is from AS. gangan, to go; Grein, i. 367, 368. So also Icel. gangr is from Icel. ganga, to go. See Gang (2). Der. gang-days, from Icel. gangdagar, pl.; gang-week, AS. gang-wæc; gang-way, from AS. gang-weg, a way, road; gang-board, a hatch term, from Du. gangboord, a gangway.

GANTLET (1), a spelling of Gauntlet, q. v.

GANTLET (2), also GANTLOPE, a military punishment. (Swed.) In Skinner, ed. 1671. Formerly written gantlope, but corrupted to gantlet or gantlet by confusion with gantlet, a glove. 'To run the gantlope, a punishment used among soldiers'; Phillips' Dict., ed. 1658. Again, the n is inserted, being no part of the orig. word, which should be gantlope.—Swed. gantlope (older form gantlopp), lit. 'a running down a lane,' because the offender has to run between two files of soldiers, who strike him as he passes. Widenberg's Swed. Dict. (1788) has: 'löpa gantlopp, to run the gantlope';—Swed. gata, a street, lane; see Gate (2); and lopp, a course, career, running, from löpa, to run, cognate with E. leap. ¶ Prob. due to the wars of Gustavus Adolphus (died 1632).

The peculiar spelling gaol is due to the OF. gaole (Godefroy, s. v. jaiole), and has been preserved in Law French. Chaucer has gayler, C. T. 1476 (A 1474); whence jailer and jail.—AF. gaule, OF. jaiole, gaule, mod. F. gaule, a prison, cage for birds. A dimin. of Late L. gabia, for cavena, a cage; DuCange. —L. cavena, a cage, coop, lit. a hollow place, cavity. —L. cavus, hollow. See Cage, Cave, and Gabion. Florio translates the Ital. garba by 'the tare, waste, or *garb*ish of any merchandise or ware.' Palsgrave has: 'garbage of a foule,' i.e. a fowl's entrails. It agrees in form with OF. garbage, gerbage, a tax paid in garbs or sheaves; and is prob. similarly formed from OF. garbe, a handful, small bundle, Low L. garba, the same. See above.

GARBLE, to select for a purpose, to mutilate or corrupt an account. (F.—Ital.—Arab.—L.) The old sense was 'to pick out,' or 'sort,' so as to get the best of a collection of things. The statute i Rich. III, c. 11, was made 'for the remedie of the excessive price and badnesse of bowstaues, which partly is grown because the merchants will not suffer any garbling [or sorting] of them to be made.' There was an officer called the Garbler of spices, whose business was to visit the shops, examine the spices, and garble, or make clean the same; mentioned an. 21 Jacob. c. 1. See Blount's Nomolexicon, where it is further explained that 'garbling of spice, drugs, &c. (i. Jacob. cap. 19) is nothing but to purify it from the dross and dirt that is mixed with it.'—OF. garbeller (in Godefroy, entered by mistake under gerbele), usually grabeller, 'to garbell spices, also to examine precisely, sift neatly'; Cot. The same word as Span. garbillar, to sift, garble; Ital. garbellare, 'to garbell spices' (Torriano); and Low L. garbellare, to sift, a word which occurs A. D. 1269 (DuCange). Cf. GARBOLL, a disturbance, commotion. (F.—Ital.) In Shak. Antony, i. 3. 61; ii. 2. 67.—OF. garboul, 'a garbolle, huribully, great stirre'; Cot. Cf. Span. garbullo, a crowd, multitude.—Ital. garbuglio, 'a garbolle, . . tumult, disorder'; Florio. B. Of uncertain origin. Referred by Diez to L. garrire, to prattle, chatter; in conjunction with bullire, to boil, bubble, boil with rage. ¶ The latter part of the word is thus well accounted for; see Boil. The former part is less sure, and seems to be more directly from the Ital. gara, strife, since Florio has 'garbulare, to rave.' The source is probably imitative; see Jar, to creak.

GARDANT, in heraldry: looking full at the spectator. (F.—Tent.) Also guardant.—MF. gardant, pres. pt. of garder, 'to ward, watch, regard'; Cot. See Guard.

The stem gartin- was retained in compounds, such as Oicig. gartin-āri, a gardener; and this prob. suggested a Late L. form gard-inum* (with L. suffix -inum), whence the OF. form. B. The OSax. gardo is cognate with AS. geard, whence E. yard; see Yard. The substitution of Oicig. t (as in gart-) for Low G. d is reg. iar.

Der. garden, vb.; garden-ing, garden-er.

GARFISH, a kind of pike. See Gar (1).

GARGLE, to rinse the throat. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) In Cotgrave. Modified from F. gargouiller, just as the MF. gargyll (a gargoylle) is from F. gargouille.—F. gargouiller, 'to gargle, or gargarize'; Cot.—F. gargouille; for which see Gargaria. The MF. gargarise, used by Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 10, is from MF. gargarizer, to gargle (Cot.), borrowed (through L. gargarizāre) from Gk. γάργυζω, to gargle. From an imitative base, viz. Gk. γάργυ; cf. Gk. γάργυρα, the uvula. Hence also Ital. gar-gagliare, to murmur, gar-gatta, the throat (see below). Der. gargle, sb.

GARGOYLE, in architecture, a projecting spout. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) ME. gargoylle, also spelt gargyll. The spelling gargoylle is in Lydgate's Siege of Troy, bk. ii. c. 11 (fol. F. 5, back, col. 1); we read of gargoylles of gold fiercely faced with spouts running' in Hall's Chron. Henry VIII, an. 19.—F. gargouille, 'the weesle or weason [weasel] of the throat; also, the mouth of a spout, a gutter'; Cot. Cf. Span. gargola, a gargoylle. B. We find, in Ital., not only gargatta, gargozza, the throat, windpipe, but also gargozza, the throat, gullet, dimin. of gorga, the throat. Thus gar-gouille is from the imitative Gk. base γάργυ (see above), just as Ital. gorge and E. gorge are from the parallel L. base gurg-; see Gorge. (Korting, §§ 4169, 4401.)

GARISH, glaring, staring, showy. (Scand.) 'The garish sun'; Komeo, iii. 2. 25. 'Day's garish eye'; Milton, II Penseroso, 141. Chaucer uses the form garwen, to stare; C. T. 5332 (B 912); with which cf. garwish in colour, Ascham, Scholemaster, ed. Arber, p. 54. Perhaps from Norw. garra, to bend the head backwards (Ross); from gar, adj., bent backwards. From the attitude adopted in staring or gazing fixedly. The change gar > n is regular.

GARLAND, a wreath. (F.—Tent. F.) In early use. ME. gerland, Chaucer, C. T. 668 (A 666). The form gerlandesche occurs in Hall Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 23.—OF. garlande, 'a garland'; Cot. [The mod. F. guirlande is borrowed from Ital. ghirlanda.] Cf. Span. guirnalda, Ital. ghirlanda, a garland. B. Of uncertain origin; see the discussion of the word in Diez. It seems as if formed with a suffix -ande from a MIlg. uierel-en*, a supposed frequentative of uieren, to adorn; from OHG. wiara, MHG. wiere, gold wire, fine ornament. (Körting, § 10389.) Cf. E. wire. Der. garland, vb.

GARLIC, a plant of the genus Allium. (E.) Lit. 'spear-plant'; from the shape of the leaves. ME. garleek, Chaucer, C. T. 630 (A 634). AS. gārlīc, used to translate L. allium in Alfric's Glossary, Nomina Herbarum. = AS. gār, a spear; and lēac, a leek, plant. + Icel. gærlaukr (similarly formed). See GAR (1), Gore, and Leek.
 ¶ The W. garleig is borrowed from E.

GARNMENT, a robe, coat. (F.—Teut.) A corruption of ME. garment, P. Plowman, C. x. 119. = OF. garment, garment, a robe, lit. a defence; formed (with suffix -ment = L. -mentum) from OF. garin, to protect, garnish, adorn. See Garnish.

GARNER, a granary, store for grain. (F.—L.) ME. gerner; Chaucer, C. T. 595 (A 593). = OF. gerrier, a variant of greuter, a granary (Snpp. to Godefroy). = L. granārium, a granary. Doublet, granary, q. v. Der. garner, verb.

GARNET, a kind of precious stone. (F.—L.) 'And gode garnettes bytwene;' Romance of Esmare, ed. Kitson, l. 156; so also garnettes, pl., in Lydgate, Chocle and Bird, st. 34. A corruption of granat, a form also used in E., and found in Cotgrave. = OF. granat [also granat], 'a precious stone called a granat, or garnet'; Col. Cf. Span. granate, Ital. granato, a garnet. = Late L. grānātus, a garnet. 'So called from its resemblance in colour and shape to the grains or seeds of the pomegranate;' Webster. = L. grānātus, having many grains or seeds; grānātum (for mālum grānātum), a pomegranate. = L. grānum, a grain; see Grain.

GARNISH, to embellish, decorate. (F.—Teut.) In Spenser, Verses addressed to Lord Ch. Howard, l. 2; Prompt. Parv. p. 188. Also spelt varnish in ME.; the pp. varnished is in Will. of Palerne, l. 1083. = OF. garnis, varnis, stem of pres. pt. of garin, guarin, older form varin, to avert, defend, fortify, garnish (Godefroy). = OHG. varniſjan*, OHG. varniſ, to guard against; cf. OHG. varni, foresight, care. See Ware (2). Der. garish, sb., garish-ment, garish-er; also gariture (Cotgrave), from F. gariture, 'garniture, garnishment' (Col.), Low L. garitura, from Low L. garin, to adorn, which is merely the F. word Latinised; also garish-er = 'the party in whose hands another man's money is attached' (Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715), barbarously formed on the model of a F. pass. part. as opposed to garish-er considered as an agent; also garment, q. v., and garment, q. v.

GARRET, a room at the top of a house. (F.—OHG.) ME. garite (with one r), Prompt. Parv. p. 187; P. Plowman's Creed, ed. Skeat, 214. It properly means 'a place of look out, or watch-tower.' = OF. garite, a place of refuge, place of look-out, watch-tower (F. Gueillot). = OF. garri, older spelling warri, to preserve, save, keep. = OHG. warjan, to defend; cf. AS. werian, to defend. Allied to Wair, q. v.

GARRISON, a supply of soldiers for defending a fort. (F.—Teut.) 1. ME. garrison, provision, in La Belle Dame sans Mercy, l. 175; Harhour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xvii. 204 (footnote), where another spelling is warriſon, and other reading is warriſon. = OF. garrison, store, provision, supply (Norm. dial. garrison, Moisy). = OF. garriant, pres. part. of garin, to supply, garnish; see Garnish. Thus garrison is allied to gariture. 2. But it was supplanted by ME. garis or warriſon, defence, safety; from OF. garis, pres. pt. stem of garir, to defend; see Garret.

GARROTE, GARROTT, a method of effecting strangulation. (Span.—C.) 'Garrotte, a machine for strangling criminals, used in Spain. Many attempts to strangle were made by thieves called garrotters, in the winter of 1862-63. An act was passed in 1863 to punish these acts by flogging.' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. [See garrot and garroter in Cotgrave.] = Span. garrote, a cudgel, tying a rope tight, strangling by means of an iron collar; Minshew says, 'a cudgel to wind [twist] a cord.' Formed, with dimin. suffix -ro, from Span. garra, a claw, a talon, clutch, whence also the phrase echarle a uao la garra, to grasp, imprison; Minshew has 'garra, a paw of a beast,' cf. Prov. garra, leg (Mistral). Of Celtic origin; connected with Breton gar, gar, W. and Corn. gar, the shank of the leg (Diez); Celtic type garis*; Stokes-Fick, p. 107. See Garter. Der. garrotte, verb; garrotter. (Körting, § 4160.)

GARRULOUS, talkative. (L.) 1. Milton has garrulity, Sams. Agonistes, 491; and it occurs in Cotgrave, to translate F. garrulité, from L. acc. garrulitatem, talkativeness. 2. The Lat. garrulous occurs in Chapman's Homer, Comment. on Iliad, b. iii. note 2. It is borrowed from L. directly, by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, strenuous, &c. = L. garrulus, talkative. Formed with suffix -ulus, from garr-ire, to prattle. = √ GAR, to shout, call; whence also W. gar-m, an outcry, Irish gairm. Brugmann, l. § 638. Der. garrulosity; also garrul-ty, as above.

GARTER, a band round the leg, for fastening the hose. (F.—C.) 'Eek there be knights old of the garter;' The Flower and the Leaf (15th cent.), l. 519. Hoccleve has a poem addressed to 'Knights of the Garter.' The order was instituted by Edw. III, ab. 1344. = AF. garter, Stat. of the Realm, i. 380 (an. 1363); AF. gartier, in dialects of N. France (Hécart), Walloon gartier (Sigart), spelt gartier in Cotgrave, and explained by him as 'a garter'; mod. F. jarretière. Closely connected with OF. garet (Godefroy), mod. F. jarret, the ham of the leg. = Iret. gar, gar, the shank of the leg; cf. W. gar, the shank; see Garrote. Der. garter, verb, All's Well, ii. 3. 265.

GARTH, a yard, enclosure, fence. (Scand.) Northern; the pl. garthis is in Hampole, Psalm xxxvi. 2. = Icel. garðr, a yard. + AS. geard, a yard; see Yard.

GAS, an acerific fluid. (Dutch.) The term is known to have been a pure invention. The Belginn chemist Van Helmont (died A.D. 1644) invented two corresponding terms, gas and blas; the former came into use, the latter was forgotten. We may call it a Dutch word, as gas is the Du. spelling. ¶ Van Helmont says that it was suggested by the Gk. chaos. = Halitum illum gas vocavi, non longe a Chao veterum secretum; Ortus Medicinæ, ed. 1652, p. 59 a (N.F.D.). Der. gas-eous, gas-o-nel.

GASCONADE, boasting, bragging. (Gascony.) 'That figure of speech which is commonly distinguished by the name of Gasconade;' The Tatler, no. 115 (part 2). = F. gasconade, boasting; said to be a vice of the Gascons. = F. Gascon, an inhabitant of Gascony, formerly Vasconia. Der. gasconade, verb, gasconad-ing, gasconad-er.

GASH, to hack, cut deeply. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) 'His gashed stabs;' Macbeth, ii. 3. 119. A corruption of an older form garsh or garse. 'A garse or garsh, incisura.' Lewis, 33. 14. 'Garsh' in wode or in a knife, hoche;' Falsgrave. The pl. sb. garren (another MS. has garas) occurs in the Ancien Riwle, p. 258, in the sense of 'gashes caused by a scourge.' = OF. garser, to scarify, pierce with a lancet (Roquefort), and see garser, garser in Godefroy; garsher, to chap, as the hands or lips (Cotgrave). Cf. Late L. gasa, scarification, or the making of numerous small incisions in the skin and flesh; an operation called by the Greeks γχαράσσειν; Dnange. b. Origin obscure; it is possible that OF. garser represents Late L. caraxare, short for incarnare, incarnare, to pierce, incise; from Gk. καράσσειν, to furrow, scratch. See Character. ¶ Diez suggests a Late L. form carpiſtre, founded on carper, to pluck. Note ME. carsare, as a gloss to scarificator, Voc. 652. 7. Der. gash, sb.

GASP, to gape for breath. (Scand.) ME. gaspen, Gower, C. A. ii. 260; bk. v. 3975. Also gaspen (Northern), Allit. Morte Arthure, 1462. The latter is from Icel. and Norw. gasp, to yawn; Swed. gäspa; cf. Dan. gäsp. The former suggests a cognate AS. gāspun* (not found). Note that sp commonly represents an earlier ps; thus clasp is ME. clapsen, clasp was formerly hops, and aspen is from aps. Hence Icel. gæspa is for gæpsa*; from a Teut. base gæip* (weak gæip gip); cf. Du. gäpsen, to gasp, AS. gāpsan, a yawning. Der. gasp, sb.

GASTRIC, belonging to the belly. (Late L.—Gk.) Coles (1684) has gastrick; so also Blount, ed. 1656. = Late L. gastriacus, gastric; formed with suffix -e from gastro- = gastro- = Gk. γαστήρ, for γαστήρ, the belly (stem gastro-). Der. from the same root, gastro-nomy; from Gk. γαστήρ and νόμος, derivative of νόμος, usage.

Perhaps allied to Gate (1). β. Gate (1) answers to Teut. type gatom*, n.; but gate (2) to Teut. type gatuwin*, f. See Gait, Gantlet (2).

GATHER, to draw into a heap, collect. (E.) Just as father corresponds to ME. fader, so gather corresponds to ME. gaderen or gaderien, to gather; as also mod. E. together corresponds to ME. togideren. 'And gadred hem alle togideren;' = and gathered them all together; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 80. AS. gædran, gaderian; Lake, vi. 44; Grein, l. 366, 373. β. Formed, with causal suffix -ian, from AS. gader, together, preserved in the compound gader-tang, associated with (Grein, l. 365), and also as gador or gendor, together (Grein, l. 491); see Together. γ. From a base gad; cf. AS. gæd, society, fellowship, company; whence also the AS. ge-gada, a companion, and AS. gæd-el-ing, an associate, comrade; cf. Goth. gad-il-iggs (= gad-il-ings), a sister's son, Col. iv. 10. + Du. gaderen, to collect, from gader, together; Low G. gadden, to collect (Berghaus); the base appears in Du. gade, a spouse, consort; cf. 'A peire of bedes gaude al with grene'; Chaucer, C. T. 150.—L. gaudere, to rejoice, pt. t. gaudens sum; from a base gau-+Gk. γῡδew, to rejoice; allied to gaue (s. γῡf-ew), to rejoice; γαυπος, proud. Brjmann, i. § 589. ii. § 694. Der. gaud-y, i.e. show-y; gaud-i-ty, gaud-i-ness.

GAULT, clay and marl. See Galt (1).
GAUNT, thin, lean. (Scand.) In Shak. Rich. II. ii. 1. 74. 'His own gaunt eagle'; Ben Jonson, Catiline, iii. 1. 'Gaunt, or lene; also 'Gauntie, or slenlyr'; Prompt. Parv. p. 189. 'Gant, slim, slender'; Ray's South- and East-Country Words, ed. 1691. Also mentioned in Forby as a Norfolk, and in Moor as a Suffolk word; also in Yks. Linc. Lanc. and E. D. I. It corresponds to Norweg. gand, a thin pointed stick, a tall and thin man, an overgrown stripling (Asen); we also find Swed. dial. gank, a lean and nearly starved horse (Rietz). Cf. Formed, with dimin. suffixes -el and -et, from OF. gant, a glove. G. gewand, a garment; Low G. want, cloth (Lübben). Norcen. § 257 (5).

GAUNTLET (2). (Scand.) In the phr. 'to run the gauntlet', we have a corruption of an older gantlopp. It appears as run the gantlopp in Bailey (1735), Kersey (1715), Phillips (1706), and Blount (1674). Bailey correctly defines it as 'to run through a company of soldiers, standing on each side, making a lane, with each a switch in his hand to scourge the criminal.' See further under Gantlet (2).

GAUZE, a thin silken fabric. (F.—Palestine?) 'Gauze, a thin sort of silk-stuff'; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715.—MF. gaze, 'cushion canvas, the thin canvas that serves women for a ground unto their cushions or pursework; also, the sleight stuffe tiffany'; Cot. And see Hatzfeld. Perhaps so called because first brought from Gaza, in Palestine. Cf. Low L. gazetum, wine brought from Gaza; gazetum, (perhaps) gauze. ¶ Several kinds of stuffs are named from places; e.g. damask from Damascus, calico from Calicut, &c.; but in this instance evidence is lacking.

GAVELKIND, a peculiar sort of tenure. (E.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Gavelkind, a tenure, or custom, whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death among all his sons'; Mount's Nomenclicon, ed. 1691. ME. gavelkind; earliest spelling gaulkind in 1205 (N. E. D.). The latter answers to AS. gafelgæynd; from AS. gafel, tribute, payment, and gæynd, kind, sort; see Kind. β. The AS. gaf-od (whence Low L. gabulum) is from Teut. gab*, 2d grade of the verb to give; see Give. ¶ Early misunderstood and misrepresented; and wrongly supposed to be of Celtic origin.

Fem. of Gavot, a mountaineer of the Upper Alps (id.). Of historical origin; 'orig. a dance of the Gavotes, i.e. people of Gap'; Blachet. Gap is in the department of the Upper Alps, and in the old province of Dauphiné.

GAWK, awkward. (F.—Scand.) The orig. sense is left-handed. It is short for E. dial. gawk-handed, left-handed (E. D. D.); and gawk is contracted from gallack, gaulick, adj., left (of the hands); where -ick is a suffix (N. E. D.). Of F. origin; cf. Burgund. gde, numb with cold, said of the fingers (Mignard).—Swed. Dan. valen, numbed; whence Swed. dial. val-händ, Norw. val-hendi, having numbed hands. ¶ Not from F. gauche (N. E. D.). Explained as 'a gazelle' in Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 440.

GAZETTE, a small newspaper. (F.—Ital.) 'As we read a gazett'; Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. ser. 1 (K.). [Ben Jonson has the (supposed) Ital. pl. gazzetti; Volpone, v. 2 (l. 7 from end).]—MF. gazette, 'a certain Venetian coin scarce worth our farthing; also, a bill of news, or a short relation of the general occurrences of the time, forged most commonly at Venice, and these dispersed, every month, into most parts of Christendom'; Cot. β. The word is certainly from Ital. gazetta, but that word has two meanings, viz. (1) 'a young plot or magot a pie' [mag-pie]; and (2) 'a small coin in Italie'; Florio. Now the value of the latter (less than a farthing) was so small, that Mr. Wedgwood's objection would seem to be sound, viz. 'that it never could have been the price either of a written or a printed sheet; so that this (the usual) explanation is to be doubted. But in Hatzfeld, it is suggested that the coin gazetta was paid, not for the gazette itself, but for the privilege of reading it; and it is added that it was a periodical which appeared at Venice about the middle of the 16th century. γ. Gazetta, a small coin, is prob. a dimin. from L. gaza, treasure, wealth, a word borrowed from Gk. γάλα, wealth, a treasury; which, again, is said to be from Pers. gaw, a treasure. ¶ The word gazel, a small coin, occurs in Massinger, Maid of Honour, iii. 1 (speech by Jacomo), and in Ben Jonson, The Fox, ii. 1 (speech by Peregrine). Der. gazett-er, orig. a writer for a gazette, now used to denote a geographical dictionary (since 1704).

GHERKIN, a small cucumber. (Du.—Slav.—Low L.—Gk.—Pers.) The h is inserted to keep the g hard. 'Gherkins or Guerkins, a sort of pickled cucumbers'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Spelt gherkin in Skinner, ed. 1671. Shortened from agherkin. — Du. agherkin, a gherkin; cf. 'Gherkins, agurkes' in Sewall's Eng.-Du. Dict. ed. 1754. β. Note that the Du. dimin. suffix -ken was formerly used (as explained by Ten Kate) where the dimin. suffix -je now occurs; so that agurkje stands for an older form agurkhen*, whence the E. gherkin must have been borrowed, with the loss merely of initial a. Koolman gives angurken as the EFriesic form. γ. From Polish agurke, Bohem. okurka. — Low L. angurias, a water-melon (Mittal. anguria, a cucumber, Florio). — Late Gk. ἀγγύριον, a water-melon. — Pers. angūrah, a melon, a cucumber; Rich. Dict. p. 194.

GHOST, a spirit. (E.) The h has been inserted. ME. goost, gost; Chaucer, C. T. 2770 (A 2768). AS. gāst, a spirit; Grein, i. 371. — Du. geest; G. geist, a spirit. Teut. type gais-toz*. Of uncertain origin; but apparently allied to Icel. geis-a, to rage (like fire), and to Goth. us-gais-jan, to terrify. Perhaps also to ghastly. See Ghastly. Cf. Skt. heda-s, anger, wrath of the gods (Macdonell) Brugmann, i. § 785 (c). Der. ghost-ly, ghost-li-ness.

GHOUL, a kind of demon. (Arab.) Pron. gool, to rime with cool. — Pers. ghul, an imaginary sylvan demon; supposed to devour men and animals; Arab. ghuwal (the same). — Arab. ghul, attacking suddenly and unexpectedly; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1062. See Yule.

GIANT, a man of great size. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. giant, more frequently gaunt, gaunt; Chaucer, C. T. 13738 (B 1997); King Alexander, 3465.—OF. gaunt, 'a giant'; Cot.—L. acc. gigantem, from gigas, 'a giant'—Gk. gigas, 'a giant' (stem γίγας). β. Sometimes explained from Gk. γῆ, the earth, as if the word meant 'earth-born'. Der. gigant-ic, q. v.; giant-ess.

GIAOUR, an infidel. (Ital.—Pers.) 'In Dr. Clarke's Travels, this word, which means infidel, is always written djour. Lord Byron adopted the Ital. spelling usual among the Franks of the Levant; it is not 14 to Lord Byron's poem of The Giaour.—Pers. giawr, an infidel; Rich. Dict. p. 1227. A variant of Pers. gabr, a Gueber; see Gueber.

GIBBERISH, nonsensical talk. (E.) Holinshed speaks of 'gibberishing Irish'; Deser. of Ireland, c. 1. 'All kinds of gibb'rish he had learnt to know'; Drayton, The Mooncalf, l. 913. Cotgrave has: 'Bagois, gibbridge, strange talk. The hard g seems to separate it from the old verb gibber, to gabble; Hamlet, i. 1. 116; which is allied to jabber and gabble. But the g in gibber may have been sometimes hard, as in gibble-gabble (N. E. D.). If so, the derivation is from gib, variant of gab, an imitative utterance; see Gabble. β. Johnson's derivation, from Gebir, an alchemist of the 8th cent., is unlikely, as the word is not spelt gibirish.

GIBBET, a gallows. (F.) ME. gebet, gibet, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, i. 106; 'hongen on a gibet'; Ancræn Riwe, p. 116.—OF. gibbet, 'a gibbet'; Cot. (mod. F. gibet). β. Of unknown origin; Littre suggests a comparison with OF. gibet, 'a large stick (Roquefort)'; apparently a dimin. of OF. gihie, a sort of arm, an implement for stirring the earth and rooting up plants, apparently a hoe (Roquefort). Perhaps Scand.; cf. Swed. dial. gippa, to jerk up, Norw. gippa, gieppa, to jerk up. This form gippa seems to be imitated from Swed. wippa, to see-saw, to tilt up; cf. MDu. wippe, 'a gibbet' (Hexham), Swed. wipp-galge, a gibbet.

GIBBON, a kind of ape. (F.) Cf. F. gibbon, in Buffon.

GIBBOUS, humped, swelling. (F.—L.) 'Its round and gibbous back'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 26, § 5. The suffix -ous is for F. -eux, by analogy with other words in which -ous represents OF. -ous (later -eux).—F. gibbeux, 'hulch, bunched, much swelling'; Cot.—L. gibbōsus, hunched. Formed, with suffix -ōsus, from L. gibbus, a hump, hunch; cf. gibbus, bent; gibber, a hump. Der. gibbousness.

GIBE, to mock, taunt. (F.) 'And common courtiers love to gybe and seare'; Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 714. Of imitative origin; cf. EFries. gibeln, to mock; Du. gibelen, to sneer. Note also Swed. dial. gipa, to gape, also, to talk rashly and foolishly (Kietz); Icel. geipa, to talk nonsense; Icel. gipr, idle talk; Norw. geipa, to make grimaces. ¶ Also spelt jibe. Der. gibe, sb.

GIBLETS, the various parts of a fowl that are removed before cooking. (F.) 'And set the hare's head against the goose giblets'; Harrington's tr. of Orlando Furioso, b. xliii. st. 136 (K.); the date of the 1st edition is 1591. 'May feed on giblet-pie'; Dryden, tr. of Persius, vi. 172. 'Sliced beef, giblets, and petticoes'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Woman-hater, i. 2. ME. giblet; see Wright's Vocab. i. 179.—OF. gibeler, which, according to Littre, is the old form of F. gibelotte, stewed rabbit. Of unknown origin; not necessarily related to F. gibier, game.

GIDDY, unsteady, dizzy. (F.) ME. gidi, gydi; Rob. of Glouc. p. 68; l. 1542. Late AS gidig, frantic; in Napier's Glosses; for earlier gidig*, as shown by the harl g. Teut. type gidigaz*, i.e. possessed by a god (like Gk. ἐθνος).—Teut. type gudom*, a god. See God. Der. giddi-ly, giddi-ness.

GIER-BAGLE, a kind of eagle. (Du. and F.) In Levit. xi. 18. The first syllable is Dutch, from Du. gier, a vulture; cognate with G. geier, MllG. gir, a vulture. Allied to G. giere-gir, greedily, and to E. yearn. See Gyr-falcon. The word eagle is F. See Eagle.

GIFT, a thing given, present. (E.) ME. gift, commonly ȝift, ȝeft; Rob. of Glouc. p. 122, l. 2600; P. Plowman, B. iii. 99. [The word is perhaps rather Scand. than E.] AS. gift, ȝift, rare in the sing., but common in the pl. (when it often has the sense of 'nuptials', with reference to the marriage dowry). In Bosworth's Dict. is given a passage from the Laws of Ine, no. 31, in which the word ȝift appears as a fem. sing., with the sense of 'dowry'; see Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 122, sect. 31. Or from Icel. gift, ȝift (pron. gift), a gift. + Du. gift, a gift, present; Goth. -gibts, -giffs, only in comp. fragibts, fragiffs, promise, gift, espousal; G. -gift, in comp. mitgift, a dowry. β. All from the corresponding verb, with the suffix -i, for -it; Teut. type giztiz*, fem. See Give. Der. gift-æd; heaven-gifted, Milton, Samson Agon. 36.

GIG, a light carriage, a light boat. (Scand.) The orig. idea is that of anything that easily whirls or twirls about. In Shak. gig means a boy's top; L. L. L. iv. 3. 167; v. 1. 70, 73. Cf. whirligig. [In Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 852, we have: 'This hous was also ful of giggis,' where the sense is uncertain; it may be 'full of whirling things,' since we find 'ful . . . of other werkenges'=full of other movements, immediately below.] β. The hard g shows it to be of Scand. origin, as distinguished from jig, the French form. Cf. Norw. giga, to totter, shake about; gigra, gigla, to shake about (Ross); the latter is the prov. E. giggle, to shake about, be unsteady; E. D. D. Also Norw. geiga, to swing one's arms about (Ross). See Jig. GIGANTIC, giant-like. (L.—Gk.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 659; Sams. Agon. 1249. A coined word, from the decl. stem giganti- of L. gigas, a giant, see Giant.

GIGGLE, to laugh lightly, titter. (E.) 'Giggle, to laugh out, laugh wantonly'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. 'A set of gigglers'; Spectator, no. 158. 'Some gyll and lawgh'; Barclay, Ship of Fools, i. 63. An attenuated form of ME. gagden, 'to gaggle', or make a noise like a goose. 'Gagelin, or cryn as gees, clingo'; Prompt. Parv. p. 184. Cf. Icel. gagl, a goose; EFries. gicheln, Low G. giggeln (Dannell), G. kichern, to giggle. A frequentative form, from an imitative root. See Cackle. Der. giggle, sb., giggler. GIGLET, GIGLOT, a wanton woman. (Scand.; with F. suffix.) In Shak. Meas. for Meas. v. 352; 1 Hen. VI. iv. 7. 41. Earlier, in Prompt. Parv. p. 194; and see the note. Cf. giglotrye, giddiness; How the Good Wife taught her Daughter, l. 159 in Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat. A dimin., with suffix -et or -ot, from an older giggle or gigle. Cotgrave has: 'Gadrouillette, a minx, gigle, flirt, callet, gixie'. Here again, gigle and gixie (= gig-iy) are connected with ME. gigge, a flighty girl, Plowman's Tale, 759 (cf. Ancræn Riwe, p. 204; N. E. D.). Prob. from the base gig, applied to rapid motion, and thence to lightness of behaviour. See Gig, Giggle.

GILD, to overlay with gold. (E.) ME. gilden, Wyclif, Exod. xxvi. 29. AS. gyldan; only in the pp. gegyld, A. S. Psalter, ed. Spelman, xlv. 11 (xlv. 9); and in comp. be-gyldan, ofer-gyldan. Teut. type guldhjan-*. The y is the usual substitution, by vowel-change, for an original u, which appears in the Goth. gulth, gold. Cf. Icel. gylta (for gylt-er), to gild. See Gold. Der. gilt, contracted form of gild-ed; gild-er, gild-ing.

GILL (1), an organ of respiration in fishes. (Scand.) 'Gylle of a fische, branchia'; Prompt. Parv. Spelt gile, Wyclif, Tobit, vi. 4. Allied to Dan. gielle, a gill; Swed. göl; MDan. gælle, MSwed. gel. Cf. Gk. γέλαος, ἁλιε γέλαος, a lip.

GILL (2), a ravine, yawning chasm. (Scand.) Also spelt ghyll; common in place-names, as Dungen Ghyll.—Icel. gil, a deep narrow glen with a stream at the bottom; Norw. gil; and cf. Icel. geil, a ravine; Swed. dial. gijsa, a defile.

GILL (3), with g soft; a quarter of a pint. (F.—L.?) ME. gille, gylle; P. Plowman, l. v. 246 (where it is written lille=jille).—OF. gelle, a sort of measure for wine; Roquefort. Cf. Low L. gillo, a wine-vessel; gella, a wine-vessel, wine-measure; Ducange. Godefroy equates OF. gille, gelle with OF. gerle, a jar; cf. Ital. gerla, a basket. Possibly from Late L. gerula, a basket carried on the back, also, a measure of wine (Ducange). From L. gerere, to carry (Körting, § 4233).

GILL (4), with g soft; a woman's name; ground-ivy. (F.—L.) The name Gill is short for Gillian, which is in Shak. Com. Errors, iii. 1. 31. And Gillian is from F. Juliane, from L. Juliana. This personal fem. name is formed from L. Iulius; see July. β. The ground-ivy was hence called Gill-creeper-by-the-ground (Halliwell); or briefly Gill. Hence also Gill-ale, the herb ale-hoof (Hall); Gill-burnt-tail, an ignis fatuus; Gill-kooter, an owl; Gill-flirr, a wanton girl; flirr-gill, the same, Romeo, ii. 4. 162. St. Juliana's day is Feb. 16.

GILLIE, a boy, page, menial. (C.) Used by Sir W. Scott; but Spenser also speaks of 'the Irish horse-boys or cullies, as they call them'; View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 641, col. 2.—Gael. gille, giolla, Irish giolla, a boy, lad, youth, man-servant, lacquey; OIrish gilla, a servant.

GILLYFLOWER, a kind of flower, a carnation, a stock. (F.—L.—Gk.) Spelt gillyflowers in Spenser, Shep. Kal. April, 137. Spelt gillflower by Cotgrave. By the common change of r to l, gillflower stands for giroflower, spelt gerroflower in The Kingis Quair, st. 190; where the ending flower is a mere E. corruption, like the fish in crayfish, q. v.—MF. giroflée, 'a gillflower; and most properly, the clove gillflower'; Cot. β. Here we have clove-gillflower as the full form of the name, which is Chaucer's clove gilofre, C. T. 13692 (B 1952); thus confirming the above derivation. γ. From F. clou de girofle, where clou is from L. clavus, a nail (see Clove); and girofle is from Late L. caryophyllum, a Latinised form of Gk. καρυόφυλλον, strictly 'nut-leaf', a clove-tree. (Hence the name means 'nut-leaf', or 'nut-leaved clove').—Gk. κάρυον, for κάρυον, a nut; and φύλλον, a leaf (= L. folium, whence E. fol-ace).

GIMBALS, a contrivance for suspending a ship's compass so as to keep it always horizontal. (F.—L.) The contrivance is one which admits of a double movement. The name gimbals is formed (with excessant b) from the older word gimnals, also called a gemnow or gemnow-ring. See also gimbol and gimnal in Halliwell; and the remarks in Nares. 'Gemnow, or Gemnow-ring, a double ring, with two or more links; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. In Shak. 'a gimnal bit' is a horse's bit made with linked rings; Hen. V. iv. 2. 49. 'Item, . . . pro hapis, gemweis, et clausis; Earl of Derby's Expeditions, p. 221, l. 29 (1392). The forms gemnow and gimnal correspond to MF. gemnou and OF. gemel, a twin. — L. gemellus, a twin; a dimin. form from l. geminus, double. See Gemini.

GIMLET, GIMBLET, a tool for boring holes. (F.—Teut.) 'And see there the gimblets, how they make their entry; Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, i. 1. ME. gymlet, Lydgate, Assembly of Gods, l. 357.—MF. gimblet, 'a gimlet or piercer.' Cot.—mod. F. giblet (by loss of m). Formerly (better) spelt gimblet (Godefroy); Norm. dial. gimblet, vimblet (Moisy). Spelt gimblet in 1412 (Godefroy). A dimin. of wimble, as shown by the Norm. dial. vimblet. See Wimble. And cf. Icel. vindla, to wind up, Norw. vindel, a gimlet (Rose).

GIMMAL, GIMMAL-RING; see Gimbals.

GIMP (with hard g), a kind of trimming, made with twisted silk, wool, or cotton. (F.—Teut.) 'My gimp petticoat.' Dryden, Marriage-a-la-Mode, iii. 1. 'Gimp, a sort of mohair thread covered with the same, or a twist for several works formerly in use; Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. [It seems to have been influenced by confusion with F. gumpe, a wimple, OF. gumple, whence OF. gumpler, to adorn, attire (Godefroy), and MF. gumplier, a maker of wimples. See Wimple.] Cf. also Low G. gimpen, gimp (Berghaus). In sense it answers to the F. gumpe, a thread of silk lace. The F. gumpe is of Teutonic origin, from the base wip-*, to twist or bind round, appearing in Goth. wipjan, to crown. See Gumpeure.

GIN (1), to begin. (E.; pron. with g hard.) Obsolete; or only used as a supposed contraction of begin, though really the orig. word whence begin is formed. It need not be denoted by gin; the apostrophe should be omitted. Common in Shak. Macb. i. 2. 25, &c. MF. ginnen; Chaucer, C. T. 3020 (A 3018). AS. ginnan, to begin; only used in the compounds on-ginnan, to begin, Matt. iv. 7; and be-ginnan, to begin; so that perhaps ME. ginnen is for a-ginnen.—Du. be-ginnen; the simple ginnen being unused; OHG. bi-ginnan; G. be-ginnen; Goth. ginnan, only in the comp. du-ginnan, to begin. See Brugmann, i. § 376. Der. be-gin.

GIN (2), a trap, snare. (F.—L.) ME. gin; 'uele ginnes lich þe ðeycel uot to nime þe uolk' = many snares hath the devil for to catch the people; Aeneid of Inwyd, ed. Morris, p. 54. (Pron. jin.) Also in a far wider sense, and certainly a contraction of F. engin < L. ingenium, a contrivance or piece of ingenuity. Thus, in describing the mechanism by which the horse of brass (in the Squier's Tale) was moved, we are told that 'therein lyth the effect of all the gin' therein is the pith of all the contrivance; C. T. 10636 (F 322). See Engine. ¶ Particularly note the use of the word in P. Plowman, B. xviii. 250; 'For gygas the geant with a gyne engyned' = for Gigas the giant contrived by a contrivance.

GIN (3), a kind of spirit. (F.—L.) Formerly called geneva, whence gin was formed by contraction. Pope has gin-shops; Dunciad, iii. 148. 'Geneva, a kind of strong water; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. So called by confusion with the town in Switzerland of that name; but really a corruption.—MF. genevre, 'juniper; Cot. [It is well known that gin is flavoured with berries of the juniper.]—L. iuniperum, acc. of iuniperus, a juniper. See Juniper.

GINGER, the root of a certain plant. (F.—L.—Gk.—Skt.—Malayalam.) So called in Skt. (but by a popular etymology) because shaped like a horn; and the resemblance to a deer's antler is striking. In early use. ME. ginger; whence ginger-bred (ginger-bread); Chaucer, C. T. 13783 (B 2044). An older form gingiure (= gingivure) occurs in the Ancien Riwle, p. 370.—OF. gingibre, gingibre (Supp. to Godefroy, s.v. gingembre); Norm. dial. gingivre (Moisy, ed. 1895); mod. F. gingembre.—Late L. gingiber; L. zingiber, ginger.—Gk. γίνγιβας, ginger.—Skt. gr̥h̥gavara, ginger.—Skt. gr̥h̥ga-, a horn; and vera-, body (i.e. shape); adapted from Malayalam inchi-ver, green ginger; from inchi, a root (Yule). Der. ginger-bread.

GINGERLY, with soft steps. (F.—L.) 'Go gingerly; Skelton, Garl. of Laurell, l. 1203; see Dyce's note. Palsgrave has: 'Gyngery, a pas menu; as, allez a pas menu, ma fille.' Prob. formed, with E. suffix -ly, from OF. gensor, gensor, properly a comparative from OF. gent, but also itself used as a positive, with the sense 'pretty, delicate.'—OF. gent, gentle, orig. well-born.—Folk-L. gentum, from L. gentium, acc. of genius, born, pp. of gignere, to beget. See Gentle. (So in N. E. D.; cf. gent in Latzfeld.)

GINGHAM, a kind of cotton cloth. (F.—Malay.) Spelt gingham in 1615 (Yule).—F. ginggang = Malay ginggang, a striped or checkered cotton. (C. P. G. Scott.)

GINGLE, another spelling of Jingle, q. v.

GIPSY, the same as Gypsy, q. v.

GIRAFFE, the camelopard, an African quadruped with long neck and legs. (F.—Span.—Arab.) 'Giraffa, an Asian beast, the same with Camelopardus; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. First in 1594, spelt gyrassa; spelt giraffe in 1605. [Here giraffa = Span. girafa. We now use the F. form, = MF. giraffe (F. girafe).—Span. girafa. = Arab. zarāf or zarāfa (?), a camelopard; Rich. Dict. p. 772, col. 2. See Dozy, who gives the forms as zarāfa, zarāfa, and notes that it is also called jorāfa.]

GIRD (1), to enclose, bind round, surround, clothe. (E.) ME. girden, girden, gerden; the pp. girt is in Chaucer, C. T. 331 (A 329). AS. gyrdan, to gird, surround; Grein, i. 536. + Du. gorden; Icel. gyrða, to gird; Dan. giorde; Swed. girda; G. gürten; OSax. gurdian. β. These are weak verbs, of which the Teut. type is gurdjan-; from gurd-, weak grade of Teut. gerdan-* (pt. t. gard*) to enclose; as in Goth. bi-gairdan, to begird. Der. gird-er; gird-le, q. v.; girth, q. v. From the same root we also have garden, yard; and even horticulture, cohort, court. See Yard (1).

GIRD (2), to jest at, jibe. (E.) A peculiar use of ME. girden, girden, to strike, cut. 'Gurdeith of Gyles hed,' cut off Guile's head; P. Plowman, B. ii. 201. Of obscure origin. Hence, to gird at = to strike at, jest at; a gird is a cut, sarcasm; Tam. Shrew, v. 2. 58. ¶ Not from AS. gerd, gyrd, a rod, as that became E. yard (2); a connexion with MDu. geerde, a rod (Hexham) is possible; but not very probable.

GIRDLE, a band for the waist. (L.) ME. girdel, girdel; Chaucer, C. T. 360 (A 358). AS. gyrdel, a girdle; Mark, i. 6. 4. Du. gordel; Icel. gyrdill; Swed. gördel; G. gürtel. β. From the AS. gyrdan, to gird, with suffix -el; see Gird (1). Allied to girth.

GIRL, a female child, young woman. (E.) ME. gerle, girie, gryle, formerly used of either sex, and signifying either a boy or girl. In Chaucer, C. T. 3767 (A 3769) gerl is a young woman; but in C. T. 666 (A 664), the pl. girdes means young people of both sexes. In Will. of Palerne, 816, and King Alisaundre, 2802, it means 'young women; in P. Plowman, B. i. 33, it means 'boys; cf. B. x. 175. Answering to an AS. form gyr-el-, Teut. gur-wil-, a dimin. form from Teut. base gur-*. Cf. NFrics. gyr, a girl; Pomeran. guer, a child; O. Low G. gur, a child; see Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 528. Cf. Swiss gurre, gurrli, a depreciatory term for a girl; Sanders, G. Dict. i. 609, 641; also Norw. gorre, a small child (Asenich); Swed. dial. gärri, gurre (the same). Root uncertain. Der. girl-ish, girl-ish-ly, girl-ish-ness, girl-hood.

GIRON, GYRON, in heraldry, an eighth part of a shield. (F.—OHG.) It is made by drawing a diagonal line from the top (dexter) corner to the centre, and from the centre horizontally to the same side; a right-angled triangle. Spelt gyron, geron in Blount (1681).—MF. gyron, gyron; a term of blazonry; Cot.—MIIG. gier, OHG. géro, G. gehre, a gusset, a gore.—OHG. gēr, a spear; see Gore (2). GIRTH, the measure round the waist; the bellyband of a saddle. (Scand.) ME. gerth. 'His gerth and his stirrups also; Richard Coeur de Lion, 5733; and see Prompt. Parv. This is a Scand. form. = Icel. gyrd, a girdle, girth; gerð, girth round the waist; Swed. giord; Dan. giord, a girth. + Goth. gairda, a girdle, Mark, i. 6. Teut. type gerða-, f. From the Teut. base gerd-, to enclose; see Gird. Der. girth, verb; also written girt. Allied to girdle.

GIST, the main point or pith of a matter. (F.—L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. A legal term (see Blackstone, Comment. iv. 333) denoting the real ground of an indictment, or the point wherein the action lies. = OF. gist (F. git), it lies. Cf. the old F. proverb, given by Cotgrave, s. v. lievre. 'Ic scay bien ou gist le lievre, I know well which is the very point, or knot of the matter,' lit. I know well where the hare lies. This gist is the mod. F. git, and similarly we have, in modern French, the phrase 'tout git en cela,' the whole turns upon that; and again, 'c'est là que git le lievre,' there lies the difficulty, lit. that's where the hare lies; Hamilton's F. Dict. β. From the vb. gēsir, to lie, of which the 3 pers. pres. was gist (mod. F. git). = L. iacere, to lie; an intransitive verb allied to iacere, to throw. See Jet (1).

In old Southern and Midland English, the g almost always appears as y (often written ȝ); the modern hard sound of the g seems to be due to the influence of Northern English. The pt. t. is yaf or ȝaf, Northern gaf, changing to yeuen or yeuen in the pl. number; pp. yiuen, yiuen, ȝouen, ȝouen, rarely ȝifen, ȝifen. 'To gleame corne, spiciligeri;' Levis, 208. 20. 'To gleme corne, spicilegium facere; Gleamer of corne, spicilegium;' Huloot. Apparently due to some confusion with gleam: cf. prov. E. gleen to shine (E. D. D.). Der. glean-er.

Maid in the Mill, ii. 2. See examples in Nares. Prob. a peculiar use of the word below. To gleek sometimes meant to beat at the game of gleek.

GLEEK (2), a game at cards. (F.—Du.) So in Ben Jonson, Alchem. v. 2 (Subtle); it is said that Catharine of Arragon played 'at gleeke.' Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, sect. iv; vol. iii. p. 258, note, c. ed. 1840. See Nares. The earliest quotation in N.E.D. is dated 1533; but we find mention of the early-games 'post and glyeke' in Roy, Rede Me (ed. Arber), p. 117 (1538). It should rather have been spelt glik, but the e represents the f. i. The expression 'I shall gleek some of you' occurs in Greene's Tu quoque (Nares).—OF. glic, an old F. game at cards (mentioned in Rabelais, bk. i. c. 22). Riquetfort; also spelt ghelicque (Gouffroy). One object in the game was to get three cards alike (as three kings); this was called a gleek.—MDu. gelick, alike.—MDu. ge, ge, prefix (= AS. ge, G. ge, Goth. ga); and MDu. -lijck. Du. lijck, cognate with E. like; see Like. ¶ Hexham has MDu. gelick ofte ongelick spelen, 'to play at even or odds.'

'What, shall thy lubrical and glibbery mouth, &c.'; Ben Jonson, Poetaster, Act v (Tibullus). A native word; common in dialects; see F. D. D. Cf. Fries. glibberig, slippery; glippen, to slip; Du. glibberig, slippery; glibberig, to slide; related to glippen, to slip away; Low G. glibberig, slippery (Berghaus), glippig, glib, smooth (Schambach). Low G. glippen, v.; Dan. glippe, to fall, to slip. β. We also find a somewhat similar prov. F. glidderie, slippery, which is related to AS. glidan, to glide. Der. glib-ly, glibness.

GLIB (2), a lock of hair. (C.) 'Long glibes, which is a thick curled bush of heare, hanging downe over their eyes'; Spenser, View of State of Ireland; Globe ed. p. 630, col. 2.—Irish and Gael. glib, also Irish clib, a bushy lock of hair.

GLIB (3), to castrate; obsolete. (E.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, ii. 1. 149. The g is merely prefixed, and may have been suggested by Du. ge, as in MDu. ge-lubt, 'gilt'; Hexham. The orig. form is lib. 'Accapnare, to capon, to geld, to lib, to spaike'; Florio, ed. 1612. Here lib answers to an AS. lybban*, where y arose, by mutation, from an older u. Clearly cognate with Du. lubben, to castrate. See Left, adj.

GLIDE, to slide, flow smoothly. (F.) ME. gliden, pt. t. glod or gloud; Chaucer, C. T. 10707 (F 393). AS. glidan, Grein, i. 516. Du. gliden; Dan. glide; Swed. glida; G. gliden. Teut. type glidan-, pt. t. glaid, pp. glidanos*.

GLIMMER, to shine faintly. (E.) ME. glimeren, whence the pres. part. glimerand, Will. of Palern, 1427. The AS. form does not occur. β. Low G. glimmern, frequent. of glimmen, to shine; MSwed. glimra (Thre); Dan. glimre, to glimmer; glimmer, glitter, also mica; Swed. dial. glimmer, to glitter, glimmer, a glimmer, glitter; Swed. glimmer, mica (from its glitter); G. glimmer, a glimmer, mica; glimmern, to glimmer. β. The simple forms appear in Dan. glimme, to shine, Swed. glimma, to glitter, Du. glimmen, G. glimmen, to shine. Cf. also prov. G. glimm, a spark (Flügel); Swed. dial. glim, a glance (Rietz). We even find the sb. glim, brightness, in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1088; and AS. gleomu (for glimu*), splendour. All from Teut. glim-, weak grade of gleim-; see Gleam. Der. glimmer, sb.; and see below.

GLIMPSE, a short light, weak light; hurried glance or view. (E.) The p is excrement; the old word was glime. ME. glimsen, to glimpse; whence the sb. glimsing, a glimpse. 'Ye have some glimsing, and no parfit sight'; Chaucer, C. T. 10257 (E 238j). Formed by suffixing -s to the base glim-. See above.

GLINT, to glance, to shine. (Scand.) Obsolete; but important as having influenced the form of glee; see Gleance. For ME. glinten, to move quickly aside, to glance aside; in later E. to shine. 'His eye glente Asyde'; Chaucer, Troil. iv, 1223; cf. Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 70, 114, 671, 1026; B. 218.—Swed. dial. glünta, glünta, to slip or glance aside; G. glintzen, to make bright; from G. glintzen, brightness. β. We also find (really from a different root) MDan. glinte, to shine, a nasalised form of glit- (in glitter); MItG. glintzen, to shine.

GLISSADE, a sliding; a gliding step. (F.—Teut.) F. glissade, a sliding.—F. glisser, to slide, glide. From OF. glie, to glide; influenced by OF. glacier, F. glacier, to slide (Hatzfeld). β. OF. glie is from OItG. glisan (G. gleiten), to glide; see Glide. OF. glacier is from glace, ice; see Glacier. ¶ It seems simpler to derive glisser from Low G. glidschen or glisken, both meaning 'to glide', and secondary formations from the weak grade of Teut. glidan-*.

GLISTEN, GLISTER, to glitter, shine. (E.) These are mere extensions from the E. base glis-, to shine, which appears in ME. glisen, to shine; 'in glyynde wede—in glistering garment'; An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 91, l. 21. AS. glisan, to shine; Voc. 121. 25; glisnian, to gleam, Grein, i. 516; cf. Swed. dial. glis-a, to shine. A. Glisnian is formed from the base glis- by the addition of the n so often used to extend such bases; and hence we had ME. glisnian, with pres. part. glisnande, glittering; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 165. This ME. glisnian gave a later E. glissen, but the word is now spelt glit-i-en, with an excrement i, which is usually, however, not sounded. β. Similarly, from the base glis-, with suffixed -i and the frequentative -er, was formed ME. glisteren or glistren. 'The water glistered over al'; Gower, C. A. ii. 252; bk. v. 3734. Cf. MDu. glisteren (Oudemans); now nasalised into mod. Du. glinsteren, to glitter.

GLITTER, to gleam, sparkle. (Scand.) ME. gliteren (with one i); Chaucer, C. T. 979 (A 977); 'glitered and glent'; Gawain and the Grene Knight, 604.—Icel. glitra, to glitter; frequentative of glita, to shine, sparkle; Swed. glittra, to glitter; glitter, sb. glitter, spangle. Cf. AS. glitnian, to glitter, Mark, ix. 3; Goth. glitmunjan, to shine, Mark, ix. 3. β. Shorter forms appear in AS. glitan, to shine, Mone, Quellen, p. 355; Icel. glit, sb. glitter. γ. All from Teut. base glit-, weak grade of gleit-, as in OSax. glitan, G. gleissen, to shine. Cf. Gk. χλάω, luxury. From Idg. base glit-*, whence also gleam. See Gleam. Der. glitter, sb.; and see glisten, glister.

GLOAMING, twilight. (E.) 'Darker glowering brought the night'; Burns, Two Dogs, 232. But Hogg has: 'Tween the glowering and the mirk'; Song. Here the glowering means the evening glow of sunset. 'Fra the glowering of the nycht'; Wyntoun, Chron. iv. 7. 827. The oa is from AS. short o; as in wfen-glooming, twilight, in A. S. Hymnary (Surtees Soc.), 16. 16. But the o is usually long; as in wfen-gloim, evening glow, twilight; Grein, i. 64. Here glu-m is from Teut. root glu-*, as in AS. glowan, to glow. See Glow. ¶ Distinct from Gloom.

GLOAT, to stare, gaze with admiration. (Scand.) Also spelt glote. 'So he glotes [stares], and grins, and bites'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Mad Lover, ii. 2. 'Glotting [peeping] round her rock'; Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odyssey, xii. 150.—Icel. glötta, to grin, smile scornfully; Swed. dial. glöta, glöta, to peep (Rietz); G. glöten, to stare (Flügel).

GLOMERATE, to gather into a mass or ball. (L.) 'A river, which after many glomerating dances, increases Indus'; Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 70 (p. 69 in R.).—L. glomeratus, pp. of glomerare, to collect into a ball.—L. glomer-, for glomus*, stem of glomus, a ball or clow of yarn; allied to L. glomus, a globe. See Globo. Der. glomerat-ion, Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 832; also ag-glomerate, con-glomerate.

'Gose berries, grosnelles'; Du Wes (in Palsgrave), p. 912. From goose and berry; cf. goose-grass, &c. Plant-names are often whimsical and inappropriate; it is possible that the name was suggested by North E. grosero, gooseberries (Halliwell, Brockett). Burns has grozet, a gooseberry; To a Louse, st. 5. These forms are, apparently, from an OF. grose*, which occurs not only in OF. grosle, grosle, a gooseberry, but also in Irish grois-aid, Gael. grois-aid, W. gruys-en, a gooseberry, all borrowed from E. (Turner has groser-bush in 1548.) The OF. grosle is of Teutonic origin; viz. from MHG. krūs, curling, crisped; whence mod. G. krausbeere, a cranberry, rought gooseberry. Cf. Swed. krusbar, a gooseberry. [Du. krusbezie (lit. a cross-berry), is a singular corruption of krausbezie, by confusion between krus, a cross, and kraos, crisp, frizzled.] The G. kraus, Swed. krus, Du. kraos, crisp, frizzled, refer to the short crisp curling hairs upon the rougher kinds of the fruit; cf. the L. name vua crispa in Levins, given above.

All doubt as to the origin is removed by comparing Swed. dial. gär-bälg, a fat paunch, compounded of Swed. dial. gär (Swed. gorr), dirt, the contents of the intestines, and bälg, the belly. See Rietz, p. 225. See Gore (1). And see below.

Named from the Phrygian king Gordius (Gk. Γόρδιος), father of Midas, who, on being declared king, dedicated his chariot to Zeus, in the Acropolis of Gordium. The pole was fastened to the yoke by a knot of bark; and an oracle declared that whosoever should untie the knot should reign over all Asia. A corruption of gorgias; 'That were ioly and gorgyas in theyr gree'; Justes of May and June, in Hazlitt's Early Pop. Poet. ii. 117. — OF. gorgias, 'gorgeous, gaudy, flaunting, brave, gallant, gay, fine, trimme, quaintly clothed'; Cot. Cf. se gorgiaser, 'to flaunt, brave, or gallantise it'; id. ß. Perhaps formed from OF. gorgias, 'a gorget'; id.; as though to wear a gorget were a fine thing; or from the swelling of the throat considered as a symbol of pride. γ. Either way, the word depends upon F. gorge, the throat; and much light is thrown upon the word by another entry in Cotgrave, viz. 'se rengorger, to hold down [let sink down] the head, or thrust the chin into the neck, as some do in pride, or to make their faces look the fuller; we say, to bridle it.' ß. Note also Span. gorja, the throat; gorjal, a gorget, the collar of a doublet; gorguera, a gorget; gorguero, a kind of neckcloth, of ladies of fashion; gorguerin, a ruff round the neck. See Gorge. The editor of the F. poems of G. Coquillard has: 'Gorgias, élégant qui se rengorge, fat qui se pavane, dont la poitrine est couverte d'étoffes précieuses et de riches bijoux.' Der. gorgeous-ly, gorgeousness.

GORGON, a terrible monster. (L.—Gk.) In Shaks. Macb. ii. 3. 77. — L. Gorgon, Gorgō. — Gk. Γόργώ, the Gorgon, a monster of fearful aspect. — Gk. γόργος, fearful, terrible. Cf. OIrish gar, fierce; perhaps Skt. gar, to roar. Der. Gorgonian, Milton, P. L. ii. 611.

GORILLA, a kind of large ape. (Ofrican.) The word is an old one, lately revived. It occurs just at the end of a treatise called the Periplus (περίπλους), i.e. 'circumnavigation', written by a Carthaginian navigator named Hanno. This was originally written in the Punic language, and afterwards translated into Greek. He there describes some creatures 'which the interpreters called Gorilla'.

GORMANDIZE, to eat like a glutton. (F.—Scand.) In Shaks. Merch. of Ven. ii. 5. 3. Cotgrave has: 'Gourmandiser, to ravine, devour, glut, gormandize or gluttonize it.' The E. form was suggested by the previous existence in E. of the sb. gourmandise, as in 'they eate withoute gourmandise'; Sir T. Elyot, Castle of Helth, b. ii. c. 1. This is from OF. gourmandise, gluttony; Cot. Both the sb. gourmandise and the vb. gourmander are from the OF. gourmand, 'a glutton, gourmand, belly-god'; Cot. See Gourmand. Der. gormandiz-er, gormandiz-ing.

GORSE, a prickly shrub, furze. (E.) For gorst. ME. gorst, furze; Wyclif, Isaiah, lv. 13. AS. gorst. 'On gorst'; Luke, vi. 44; A. V. 'of a bramble-bush'; Vulgate, 'ou gorst'. ß. So named from its prickles. Cf. Skt. hr̥sh, to bristle; L. hirsūtus, horridus, bristly; L. hordeum, Du. gerst, barley. Brugmann, i. § 882. See Hirsute.

GOSHAWK, a kind of hawk. (E.) Lit. a 'goose-hawk.' ME. goshawk, Wyclif, Job, xxxix. 13. The connexion with goose is proved by two successive entries in Voc. 131. 21, 22; viz. 'Auca, gos;' and 'Aucarius, gos-hafuc.' Here gos = AS. gōs, a goose; and hafuc = a hawk. The Vocabulary is ascribed to the tenth century.

+ Icel. gū-haukr, similarly formed. And see below.

GOSLING, a young goose. (E.) In Shak. Cor. v. 3. 35. ME. goslyng; Prompt. Parv. Here gose = ME. gōs = AS. gōs, a goose. The suffix -ling is a double diminutive, = ling. Cf. duckling, from duck. See Goose.

GOSPEL, the life of Christ. (E.) ME. gospel, Chaucer, C. T. 483 (A 481). Also godspel, P. Plowman, C. xiii. 100. AS. godspell, Grein, i. 519. The orig. sense was 'good story,' to translate L. euangelium. We find: 'Euangelium (sic), id est, bonum nuntium, godspell.' Voc. 314. 8. But the o (of AS. gōd, good) was soon shortened before dyf, and a more obvious popular etymology arose, as if god-spell meant 'story of God,' i.e. Christ. Hence, when the AS. word was introduced into Iceland, it took the form gudspjall = God-story, and not gōd-spjall = good story. And the OHG. word was likewise gotspil (= God-story), and not gōt-spil. ¶ It is interesting to find the orig. interpretation in the Ormulum, l. 157 of the Introduction.

GOSSAMER, fine spider-threads seen in fine weather. (E.) ME. gossamer, Chaucer, C. T. 10573 (F 259). Spelt gossomer by W. de Biblesworth (13th cent.); Wright's Vocab. i. 147, last line; and in Nominalia, ed. Skeat, l. 645, we have 'a web of gossamer.' ME. gossamer is lit. goose-summer, and the prov. E. (Craven) name for gossamer is summer-goose; see Craven Gloss. It is named from the time of year when it is most seen, viz. during St. Martin's summer (early November); geese were eaten on Nov. 11 formerly. Cf. Lowl. Sc. (popular variant) go-summer, Martinmas. β. We may note, further, that Jamieson's Scottish Dict. gives summer-colt, i.e. summer-colt, as the name of exhalations seen rising from the ground in hot weather; and the Yorkshire expression for the same is very similar. 'When the air is seen on a warm day to undulate, and seems to rise as from hot embers, it is said, "see how the summer-colt rides!"' Whitby Glossary, by F. K. Robinson; quoted from Marshall. γ. In the same Whitby Glossary, the word for 'gossamer' is entered as summer-gauze. This may be confidently pronounced to be an ingenious corruption, as the word gauze is quite unknown to Middle-English and to the peasants of Craven, who say summer-goose; see Carr's Craven Glossary, where the summer-colt and summer-goose are synonymous. δ. The G. summer means not only 'summer,' but also 'gossamer,' in certain compounds. The G. name for 'gossamer' is not only summer-fäden (summerthreads), but also mädchen-sommer (Maiden-summer), der-alte-Weiber-sommer (the old women's summer), or Mechtilde-sommer; see E. Müller. It was also simply known as der fliegende sommer, the flying summer (Weigand). This makes G. summer = summer-film; and gives to gossamer the probable sense of 'goose-summer-film.' The connexion of the word with summer is further illustrated by the Du. zomerdraden, gossamer, lit. 'summer-threads,' and the Swed. sommertråd, gossamer, lit. 'summer-thread.' It may be observed that the spelling gossamer (with a) is certainly corrupt. It should rather be gossamer or gossomer.

GOSSIP, a sponsor in baptism, a crony. (E.) The old sense was 'sponsor in baptism,' lit. 'god-relative.' The final p stands for h, and is for ds. ME. gossib, Chaucer, C. T. 5825 (D 243); earlier spelt godshib. See Poems of Will. of Shoreham, ed. Wright, pp. 68-70, where occur the words gossibbe, sibbe, and gossibrede (also spelt godshrede), a derivative from godshib by suffixing ME. -rede (= AS. -rēden, E. -red in kind-red). β. Thus gossip stands for godshib, i.e. related in God; AS. godshibb, Wulfstan, ed. Napier, p. 160; m. pl. godshibbas. 'The f. sb. sib in AS. means 'peace,' but there was a derived word meaning 'relative.' Thus, in Luke, xiv. 12, the Northumb. glosses to Latin cognatus are (in one MS.) sibbo and (in the other) gossibbe; and again, in the Ormulum, l. 307, it is said of Elizabeth that she was 'Sante Marje sibb,' i.e. Saint Mary's relative. Cf. Icel. sif, affinity; sif, a relative; G. sippe, affinity; pl. sippen, kinsmen; Goth. sibn, relationship, adoption as sons, Gal. iv. 5; unsibis, lit. unpeaceful, hence, lawless, wicked, Mark, xv. 28; unsibja, iniquity, Matt. vii. 23. These are further related to Skt. sabhyā, relating to an assembly, fit for an assembly, trusty, faithful; from sabhu, an assembly. Brugmann, i. §§ 124 (4), 567.

GOTH, one of a certain early Germanic tribe. (Late L. - Gothic.) Theodorici, the king of Goths; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, bk. i. pr. 4. 53. = Late L. Gūthi, pl. Goths. = Goth. Gūths, or Gutans, pl.; cf. Goth. Gut-piuda, the Gothic people, where piuda (AS. þeod) means 'people.' Der. Gothic.

GOUGE, a chisel with a hollowed blade. (F. - Late L. - C. ?)

Formerly googe. 'By googing of them out;' Ben Jonson, The Devil is an Ass, A. ii. sc. 1 (Meercraft). 'An yron googe;' Naval Accounts, p. 240 (1497). = F. gouge, 'a joiners googe;' Cot. Cf. Span. gubia, a gouge; Ital. gubbia, gubbia (Torriano); Port. gubia. Late L. gubia, a kind of chisel, in Isidore of Seville, lib. xix. De Instrumentis Lignariis (Brachet); also gubium (Ducange). β. Of obscure origin; but perhaps Celtic. = OIrish gubhan, a beak; W. gylf (N. E. D.).

GOULD, a large fleshy fruit. (F. - L.) ME. gourd, Chaucer, C. T. 17031 (H 82). = F. gourde, formerly spelt gouhoude or cougourde, both of which spellings are in Cotgrave. Gourde is short for gouhoude, which is a corruption of cougourde. = L. cucurbita, a gourd; evidently a reduplicated form.

GOURMAND, a glutton. (F. - Scand.) Also gormand, gormond. 'To that great gormond, lat Apicius;' Ben Jonson, Sejanus, A. i. sc. 1. 'To gurmander, albigurige;' Levins, 83. 22. = F. gourmand, 'a glutton, gormand, belly-god;' Cot. β. Of Scand. origin. = Norw. gurmen, inclined to gorge oneself (Ross); from gurma, (1) to stir up mud; (2) to eat steadily and continually; (3) to gorge oneself (Ansen, Ross). Cf. Icel. gorm; Norw. gurm, ooze, mud, grounds of coffee, &c., allied to gor, gure; see Gore (1). The Span. gourmar means 'to vomit.' Der. gourmand-ize or gourmand-ise, q. v.

GOUT (1), a drop, a disease. (F. - L.) 'Gouts of blood;' Maeb. ii. 1. 46. 'And he was al-so sik mid goute,' i.e. with the disease; Rob. of Glouc. p. 564; l. 11865. The disease was supposed to be caused by a defluxion of humours; so that it is the same word as gout, a drop. = OF. goute, goutte, a drop; also, 'the gowt;' Cot. = L. gutta, a drop. Der. gout-y, gout-iness.

GOUT (2), taste. (F. - L.) Merely borrowed from F. gout, taste. = L. gustus, taste; cf. gustäre, to taste; from the same root as E. chose. See Choose.

GOVERN, to steer, direct, rule. (F. - L. - GK.) ME. gouverner, (with u for v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 44; l. 1036. = OF. gouverner, later gouverner. = L. gubernāre, to steer a ship, guide, direct. (Borrowed from Gk.) = Gk. κυβερνῶν, to steer. Cf. Lithuan. kumbriti, to steer. Der. govern-able; govern-ess, Mids. Nt. Dream, ii. 1. 103; government, Tempest, i. 2. 75 (the older term being govern-ance, as in Chaucer, C. T. 12007, C 73); govern-ment-ol; govern-ur, ME. gouverneur (n for v), Wyclif, James, iii. 4, from OF. gouverneur < L. acc. gubernatorem, a steersman; governor-ship.

GOWAN, a daisy. (Scand.) 'And pu'd the gowans fine;' Burns, Auld Lang Syne, st. 2. Also formerly, a buttercup; North E. gowlan, Sc. yellow gowan, corn marigold. Named from the colour. = Icel. gulr, Swed. gul, Dan. gul, yellow. See Yellow.

GOWK, a cuckoo; a foolish person. (Scand.) 'Thare galede the gowke,' there sang the cuckoo; Allit. Morte Arthure, l. 927. And see E. D. D. = Icel. gukr, a cuckoo; Swed. guk + AS. gēac (prov. E. yeke), a cuckoo; G. gauh. Tent. type gawkz, m.

GOWN, a loose robe. (F. - Late L.) ME. gowne, Chaucer, C. T. 393; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 227. = OF. gune, gonne, gounne, a long coat (Goddefroy). = Late L. gouna, a skin, fur (scholiast on Geo. iii. 383); also a garment of fur (8th cent.) Ducange. Hence also Ital. gonna, OSpan. and Prov. gonna, a woman's gown. Cf. also Byzantine Gk. gōvva, a coarse garment. ¶ Sometimes said to be Celtic, which is doubtful; see Stokes-Fick, p. 281. Cf. W. gun, a gown, loose robe; Irish gunn, Gael. and Corn. gun, a gown; Manx goon; but these may be borrowed from E. Der. gown-man.

GRAB, to seize, clutch. (E.) A somewhat vulgar word, but given in Rider, Eng.-Lat. Diet. (1589). Prob. of native origin; cf. E. Fries. grabbig, greedy, grabbeln, to grab at; + Du. grabbell, a scramble, grabbelen, to scramble for; Low G. grabbela, to grab at; Swed. grabbja, to grasp. Very near to Oskt. grabbj, to seize, a Vedic form, of which the later form is grāb; cf. Oslav. grabitj, to plunder. The standard F. word is gripe. See Grapple, Gripe, Grasp.

GRACE, favour, mercy, pardon. (F. - L.) ME. grace, in early use; Layamon, 6616 (later text). = OF. grace, L. gratia, favour. = L. grātus, dear, pleasing. Brugmann, i. §§ 524, 632. Der. graceful, grace-ful-y, grace-ful-ness; grac-i-ous, Chaucer, C. T. 8489 (E 613); grac-i-ous-ly, grac-i-ous-ness; grace-less, grace-less-ly, grace-less-ness. And see grateful.

GRADATION, an advance by short steps, a blending of tints. (F. - L.) In Shak. Oth. i. 1. 37. = OF. gradation, 'a gradation, step, degree.' Cot. = L. gradatiōnem, acc. of gradatio, an ascent by steps. Cf. L. gradatim, step by step. = L. gradus, a step. See Grade. Der. gradation-al, gradation-ed.

GRADE, a degree, step in rank. (F. - L.) Of late introduction into E.; see Todd's Johnson; though used as a mathem. term (= degree) as early as 1511. [But the derived words graduate, &c., have been long in use; see below.] = F. grade, 'a degree;' Cot. = L. gradum, acc., a step, degree. = L. gradī (pp. gressus), to step, go. Brugmann, i. § 635; ii. § 707; Stokes-Fick, p. 118. Der. grad-at-ion, q. v., grad-i-ent, q. v., grad-u-al, q. v., grad-u-ate, q. v. Doublet, gradis. From the same source are de-gress, de-grade, retro-grade; in-gred-i-ent; also ag-gress-ive, con-gress, di-gress, e-gress, in-gress, pro-gress, trans-gress.

GRADIENT, gradually rising; a slope. (L.) A coined word, used in modern mechanics. = L. gradient-, stem of gradient, pres. part. of gradī, to walk, advance. See Grade.

GRADUAL, advancing by steps. (L.) 'By gradual scale.' Milton, P. l. v. 483. [Also as sb., a gradual (see Blount), a service-book called in Latin graduale, and more commonly known in ME. by the F. form gradal.] = Late L. gradualis*, but only used in the neut. graduale (often gradūle), to signify a service-book 'containing the portions to be sung by the choir, so called from certain short phrases after the Epistle sung in gradibus' [upon the steps]; Proctor, On the Common Prayer, p. 8. Formed, with suffix -ilis, from gradū, decl. stem of gradus, a step. See Grade. Der. gradual-ly. And see grail (1).

GRADUATE, one who has received a university degree; as verb, to take a degree, to mark off degrees. (L.) Cotgrave has: 'Graduc, graduated, having taken a degree'; and also 'Gradé, graduate, or having taken a degree.' 'I would be a graduate, sir, no freshman'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Fair Maid, A. iv. sc. 2 (Dancer). And as sb., in Barclay, Ship of Fools, l. 2. = Late L. gradūatus, one who has taken a degree; still in use at the universities. = L. gradu-, decl. stem of gradus, a degree; with pp. suffix -atus. Der. graduation, graduate.

GRAFF, GRAFF, to insert buds on a stem. (F. - L. - Gk.) The form graft is due to a confusion with grafted, which was orig. the pp. of graff. Shak. has grafted, Macb. iv. 3. 51; but he also rightly has graft as a pp. 'Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants'; Rich. III, iii. 7. 127. Also the verb to graft, As You Like It, iii. 2. 124. Cf. Rom. xi. 17. ME. graffen, to graft; P. Plowman, B. v. 137. β. The verb is formed from the sb. graft, a scion; found in 1308 (N. E. D.). 'This bastard graft shall never come to growth'; Shak. Jacr. 1062. = OF. graffe, grafe, a style for writing with, a sort of pencil; also greffe, 'a graft, a slip or young shoot'; Cot. [So named from the resemblance of the cut slip to the shape of a pointed pencil. Similarly we have L. graphium, (1) a small style. (2) a small shoot, scion, graft.] = L. graphium, a style for writing with. = Gk. γραφιον, another form of γραφειον, a style, pencil. = Gk. γραφειν, to write, grave. See Graphic. Der. graft-er.

GRAIL (1), a gradual, or service-book. (F. - L.) ME. graille, grayle. 'Grayle, bokke, gradale, vel gradualis'; Prompt. Parv. p. 207; and see Way's note. = OF. grail; Godefroy. = Late L. gradūle; see explanation s.v. Gradual.

GRAIL (2), the Holy Dish at the Last Supper. (F. - L.) In Spenser, P. Q. ii. 10. 53. 'Fulfil the merualls of the great'; Arthur and Merlin, ed. Köhling, 222. See my Pref. to Joseph of Arimathea, published for the Early Eng. Text Society. It is there shown that the true etymology was, at an early period, deliberately falsified by a change of San Graal (Holy Dish) into Sung Real (Royal Blood), but pervasively made to mean Real Blood. = OF. grail, grail, grasal, a flat dish, Prov. grasal, Late L. gradūle, grasūle, a flat dish, a shallow vessel. [The various forms in OF. and Low L. are very numerous; see the articles in Godefroy, DuCange, and Charpentier's Supplement to DuCange.] β. The word would appear to represent a Folk-L. type cratilis*, formed from Late L. cratus, a cup, substituted for crater, a bowl. See Crater. It was, fabulously, the dish in which Joseph of Arimathea is said to have collected our Lord's blood.

GRAIL (3), fine sand. (F.) Spenser uses the word in a way peculiarly his own; he seems to have meant 'fine particles'; he speaks of 'sandie graille', and of 'golden grayle'; F. Q. i. 7. 6; Visions of Belshazzar, at 12. Perhaps suggested by MF. graisle, 'thinner, small, little'; Cot. (mod. F. grille). = L. gracilis, slender. ¶ It is, of course, possible that Spenser was merely coining a new form of gravel.

GRAIN, a single small hard seed. (F. - L.) ME. grein, greyn, grain; Chaucer, C. T. 508 (A 506) P. Plowman, B. x. 139. = OF. grain. = L. grānum, a grain, corn. ¶ Irish grain, W. grynyn. Cognate with E. corn. See Corn. Der. grain-grin, also grunle, q.v. grange, q.v. granary, q.v., grainite, q.v. β. Grain in the sense of fibre of wood is the same word; cf. F. grain des pierres, the grain of stones (Hamilton). The phrase 'to dye in grain' meant to dye of a fast colour, by means of kermes, &c.; whence grained, deeply dyed, Hamlet, iii. 4. go. The phrase is an old one; see P. Plowman, B. ii. 15, and the note.

GRATATORY, long-legged, said of birds. (L.) A term applied to wading birds. Coined from L. gratitor, a walker on stilts. = L. grallae, stilts, contracted from gratula*, formed from the base grad- in L. gradi, to walk. See Grade. Brugmann, § 587 (4). Der. gratitator-ial.

GRAMARYE, magic. (F. - L. - Gk.) Used by Scott, Lay of the Last Minstrel, iii. 11, vi. 17; who took it from 'King Estmere' in Percy's Reliques, where it occurs in a passage the genuineness of which is doubtful; see Percy Folio MS., ii. 604, l. 144, ii. 607, l. 274. The same word as ME. gramary, gramory, skill in grammar, or (jestingly) skill in magic. 'Cowthe ye by youre gramery reche us a drynk, I shuld be more mery'; Towneley Myst. p. 90. 'I se thou can of gramory and som what of arte'; id. p. 311. = OF. gramaire, grammar; see Grammar. β. I desire here to record my opinion, that the word glamour, magic, also used by Scott in the same poem (iii. 9), and taken by him from the expression 'They coost the glamer o'er her' in Johnny Faa (printed in Ritson's Sc. Poems, ii. 176), is nothing but another form of gramere, i.e. grammar. The note in Vigfusson's Dict. asserting the identity of glamour with Icel. glámur, the moon, cannot be seriously entertained. I see that Littré (s. v. grimoire) agrees with me as to glamour; cf. grimoire in Hatzfeld. [This note, now confirmed (see N. E. D.), first appeared in 1884.]

GRAMERCY, thanks! (F. - L.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 2. 128. Formerly grand mercy, Chaucer, C. T. 8064 (E 1088). = F. grand merci, great thanks. See Grand and Mercy.

GRAMINEOUS, relating to grass. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Coined from L. grāmin-, stem of grāmin, grass. Der. graminivorous, grass-eating, from grāmini-, decl. stem of grāmin, and vorare, to devour; see Voracious. And see Grass.

GRAMMAR, the science of the use of language. (F. - L. - Gk.) ME. grammere, Chaucer, C. T. 13466 (B 1726). = OF. gramaire (12th cent.; see Hatzfeld). = Late L. grammatica, grammar (Hatzfeld). = Gk. γραμματική, grammar. = Gk. γραμματικός, knowing one's letters (see below). Der. grammar-ian, grammar-school; from the same source, grammatical; see below.

GRAMMATICAL, belonging to grammar. (F. - L. - Gk.) 'Those grammatic flats and shallows'; Milton, Of Education (R.). Grammatical is in Palsgrave, page v. = F. grammatical, 'grammatical'; Cot. Formed, with suffix -al, from L. grammaticus, grammatical. = Gk. γραμματικός, versed in one's letters, knowing the rudiments. = Gk. γραμματ-, stem of γράφω, a letter. = Gk. γράφειν, to write. Der. grammatical-ly.

GRAMPUS, a kind of fish. (F. - L.) 'Grampus, a fish somewhat like a whale, but less'; Kersey, ed. 1715. Sir T. Herbert mentions 'porpice, grampese (the sus marinus), mullet,' &c.; Travels, p. 404, ed. 1655 (or p. 384, Todd's Johnson). Spelt grampese in Skelton, Speke Parrot, l. 309. = AF. grampais, Black Book of Admiralty, l. 152; a changed form of OF. craspois, crapois, graspais, grapais (Godefroy); by substituting OF. grand, great, for OF. cras, gras, fat. Cf. Late L. craspeis in Thorpe, Anc. Laws, l. 300. = L. crassum piscem, acc., fat fish. See Grasse and Fish. ¶ The word porpise is similarly formed. See Porpoise.

GRANARY, a storehouse for grain. (L.) 'Granary or Garner'; Kersey, ed. 1715. Also granarie in Levins, 104. 24. = L. granārium (pl. granāria), a granary. = L. grānum, corn. See Grain and Garner. Doublet, garner; also, grange.

GRAND, great, large. (F. - L.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 274. ME. grant, graunt; not much used formerly, except in compounds. The comp. grandame occurs in St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 22, l. 32. Gravuit-father is in Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 3. Fabian has grand-mother, vol. i. c. 124; ed. Ellis, p. 102. = OF. grand, great. = L. grandem, acc. of grandis, great. Der. grand-child, grandame, grand-sire, grand-father, grand-on, grand-mother, grand-daughter; grand-ly, grand-mess. And see below.

GRANDEE, a Spanish nobleman. (Span. - L.) Spelt grandy; 'in a great person, right worshipful sir, a right honourable grandy'; Burton, Anat. of Melancholy, To the Reader, ed. 1651, p. 35. Spelt grande, B. Jonson, Alchemist, A. iii. = Span. grande, great; also, a nobleman. = L. grandem, acc. of grandis, great. See Grand.

See further under Grape.

GRASP, to seize, hold fast. (F.) MF. grasper, used in the sense of 'grape', to feel one's way; as in 'And grasped by the wallies to and fro'; Chaucer, C. T. 4291 (A 4293); also in Wyclif, Job, v. 14, xii. 25 (earlier version), where the later version has grape. Just as clasp was formerly claps, so grasp stands for graps. The ME. grap stands for grap-sen, 'That grasped here and there as doth the blynde'; Hoccleve, De Reg. Princ., ed. Wright, p. 8, st. 21 (l. 212). Prob. from AS. type græpsan* (Teut. type græpsan*), from græpsan, to gripe. Cf. EFris. grapsen, to gripe. See Gripe. Similar transpositions of sp are seen in the prov. MHG. gruowe, young plants; and E. green. See Grow. Der. gras-plot, gras-y; gras-hopper = AS. gær-hoppa, Ps. lxxvii. 51, ed. Spelman; graze < ME. grasin, Prompt. Parv. p. 210, from AS. grasian (Icel. græsja); graz-ier = graz-er (cf. how-er, law-er).

GRATE (1), a frame-work of iron-bars. (Late L. — L.) ME. grate. Grate, or trellys wyndowe, cancellus; Prompt. Parv. p. 207. — Late L. grata, a grating; cf. Ital. grata, a grate, gridiron. A variant of Late L. crata, a grating, crate. — L. crata, a hurdle. See Crate. Thus grate is a mere variant of crate, due to a weakened pronunciation. Der. grat-ing, a dimin. form; grat-ed.

GRATE (2), to rub, scrape, scratch, creak. (F. — Teut.) MF. graten. 'Grate brede [to grate bread], mico.' Prompt. The first syllable appears again in in-grate, and is derived from OF. grat, likewise preserved in OF. in-grat, 'ungrateful'. Cot. — L. grātus, pleasing. See Grace. Cot. — L. grauem, acc. of gravis, heavy, grave; + Goth. kauris, heavy, burdensome, 2 Cor. x. 10; Gk. βαρὺς, heavy; Skt. grāhu-, heavy. Brugmann, i. § 665. Der. grave-ly, grave-ness; also grav-i-ty (Shak.), from F. gravi-té (Cot.), from L. acc. gravi-tatem; grav-i-ate, grav-i-at-ion; grav-i-d, from L. gravidus, burdened. From the same root, grief, q. v.; also ag-gravate, ag-grive, hag-meter.

GRAVEL, fine small stones. (F. — C.) ME. gravel (with u for v), in early use; in King Horn, ed. Austin (glossary). — OF. graw, a similar sauce, which seems to have been misread as graw; cf. 'conyngs en graw' (misprinted graw). Wright, Vol. of Vocab., i. 174. See Godefroy. — L. grāuitus, full of grains (with apparent allusion to the thickened broth). — L. grānum, a grain; see Grain and Grenade. Thus gravy appears to be an error for grawny. Torriano explains Ital. granato, grawito, as 'kernelly or corny as honey, figs, soap, or oyl is sometimes in winter.' See N. E. D.

GRAY, ash-coloured; white mixed with black. (E.) ME. gray, grey. 'Hire cyen gray as glas'; Chaucer, C. T. 152. Omerc. grai (O. E. AS. grasian, to graze. + Icel. græsja; Dan. grasse; Du. grazen; G. grasen. See Grass. Der. graz-er.

GRAZE (2), to touch lightly in passing and glance off. (E.) It appears to be merely a peculiar use of graze (1); and was used of cannon-balls that rebounded from the grass. 'That the bullet's grazing. Break out into a second course of mischief.' Hen. V. iv. 3. 105. 'Those bullets which graze on the ground do most mischief.' Fuller, Holy and Profane State, v. 1. 2. So also G. graven, to graze (pasture), also to roll and bound, as cannon-balls (Flügel); so also Dan. græsse (Larsen).

'To Grave a ship, to preserve the calking, by laying over a mixture of tallow or train-oil, rosin, &c. boiled together; Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. This verb merely means to smear with grave or graves, i.e. a tallowy mess. Perhaps a native word; the AS. grēga, glossed olla (pot) may have meant 'melting-pot.' Cf. EFr. grāse, pl., greaves. Also MSwed. grēfuvar, dirt, ljus-grēfuvar, candle-dirt, refuse of tallow (Ihre); Swed. dial. grēvar, sb. pl. leavings of tallow, greaves (Rietz); Westphal. grāuwe; Low G. grēven, greaves; Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 541. + G. grēbe, the fibrous remains of lard, after it has been fried (Flügel); OHG. grūpo, grēbo.

GREBE, an aquatic bird. (F.) Not in Johnson. First found in Pennant (1766). - F. grèbe, a grebe (Hamilton); also grèpe, in the dial. of Lyons (Puitsiel). Of unknown origin; Cot. gives griathe, 'a sea-mew,' as a Savoyard word.

GRECE, a flight of steps. (F.-L.) 'A grece there was of stepps fiftene.' Cursor Mundi, l. 10584. Really a pl. of grece, a step. - OF. grā, a step (Rouffort). - L. gradus, acc. of gradus, a step. See GRADE and DEGREE. β. Hence grece was often improperly used to mean 'a (single) step.' Shak. spells it grise; Oth. i. 3. 200.

GREEDY, hungry, voracious. (E.) ME. greði, greedy; Ancien Riwle, p. 416; whence greediness, id. p. 416. AS. grēdig, grēdig; Grein, i. 525. + Icel. grādigr; MSwed. grādig, grādīg (Ihre); Dan. grādīg; Goth. grādīgus. Teut. type grādugoz*; an adj. formed from Teut. grādaz, hunger, greed; as seen in Goth. grādus, hunger, Icel. grāðr, hunger, and in AS. grād-um, greedily, a dat. pl. form. Further allied to Skt. grādhra-greedy, grdh, to be greedily; grādhra-s, greed; Macdonell. (✓GERDIL.) Dor. greed-i-ly, greed-i-ness. The sb. greed, though not found before 1609, is a perfectly correct form.

GREEN, of the colour of growing plants. (E.) ME. green, grene, Chaucer, C. T. 6443 (D 861); used as sb., 6580 (D 998). AS. grēne, Grein, i. 526. [Here z represents the i-mutation of n, so that the base is grō-.] + Du. groen; Icel. grœnn (for grœnn); Dan. and Swed. grön; G. grün, MHG. gruene, OHG. krūni. Teut. type grün-joz*, earlier type grū-niz* (Sicvers). Allied to AS. grēowan, to grow. Teut. base grā-, grō-; see GRASS. Thus green is the colour of growing herbs. Dor. green-ness, the phrase 'wortes of greenes' is used to translate holera herbarum in The Anglo-Saxon and Early English Psalters, ed. Stevenson (Surtess Soc.), vol. i. p. 111; Ps. xxxvi. 2. Also green-cloth, green-crop, greengage, green-grocer (see grocer), green-house, green-ish, green-ish-ness, green-room, green-sand, green-stone; also green-sward (s.v. sward).

GREENGAGE, a kind of plum. (E.) This stands for green gage, where gage is a personal name. It is the French plum called la grosse Reine Claude, and is written as Green Gage in P. Miller, Gardener's Dictionary, 7th ed. 1759, s.v. Prunus. There is also a blue gage and a purple gage. 'Plum; of the many sorts, the following are good: Green and blue gage, Fotheringham, &c.; C. Marshall, Intro. to Gardening, 1706, p. 350. In R. Hogg's Fruit Manual, 4th ed. 1875, it is said to have been introduced 'at the beginning of the last century, by Sir T. Gage, of Hengrave Hall, near Bury, who procured it from his brother, the Rev. John Gage, a Roman Catholic priest then resident in Paris.' The following account is more explicit, and gives the name as Sir William Gage. In Hortus Collinsonianus, p. 60, are some Memoranda by Mr. Collinson, written 1759-1766, where is the following entry. 'On Plums. Mem. I was on a visit to Sir William Gage, at Hengrave, near Bury: he was then near 70. He told me that he first brought over, from France, the Grosse Reine Claude, and introduced it into England; and in compliment to him the Plum was called the Green Gage; this was about the year 1725.' (J. A. H. Murray.) β. It must be added, that Mr. Hogg shows that there is reason for supposing that this plum was known in England at least a century earlier than the above date, but was then called the Verdouch, from the Ital. verdocchio, obviously derived from verde (L. viridis), green, but this does not affect the etymology of the present name. 'The green gage' occurs, with reference to plums, in Foutie's Lame Lover, A. iii. (1770).

GREET (1), to salute. (E.) ME. greeten, Chaucer, C. T. 8890 (E 1014); Ancien Riwle, p. 430. AS. grētan, grētan, to weep; Grein, i. 525. + Icel. grēta; Dan. græde; Swed. gråta; Goth. grētan, to weep, pt. i. gai-grēt. Teut. type grētan*, with reduplication. pt. i. Perhaps allied to Skt. hrad, to resound, roar, hrād-as, noise.

GREGARIOUS, associating in flocks. (L.) 'No birds of prey are gregarius.' Ray, on the Creation, pt. i. (R.). - L. gregarius, belonging to a flock (with suffix -ous). - L. greg-, base of grex, a flock; with suffix -arius. Cf. OIrish grag, a herd of horses; W. gre, a flock; Stokes-Fick, p. 117. Also Gk. ἀγέειρος, to assemble (Pellwitz). Dor. gregarius-ly, gregarius-ness; from the same source, ag-greg-ate, con-greg-ate, re-greg-ate, ag-greg-ious.

GRENADE, a kind of war-missile. (F.-Span.-L.) Formerly also granado, which is the Span. form. 'Granado, an apple filled with delicious grains; there is also a warlike engine, that being filled with gunpowder and other materials, is wont to be shot out of a wide-mouthed piece of ordnance, and is called a granado for the likeness it hath with the other granado in fashion, and being fully stuffed as the other granado is, though the materials are very different.' Mount's Gloss. ed. 1674. Spelt granados, Evelyn, Diary, June 1, 1667. - OF. grenade, 'a pomegranate; also a ball of wildfire, made like a pomegranet.' GREY, the same as GRAY, q. v.

GREYHOUND, a swift slender hound. (E.) 'Grehoundes he hadde as swift as fowel in flight.' Chaucer, C. T. 190. Also spelt grehound, Ancien Riwle, p. 332, last line. AS. grīghund, Voc. 276. 3; where grīg = grīg (Icel. grēy), for Teut. grāujō*. Cf. Icel. grēyhundr, a greyhound; composed of grēy, a dog, and hundr, a hound. The Icel. grēy is also used alone in the sense of greyhound or dog; and the Icel. grēyhaka means a bitch. ¶ Whatever be the source of Icel. grēy, there is no pretence for connecting it with F. gray, adj. for which the Icel. word is grár.

GRIDDLE, a pan for baking cakes. (F.-L.) ME. gredil, a gridiron (in the story of St. Lawrence), Ancien Riwle, p. 122. Called a gridle (-griddle) in North. Norm. dial. grīdīl, Moisy.] - Late L. crīdīlūm*, for L. crīdīcula, a gridle, dimin. of crīdīs, a hurdle. [W. grēidīl is from E.] See CRATE, and see GRILL. Dor. From the same ME. gredil, by a slight change, was made the ME. gredire, a griddle, P. Plowman, C. iii. 130. Very likely, this was at first a mere change of l to r, but the latter part of the word thus became significant, the ME. ire meaning 'iron'; hence our grid-iron, spelt gyrdiron in Levens, 163, 39.

GRIDE, to pierce, cut through. (E.) A favourite word with Spenser; see F. Q. ii. 8. 36; Sheph. Kal. February, l. 4; Virgil's Gnat, 254. And cf. 'griding sword'; Milton, P. L. vi. 329. A mere metathesis of grid, ME. girden, to strike, pierce, cut through, used by Chaucer, and borrowed from him by later poets. 'Thurgh gird [pierced through] with many a grevous bloody wound'; Chaucer, C. T. 1012. See GRID (2). ¶ The same word is used metaphorically in the phrase 'to gird at'; i.e. to strike at, try to injure; see Shak. 2 Hen. IV. i. 2. 7; so also a gird is a cut, a sarcasm, Tam. Shrew, v. 2. 58.

GRIDIRON; see under GRIDDLE.

GRIEF, great sorrow. (F.-L.) In early use. ME. grief, gref; spelt gref, Floriz and Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, 187. - OF. grief, gref, adj. burdensome, heavy, sad; as sb., grief (Godefroy). - L. græuem, acc. of gravis, heavy, sad, grave. See GRAVE (2). Dor. grīve, &c. See below.

GRIEVE, to afflict; to mourn. (F.-L.) ME. greuen (with u=v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 41, l. 969; P. Plowman, C. v. 95. - OF.

griever, to grieve, burden, afflict. — L. grauāre, to burden. — L. grauis, heavy (above). Der. griev-ous (ME. griuous, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 77); griev-ous-ly, griev-ous-ness; griev-ance, ME. greuance, Gower, C. A. l. 260, bll. iii. l. 206; and see above.

GRIFFIN, GRIFFON, an imaginary animal. (F. — L. — Gk.) Griffin is a weakened spelling; a better spelling is griffon. ME. griffon, Chaucer, C. T. 2135 (A. 2133); King Alisaunder, 496. — F. griffon, 'a griffin, or griffin.' Cot. Formed with suffix -on, from late L. griffus, a griffin. — L. griffin, an extended form of griffon, a griffin. — Gk. griffon (stem griffon), a griffin, a fabulous creature named from its hooked beak. — Gk. griffon, curved; also, hook-nosed, hook-beaked. Allied to G. krauen, to claw (Pretzlitz).

GRIG (1), a small lively eel. (Scand.) 'A grigge, a young eel. A merie grigge,' Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Anguillula, a grig, or little eel,' Cot. Cf. Lowland Sc. crike, crick, a tick, a louse (Jamieson). Probably Scandinavian. — Scand. dial. krick, also krik, a little creature, esp. a crawling creature; allied to kraka, to creep (Rietz); Norw. krak, a creeping thing; kraka (pt. t. krak), to creep. [Distinct from G. krieken.] The phrase as merry as a grig is probably due to this word, though it was early changed to (or confused with) the equivalent phrase as merry as a Greek; see quotations in Nares, amongst which we may note 'she's a merry Greek indeed,' Trilussa, i. 2. 118; 'the merry Greek,' id. iv. 4. 58. Merry Greek is a character in Udall's Roister Doister; A. D. 1553. Cf. L. græci, to live like Greeks, i. e. effeminately, luxuriously; Horat. Sat. ii. 2. 11.

GRIG (2), a cricket. (E.) Prov. E. grig; see E. D. D. Prob. due to prov. E. crick, to make a sharp noise; and to E. cricket, q. v. Cf. Du. krick, a cricket. Apparently of imitative origin; and distinct from Grig (1).

GRILL, to broil on a gridiron. (F. — L.) Extended to grilly by Butler. 'Than have them grilled on the embers,' Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 15 from end. — F. griller, 'to broil on a gridiron, to scorch.' Cot. — F. gril, 'a gridiron;' id. Formerly spell grill, Godefroy. — Late L. acc. gratidulum, a mace; form of craticula, a small gridiron, Martial, xiv. 221 (whence F. grille, a grating). These are dimin. forms from L. crātis, a hurdle. See Grate (1), Crate, Griddle.

GRILSE, the young salmon on its first return to the river from the sea. (F. — OIIG.?) The forms in the N. E. D. suggest that the older form grilles was a plural, so that grise = grills. An Act of 23 Edw. IV. c. 2, mentions 'grillex on salmons' (N. E. D.). And perhaps grill represents OF. gride, grille, grayish, applied (like the variant OF. grisel) to a horse. If so, it is from OF. gris, gray. — OIIG. gris, gray. ¶ Some refer grise to Irish grasach, 'a kind of fish,' but (if connected) the derivation may run the other way.

GRIM, fierce, angry-looking. (E.) ME. grim, Chaucer, C. T. 11458 (F. 11466). AS. grim, fierce, cruel, severe, dire, Grein, i. 527; for grem-*, and allied to AS. gram, angry, furious, hostile; id. i. 522. Cf. also AS. grimetan, to rage, roar, grunt; + Du. grimmig, angry; cf. grimmem, to foam with rage; Icel. grinnur, grin, stern; gramr, wrathful; Dan. grim, ugly, grim; gram, wrathful; + G. grimmig, furious; grimmem, to rage; grimm, fury; gram, hostile. From Teut. root grem-* (2nd grade, gram-*). β. Further allied to Gk. χρῖν, χρῖνος, noise; χρῖνιστος, χρῖνιστος, to neigh; see Brugmann, i. § 572.

GRIMACE, an ugly look, smirk. (F. — Teut.?) 'Annotations of grimaces,' Butler, Hudibras, iii. 2. 1004. 'Grimace and affectation;' Dryden, Poet. Epist. to H. Higden, l. 10. — F. grimace, 'a crald looke;' Cot. OF. uncertain origin; but probably from G. grimm, fury, or from Icel. grimr, Norw. grimm, angry, furious; cf. EFries. and Low G. grimachen, to laugh maliciously. (Körting, § 4355.) Der. grimace, verb.

GRIMALKIN, a cat. (E.; partly OHG.) See Nares, who suggests that it stands for gray malkin, 'a name for a fiend, supposed to resemble a grey cat.' He is probably right. See Mach. i. r. 8. [Cf. the proverb 'All cats are grey in the dark.' In this view, Malkin is for Mald-kin, dimin. of Maud (Matilda), with suffix -kin. The name Maud, AF. Mald, is from OIIG. Mald-hilt; from malt, might, and hilt, battle. The ME. Malkin, as a dimin. of Maud, was in very common use; see Chaucer, C. T. 4450 (B. 30). It was a name for a slut or loose woman. The Prompt. Parv. (1440) has: 'Malkyne, or Maut, propret name, Molt, Mawde, Matildis, Matilda.'

GRIME, dirt that soils deeply, smut. (Low G.) In Shak. Com. of Errors, iii. 2. 106. As a verb, K. Lear, ii. 3. 9. — WFlem. grijm, grime (De Bo); cf. MDu. grijmsel, grimel, smut, smut (Kilian); grimmelen, to soil, begrime (Oudemans). Also Dan. grim, grimm, lamplblack, soot, grime; whence grimit, streaked, begrimed (Ferrals); MDan. grim, smut on a kettle (Kalkar); Swed. dial. grima, a spot or smut on the face; Rietz. Probably allied further to AS. grigwian, to smear (1), Ælf. Hom. i. 384, ii. 308; and to Gk. χρῖν, to anoint, to smear. See Charm. Der. grim-y.

GRIN, to snarl, grimace. (E.) ME. grennen, Ancrén Riwle, p. 212; Layamon, 29550. AS. grennian, to grin; Grein, i. 525. + OIIG.

grennan, to mutter, MHG. grennen, to grin. From a Teut. base gran-*; whence also Icel. grænja, to howl. β. Perhaps influenced by derivatives from a Teut. base grin-*; whence Du. grijnen, to weep, cry, fret, grumble; grinsen, to grumble, to grin; Dan. grine, to grin, smiler; Swed. grino, to distort the face, grimace, grin; G. grinsen, to grin, grimace, weep, cry, growl; all of the latter set being related to L. grin; see Groat. Der. grin, sb.

GRIND, to reduce to powder by rubbing. (E.) ME. grinden, Chaucer, C. T. 14280 (B. 3264); Ancrén Riwle, p. 70. AS. grindan, Grein, i. 528. Teut. type grendan-, pt. t. grand, pp. grindanaz*; whence also Du. grint, gravel, grit. Der. grind-er, grind-stone; also grist, q. v.

GRIP, sb., a firm grasp; vb., to grasp firmly. (E.) 1. ME. gripe; pl. gripen, Layamon, l. 15273; vol. ii. p. 215. The pl. gripiis is in the Kings (Quair, st. 171). AS. gripe, a grip (Bosworth). 2. ME. grippen; 'he gript his mantel,' Will. of Palerne, 744. ONorthumb. grippa; whence grippede, pt. t. Luke, ix. 39. β. Both from grip-, weak grade of Teut. gripan-*, to grasp (below).

GRIFE, to grasp, hold fast, seize forcibly. (E.) In Shak. Macb. iii. 1. 62; K. John, iv. 2. 190. ME. gripen, P. Plowman, B. iii. 248. AS. gripan, to seize; Grein, i. 529. + Du. grijpen; Icel. gripa; Dan. gribe; Swed. gripa; Goth. gripan; G. greifen. Teut. type gripan-, pt. t. graiþ, pp. graiþanaz*. Cf. GRISE, GRIZE, a stip. (Shak.) See Grece.

GRISSETTE, a gay young Frenchwoman of the lower class. (F. — MHG.) Borrowed (1723) from F. griset, orig. a cheap dress of gray colour, whence they were named. — F. gris, gray. — MHG. gris, gray; cf. G. gris, a gray-haired man. See Grizzly. ¶ Hence also F. gris, the fur of the gray squirrel; Chaucer, C. T. 194.

GRISKIN, the loin of a pig; prov. E. (Scand.) The lit. sense is 'a little pig' (still found in Angus); it is formed by the dimin. suffix -kin from the once common word gris or grise, a pig. 'Bothe my gees and my gryss' — both my geese and pigs; P. Plowman, B. iv. 51. 'Gryce, swyne, or pygge, parcellus,' Prompt. Parv. p. 211; and see Way's note. — Icel. gris, a young pig; Dan. griss, a pig; Swed. gris, a pig. Cf. OSax. gris, gray.

GRISLED, the same as Grizzled, q. v.

GRISLY, hideous, horrible. (E.) ME. grisly, Chaucer, C. T. 1973 (A. 1971). AS. grisly, horrible (see Clark Hall); perhaps shortened from angriscly, terrible, Ps. lxxxviii. 8 (ed. Spelman). Formed with suffix -lie (like) from gris-an, gris-an* (pt. t. grān*), to shudder. 'And for helle igrise' — and shudder at the thought of hell; Laws of Cnut, i. 25; see Ancient Laws, ed. Thorpe, vol. i. p. 374. + Du. af-griselyk, horrible; af-grisen, horror; Low G. grisen, grisel, to shudder (Berghaus).

AS. grist, as a gloss to L. molitura; Wright's Vocab. i. 34, col. 2. It represents a type grin(d)-st-*, from the verb grindan, to grind. See Grind. ¶ Cf. blā-st from blow (as wind), blō-mā (= blā-st-mā) from blaw (to flourish). The i was shortened before st; cf. fiſt. Der. grist-lr.

GRISTLE, cartilage. (E.) 'Seales have gristle, and no bone;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xi. c. 37; vol. i. p. 345. The word gristly occurs in the preceding clause. It was especially used with reference to the nose. 'Grystyle of the nose, cartilago;' Prompt. Parv. 'Nease-gristles,' i. e. gristles of the nose (speaking of many people together); O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 251. AS. gristle, as a gloss to cartilago; Ælfrie's Gloss. in Voc. 18. 22. Omerc. naes-gristle, gloss to cartilago; Voc. 10. 20. Cf. OFries. gristel, gristel, gristel, gristel; Richtofen. β. The word may be the dimin. of grist, and derivable from grind; with reference to the necessity of crunching it if eaten. So also Du. kuarsheen, gristle, from kuarsen, to crunch (Wedgwood). See Grist. ¶ The AS. grist O. E. tears, p. 112, l. 56) also means 'gristle,' but has a different vowel; cf. NFries. grüsel, grüsel (Outzen), OIIG. crustula, gristle (Schade). These may be connected with Du. gruizen, to crush, EFries. gruizen, to crunch; from a Teut. root grem-*, noted by Franck, s. v. griesmel. Cf. Grit (2). Der. grist-lr.

GRIT (1), gravel, coarse sand. (E.) Formerly greet. 'Greete, sabulum;' Levins, 89, 11. 'Sablioniere, a sand-bed . . . a place full of sand, greet, or small gravel;' Cotgrave. ME. greet, Ancrén Riwle, p. 70. AS. grint, grit, dust; Grein, i. 527. OFries. grit + Icel. grit; G. grit; Swed. dial. grut, gravel. Closely allied to Grout, q. v. See Grit (2). ¶ The short vowel is due to confusion with grit (2). Der. grit-y, grit-i-ness; see also grouds, grout.

GRIT (2), coarse oat-meal. (E.) Usually in pl. grits. The oldest sense is bran or chaff. From AS. grutan, pl.; as in huete grytan, wheat-grits, Voc. 141. 20. Cf. MDu. grutte, 'barlie,' Hexham; G. grütze, i., grit, groats. Teut. type grut-jom*, fem.; from grut-*, weak grade of grout- (and grade graut*), Idg. root ghreud*, to crush, pound (whence Lith. gruži, to crush, pound, O. Church Slav. grud-a, a clod).

¶ Grit (1). AS. grit, is from the prime grade graut*.
GRIZZLY, GRIZZLED, of a grey colour. (F.)—MIIG.; with E. suffix. Shaks. has grizzled, Hamlet, i. 2, 240 (in some copies grusled); also grizzle as sb., a tinge of gray, Tw. Nt. v. 168. Formed with suffix -y (or -ed) from ME. grisel, a gray-haired man. 'That olde grisel is no o-fel' [fool]; Gower, C. A. iii. 356; bk. viii. 2407. Grisel is formed, with suffix -el, from F. gris, gray.—MIIG. gris, gray; cf. G. gris, a gray-haired man. Der. From the same source, grisette, q. v.

GROAN, to moan. (E.) ME. gronen, Chaucer, C. T. 14892 (B 4076); Ancien Riwle, p. 326. AS. grānian, to groan, lament; Grein, i. 524. Teut. type grain-gjan*, from a root grai-* as in OHG. grānan, G. grainen, to grin, weep, growl. Der. grain-ing.

GROAT, a coin worth ad. (O. Low G.) ME. grotes, Chaucer, C. T. 7546 (D 1964); P. Plowman, B. iii. 137 (and see the note).—O. Low G. grote, a coin of Bremen, described in the Bremen Wörterb. ii. 550. 'The word (like Du. groot) means 'great'; the coins being greater than the small copper coins (Schwaren) formerly in use in Bremen. Cognate with E. great. See Great.

GROATS, the grain of oats without the husks. (E.) ME. grotes, Liber Cure Cocorum, ed. Morris, p. 47. In the A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 292, appears the weak pl. grutan [miswritten gratan in the late MS.]. This represents a weak sb. closely allied to AS. grot, an atom, particle, whence ME. grotes, bits, in Havelok. 472. The AS. grot is from grut-, weak grade of grout-; see Grit (2). Cf. AS. grūt, coarse meal, whence E. grout, coarse meal, groats, dregs. See Groat.

GROCEER, a dealer in tea and sugar. (F.—L.) Formerly also spelt grosser, as in Holinshed's Chron. Rich. II. an. 1382 (R.); Hakluyt's Voyages, vol. i. p. 193. Spelt grocer, Libell of Eng. Policy, l. 346; AF. grossier, Liber Custumarum, i. 304. A. In old times, those whom we now call grocers were called spicers. Dealers were of two kinds, as now; there were wholesale dealers, called grossers or engrossers, and retail dealers, called regulators; see Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 547, note 1. Thus the word grossier, properly 'a whole-sale dealer' is now spelt grocer, and means 'a spicer'. B. Borrowed from OF. grossier, 'a grocer; merchant grossier', but solely by great, or utters his commodities by wholesale; Cot.—OF. gross, fem. grosse, great. See Gross. Cf. Norm. dial. grossier, a spicer, a grocer (Moisy). Der. grocer-y, formerly grossery, from OF. grosserie, 'great work; also grossery, wares uttered, or the uttering of wares, by whole-sale'; Cot.

GROG, spirits and water, not sweetened. (F.—L.) 'O'er grog or ale'; Byron, The Island, ii. 19. 4. An abbreviation of groggram. 'It derived its name from Admiral Edward Vernon, who wore groggram breeches, and was hence called "Old Grog" About 1745 [rightly, Aug. 1740], he ordered his sailors to dilute their rum with water. . . He died 30 Oct., 1757; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. See Groggram.

GROGRAM, a stuff made of silk and mohair. (F.—L.) Formerly groggram, a more correct form (Skinner). 'He shall have the groggrams at the rate I told him'; Ben Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, ii. 1. 9. Spelt groggram in Cavendish, Life of Wolsey (ab. 1557), ed. 1893, p. 147. So called because of a coarse grain or texture.—OF. grosgrain, 'the stuff groggram'; Cot.—F. gross, gross, great, coarse; and grain, grain. See Gross and Grain. Der. grog, q. v.

GROIN, the fold or depression between the abdomen and each of the upper thighs. (E.) In Shaks. 2 Hen. IV. ii. 4. 227. But groin is an incorrect variant of grine or grinde, a common form in the 16th century, from the still older form grind or grynd. Thus Cotgrave has: 'Aines, f., the grine or grayne of man or woman.' Palsgrave has: 'Grynde bytwyne the thyghe and the belly, nyne.' Spelt grynde in Lanfranc's Chirurgie, p. 41 (ab. 1400). Prob. from AS. grynde, an abyss, the lit. sense being 'depression'. Teut. type grundjom*, from grunduz*, ground; see Ground. Cf. prov. E. grindle, a small gutter (E. D. D.); Bavar. grund, a valley. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 124. Der. groin-ed, i. e. having angular curves which intersect or fork off.

GROMWELL, a plant. (F.—L.) The letter u is a modern insertion; Cotgrave, s. v. gremil, gives gromill, gromil; Palsgrave has gromell; the Prompt. Parv. has gromely or gromely sede; gromell occurs in the 14th century, in Reliquie Antiquie, i. 52, l. 1; and the Cath. Angl. has both gromelle and gromelle. [The gromell or Lithospermum is remarkable for its hard, stony seeds; whence Lithospermum (stony seed) as the name of the genus.]—OF. gromil, 13th cent.; Hatfield (s. v. grémil). Also found as OF. gremil, gremil, grinnil (Godefroy). Origin uncertain. 1. The form gremil seems to rest upon L. grānum, a grain; cf. grānum solis*, gromyille'; Voc. 587. 9. 2. Gromil perhaps is from OF. grume, stone of a grape (Godefroy), Prov. grum, the same (Mistral).—L. grāmus, a little heap. (Körting; § 4372.) ¶ Roquefort gives OF. grumel, 'pelote, peloton'; dimin. of grume, used to mean all kinds of grain. Cotgrave also gives grum as a Languedoc word synonymous with F. grain, grain. It would seem that the L. grāmus came to mean a mere clod of earth. Cf. Span. grumelo, a small clod, a curl; from grumo, a clod. We may note that gromwell is also called in E. gray millet or (in Cotgrave) graymill, which is merely the F. grumil ingeniously made partly significant, and was clearly suggested by the fact that gromwell was sometimes called milium solis as well as grānum solis; see Cath. Anglicum.

GROOM, a servant, lad. (F.) Now esp. used of men employed about horses; but orig. of wider use. It meant a lad, servant in waiting, or sometimes, a labourer, shepherd. ME. grom, grome; Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 135; 1. Plowman, C. ix. 227; Havelok, 790; Ancien Riwle, p. 422; Polit. Songs (C. S.), p. 237, l. 3. β. Of uncertain origin; Strattmann cites the MDu. grom and Olcel. grom, a boy, as parallel forms; but neither of these forms are authorised or have any obvious etymology, and may be borrowed from ME. grome, which occurs in the Ancien Riwle (ab. 1225). γ. It seems to be from an OF. grome*, only found in the dimin. form gromet; or else it was shortened from the form gromet itself. Godefroy has OF. gromet, grummet, grommet, gourmet (F. gourme), a servant, valet, groom. Cf. Span. grumete, a ship-boy. Referred by Diez to L. grāmus, a small heap, a clod. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 125. See Grume, Grummet.

GROOVE, a trench, furrow, channel. (Du.) In Skinner; rare in early books. 'Groove, a channel cut out in wood, iron, or stone'; Keats, ed. 1715. Also: 'Groove or Grove, a deep hole or pit sunk in the ground, to search for minerals'; id.; see Manlove's poem on Leadmines (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 8, ll. 18, 22, and the Glossary), printed A. D. 1653. Cf. ME. grofe, a mine; Wars of Alex., 5394.—Du. groef (Du. oe—F. oo) or groove, a trench, channel, groove; also, a mine, quarry.—Du. graven (pt. t. groef), to dig; cognate with AS. grāfan. See Grave (1). ¶ The ME. grofe may be from Icel. gröf, a pit (cognate with Du. groef); but mod. E. groove, a channel, first found in 1659, is borrowed from the 2nd grade of the Dutch verb.

GROPE, to feel one's way. (E.) ME. gropen, C. T. 646 (A 644); used in the sense of 'grasp'. King Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 1957. AS. grāpian, to seize, handle, Grein, i. 524; a weak verb, and unoriginal. Teut. type grāpjan*, from grāpiti*, f. sb., as seen in AS. grāp, the grip of the fingers, grasp of the hand; id. From grāp*, 2nd grade of Teut. grāpjan*, AS. grāpian, to gripe. See Gripe. β. Similarly the Icel. gríp, grip, grasp, is allied to grípa, to gripe; and the OHG. grēifa, a two-pronged fork (cited by Fick, iii. 111) to OHG. grīfan, to gripe. And see Grasp. Der. grop-ing-ly.

GROSS, fat, large. (F.—L.) Very common in Shaks.; Merry Wives, iii. 3. 43, &c. 'This gross imagination'; Frith's Works, p. 140, col. 2. Spelt grosse in Palsgrave.—OF. gross (fem. grosse), 'grosse, great, big, thick'; Cot.—L. grossus, thick (a late form). Der. gross-ly, gross-ness, gross-beak or gross-bank (F. gross bec, great beak, the name of a bird), grossier, q. v., grossier-y, also bec, sb., engross, in-gross, gro-gram, grog.

GROT, a cavern. (F.—Ital.—L.—Gk.) 'Umbrageous *grot*s and caves'; Milton, P. L. iv. 257.—F. grotte, 'a grot, cave'; Cot.—Ital. grotta, 'a cave, a grot'; Florio. (Cf. Prov. croto (Mistral), formerly cropta, cited by Littré).—Late L. crypta, l. crypta, a crypt, cave, grotto. From Grot; see Crypt. And see Grotto. Doublet, crypt; also grotto. Der. grot-esque, q. v.

GROTTO, a cavern. (Ital.—L.—Gk.) A corruption of the older form grotta. 'And in our grottoes'; Pope, tr. of Homer's Odys. b. x. 480. (Pope had his own grotto at Twickenham.) 'A grotto, or place of shade'; Bacon, Essay 45 (Of Building).—Ital. grotta, a grotto, whence F. grotte. See Grot.

GROTESQUE, ludicrous, strange. (F.—Ital.—L.—Gk.) 'Grotesque and wild'; Milton, P. L. iv. 136. 'And this grotesque design'; Dryden, Hind and Panther, iii. 1044.—OF. grotesque; pl. grotesques, 'pictures wherein all kinds of odd things are represented'; Cot.—Ital. grotesco, 'antick work'; Florio. [So called because such paintings were found in old crypts and grottoes].—Ital. grotta, a grotto. See Grot, Grotto. ¶ Sir T. Herbert uses the Ital. form. 'The walls and pavements, . . . by rare artificers carved into story and grotesco work'; Travels, ed. 1665, p. 147.

GROUND, the surface of the earth. (E.) ME. grund, ground, Chaucer, C. T. 455; Havelok, 1979; Layamon, 2296. AS. grund; Grein, i. 530.—Du. grond; Goth. grundus*, only in the comp. grundu-wadiz, a ground-wall, foundation; Luke, vi. 48, 49; OHG. grund, G. grund. Teut. type grunduz*; also grunthaz*, as in Icel. grunnr, bottom (Dan. Swed. grund). We also find Gael. grund, Irish grunn, ground, bottom (from Norse or E.). Der. ground, verb (Chaucer, C. T. 416, A 414); ground-less, ground-less-ly, ground-less-ness, ground-ling, q. v., ground-sill, q. v.; also ground-floor, -ivy, -plan, -rent, -swell, -work. Also grounds, q. v.

GROUNDLING, a spectator in the pit of a theatre. (E.) In Shak. Hamlet, iii. 2. 12; Beaum. and Fletcher, Prothetta, i. 3. 32. A term of contempt; made by suffixing -ling, a double dimin. ending (-ling), to the sb. ground. 2. There is also a fish called the groundling, so called because it keeps near the bottom of the water; the Low (i. name is gründlink (Berghaus).

GROUNDS, dregs. (E.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. 'Grounds, the settling or dregs of drink'; Kersey, ed. 1715. This peculiar use of the word occurs also in Gael. grunnas, lees, dregs; Irish gruindas, dregs, grunnas, lees, dross; both borrowed from E. See GROUND.

GROUNDSSEL, a small plant. (E.) Corruptly written grunesel in Levins. Better groundswell, as in Holland's Pliny, b. xxv. c. 13. AS. grundeswylige, grundeswelle, grundeswile, with numerous references; Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 320. 'Senecio. grundeswylige'; Wright's Vocab. i. 68, col. 2, l. 1. β. The lit. sense would thus seem to be 'ground-swallower', i.e. occupier of the ground, abundant weed; as if from AS. grund, ground, and swelan, to swallow; but this seems to be, after all, only a popular etymology, as a much older form appears in gundae-swelgine, Epinal gloss. 976 (also spelt gundae-swelgine, gundeswelle, O.E. Texts, pp. 97, 98). Thus the orig. sense was 'swallower or absorber of pus'; from AS. gund, pus; and in fact the leaves are still used for reducing abscesses.

GROUNDSILL, the timber of a building next the ground; a threshold. (E.) Spelt grunesel, Milton, P. L. i. 460. 'And so syl downe deed on the groundsill'; Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 176 (R.). Compounded of ground and sill; see SILL.

GROUP, a cluster, assemblage. (F.—Ital.—C.). 'Group, in painting, a piece that consists of several figures'; Kersey, ed. 1715. 'The figures of the groups'; Dryden, Parallel of Painting and Poetry, ed. Yonge, 1882, p. 164.—F. groupe, a group; not in Cot.—Ital. gruppo, a knot, heap; group, bag of money.—Teut. type kroppaz*, as seen in G. kropf, a crop, craw, maw, wen on the throat; orig. a bunch. Cf. Icel. kroppr, a hunch or bunch on any part of the body. See CROP, of which group is a doublet. Der. group-ling, group, verb.

GROUSE, the name of a bird. (F.?) 'Grouse, a fowl, common in the North of England'; Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Prof. Newton has kindly sent me an earlier instance of the word. 'Attagen, perdix Asclepias, the Heath-cock or Grouse. . . Huius in Anglia duas habemus species, quarum maior vulgo dicitur, the black game, . . minor vero, the grey game'; Charleton, Onomasticon Zoicon, London, 1668, p. 73. Earlier examples are given in N.E.D. In Household Ordinances (1531), as given in Archaeologia, iii. 157, we have the pl. forms 'grouses and peions' [pigeons]. In Household Ordinances (1547), ed. 1790, p. 220, the pl. is grouses. In 1674, the pl. is grouses. It is possible that grouse was at first a plural form, from a sing. grow or grau. Of unknown origin; though the form seems to be French. Giraldus Cambrensis, Topog. Hib. (Opera, Rolls Series, v. 47), has: 'galline campestres, quas vulgariter grutis vocant.' Cf. Cotgrave, s.v. griesche, has 'the hen of the grice or moorgame.' This seems to be a mistake, as the form grice is otherwise unknown.

GROUT, coarse meal; in pl. grounds, dregs. (E.) Holland, tr. of Pliny, bk. xx. c. 7 (v. ii. p. 46) has: 'die grout, or barley meale.' AS. grūt, groats, coarse meal; Codex Diplomaticus, ed. Kemble, Charter 235 (vol. i. p. 311). + Du. gruit, dregs. Cf. Icel. grautr, porridge; Dan. grød, boiled groats; Swed. grūt, thick pap; G. grütze, groats. Allied to Lithuan. grudas, corn. Also to grout, q.v.; grit, q.v. Der. gru-el, q.v.

GROVE, a collection of trees. (E.) In Shak. M. N. Dr. iii. 1. 390. ME. groue (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 1480 (A 1478); Layamon, 469. AS. grāf, a grove (Lye); but the word is very scarce. Leo refers to Codex Diplomaticus, ed. Kemble, Charter 305 (vol. ii. p. 100; see also vol. iii. p. 436). It is both masc. and neut. Teut. types grubins*, grubhoin*; from a root greib*, which is wholly unknown. No cognate forms appear: unless we may compare Norw. greiv-la, a tree whose branches spread out wide like horns, greiv-la, v., to branch out, &c. (Ross).

GROVEL, to fall flat on the ground. (Scand.) In Shak. K. John, ii. 305. (Not found earlier.) The formation of the verb to grovel was due to a singular grammatical mistake. Groveling was in use as an adverb with the suffix -ling, but this was readily mistaken for the pres. part. of a verb, and the -ing being dropped, the new verb to grovel emerged. β. Spenser uses the form groveling only. 'Streight downe againe herselfe, in great despite She groveling threw to ground'; F. Q. ii. 1. 45. 'And by his side the Goddess groveling Makes for him endless mone'; F. Q. iii. 1. 38. 'Downe on the ground his carkas groveling fell'; F. Q. iii. 5. 23. In the last instance, the sense is 'flatly' or 'flat'. γ. The ME. groveling or grovelings is a mere adverb. 'Gr-melyng to his fete that felle'; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1120. 'Grovelinge, or grovelynge, adv. Supine, resupine'; Prompt. Parv. p. 216. After which is added: 'Grovelinge, nom. Suppinus, resupinus'; showing that, in A. D. 1440, the word was beginning to be considered as being sometimes a nom. pres. part. Note also: 'Therfor groffynge thus shall be layde'; Towneley Myst. p. 40. Way notes that in Norf. and Suff. the phrase 'to lie grubblins', or with the face downwards, is still in use. δ. The correct ME. form is groffing or groffinges, where the -ing or -lings is the adv. suffix that appears in other words, such as dark-ling, flat-ling; see DARKLING, HEADLONG. The former part of the word could be used alone, with exactly the same adverbial sense; as 'they fillen gruf'; Chaucer, C. T. 951 (A 949). The phrase is of Scand. origin.—Icel. grüfa, in the phr. liggja á grüfu, to lie grovelling, to lie on one's face, symja á grüfu, to swim on one's belly. Cf. also grüfa, verb, to grovel, couch, or cower down. Also grüfa, to grovel, which justifies the E. verb, though proof of direct connexion between the words is wanting; Swed. dial. gruva, flat on one's face; liggja á gruve, to lie on one's face; Rietz. Root uncertain; perhaps related to Grub. Der. gruvel-er.

GROW, to increase, become enlarged by degrees. (E.) ME. growen, P. Plowman, B. xx. 56; C. xiii. 177. AS. grōwan, pt. t. grōw, pp. grōwen; Grein, i. 529. + Du. groejen (weak); Icel. gróa; Dan. groe; Swed. gro. β. Esp. used of the growth of vegetables, &c., and hence closely connected with the word green, which is from the same root. Teut. root grō-, gra-. See GREEN and GRASS. ¶ The AS. word for the growth of animals is properly wexan, mod. E. wax, q.v. Der. grower; growth, (Othello, v. 2. 14, not an AS. word, but of Scand. origin, from Icel. gröðr, gröð, growth).

GROWL, to grumble. (F.—Teut.) In Skinner, ed. 1671; and in Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 195. Lowl. Sc. has the form gurle. Wyclif, Select Works, ed. Arnold, ii. 249, has: 'A mete, not defed [digested] makith mannis bodi to groule [rumble].—AF. grouler, to make a noise like a crane; Nominate, ed. Skeat, I. 837; Picard grouler, to murmur, grumble (Corblet).—EFries. grullen; Wilem. grollen, to rumble (De Ho); Du. grollen, to grumble, + G. grollen, to bear ill-will against, to be angry, also to rumble (as thunder). β. Of imitative origin; see GRUMBLE. And see grol in Franck. Der. groul, sb., groul-er.

GROWTH, sb.; see under Grow.

GRUB, to grope in the dirt. (E.) ME. grubben, grubben. 'To grubbe vp metal'; Chaucer, Atlas Prima, l. 29. 'So depe the grubbed and so fast'; Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 94, l. 268. Cf. EFries. grubbeln, to grope about. From Teut. type grubjan-; from grub, weak grade of graban-*, to dig; see GRAVE (1). From the same grade are Low G. grubbeln, to grope about; G. grübeln, OHG. grubilin, to rake, dig, grub up; and ON. grýfta, a pit. Cf. Grovel. Der. grub, sb., an insect; grubb-er, grubb-y.

GRUDGE, to grumble, murmur. (F.) ME. gruchen, gruchen, gruchen, to murmur. 'Why gruchen we?'; Chaucer, C. T. 3060 (A 3058). The weakened form gruge occurs in The Dictes and Sayings by Lord Rivers, pr. by Caxton, 1477, fol. 17, back, l. 8. 'xif be gomes gruche'—if the men murmur, P. Plowman, B. vi. 219. Spelt grochi, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 67; gruchen, Auren Riwle, p. 186. The earliest spelling was gruchen, then gruggen, and finally grudge, Tempest, i. 2. 249.—OF. groucier, grousser, groucher, to murmur, Godefroy; later gruger, 'to grudge, repine'; Cot. Cf. Low L. groussäre, to murmur, found in a passage written A. D. 1358 (Ducange). Godefroy also gives the spelling graucier, evidently an older form. β. Of uncertain origin, but prob. Scandinavian; cf. Icel. krytja (pt. t. kritti), to murmur, krutr, a murmur; Swed. dial. kritulla, to murmur (Rietz); Norw. grutta, to grunt, to growl (Ross); MDan. kritte, to grumble (Kalkar). ¶ Different from mod. F. gruger, to crunch. Der. grudge, sb., grudge-ing.

GRUEL, liquid food, made from meal. (F.—O. Low G.) 'Or casten all the gruuel in the fyre'; Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 711.—OF. gruel (Burguy) > mod. F. gruau.—Late L. grütellum, a dimin. of grütum, meal, in a Carolingian text (Brachet).—O. Low G. grūt, cognate with AS. grūt, groats, grout, coarse meal. See GROUT.

GRUESOME, horrible, fearful. (Scand.) Also gruesome, grusome, grousum. 'Death, that grusome carl'; Burns, Verses to J. Rankine. And see Jamieson's Sc. Dict., s.v. grousum. 'Gruesome, horridus'; Levins, 162. 10.—Dan. grusom, cruel; (Kalkar has MDan. grusommelig, cruel, violent); Norw. grusam, frightful, also timid (Aasen).—Dan. gru, horror, terror; with Dan. suffix -som, as in virksom, active. Cf. Dan. grue, to dread, gruelig, horrible; Norw. gruva, to dread; Swed. gruflig, dreadful, dismal, horrid, dire. + Du. gruwzaam, terrible, hideous; MIIG. gruwesam, grüsam, G. grusam, cruel, horrible. Further allied to E. dial. grouze, EFries. grüsen, G. grausen, to shiver, shudder.

GRUFF, rough, surly. (Dutch.) A late word. 'Such an one the tall, . . . such an one the gruff'; Spectator, no. 433. First in Lowl. Sc., in 1533; and in 1563 we find 'grof stania', coarse, rough stones, in Winyet's Works, i. 114 (S. T. S.).—Du. grof, coarse, plump, loud, blunt, great, heavy. + EFries. and Westphal. grof; EFries.

gruff, coarse; Swed. grof, coarse, big, rude, gross; Dan. grov, the same; G. grob, coarse; OIHG. groh, groh. β . The OIHG. form shows that the initial g stands for gr (= AS. ge = Goth. ga), a mere prefix. The syllable -rob may perhaps be allied to the weak grade corresponding to AS. krōf, rough. Der. gruffly, gruffness.

GRUMBLE, to growl, murmur. (F.—G.) In Shak. Temp. i. 2. 249; &c. = Picard grumeler, grumeler (Corbillet); F. grummeler, 'to growl, repine'; Cot. — Low and prov. G. grummelen, to grumble; frequentative of the verb grumen, grumen, or grommen; cf. Bavarian sich grumen, to be vexed, fret oneself, Schmeller, 997; MDu. grummelen, frequent. of Du. grommen, to grumble, growl. From grumman*, weak grade of Teut. grumman*-, to rage, as in MHG. and AS. grimman, to rage, str. vb. β . The orig. sense is 'to be angry,' and the word is closely connected with G. gram, vexation; see further under Grim. Der. grumbly, grumbly-ing.

GRUME, a clot, as of blood. (F.—L.) Very rare; first used in 1619 (N. E. D.). Eden has groume, a lump; Decades, p. 145 (1555); ed. Arber, p. 182. Commoner in the adj. grum-ous. Grumous, full of clots or lumps; Kersey, ed. 1715. — OF. grume, 'a knot, bunch, cluster'; Cot. Cf. F. grumeau, a clot of blood; id. — L. grumus, a little heap or hillock of earth. Der. grum-ous.

GRUMMET (1), GROMMET, a ship's boy, cabin-boy. (F.) Rare in books. 'In everie ship . . . a boye, which is called a gromet'; Lambard, Peramb. of Kent, ed. 1826, p. 110. — OF. gromet, a servant, groom; see further under Groom.

GRUMMET (2), GROMMET, a ring of rope. (F.—C.) 'Grommets, little rings on the upper side of the yard, to which the caskets are fastened'; Coles (1684). Spelt grummetts; Capt. J. Smith, Works, ed. Arber, p. 793 (1626). — OF. gromette (Hatzfeld), s. v. F. gourmette, the curb of a bridle (affected by F. gourmet, to curb). Chaudron gromm, lit. 'hant chain', the chain of a curb; where gromm is the fem. of Bret. gromm, bent, W. crum. Celt. type krumlos*, bent; Stokes-Fick, p. 100.

GRUNSEL, used for Groundell, q. v.
GRUNT, to make a sound like a pig. (E.) ME. grunten, Ancrén Riwle, p. 326. AS. grunnetan (O. E. Texts, p. 559), an extension of grunian, to grunt, found in Ælfric's Grammar (Bosworth). + Dan. grunite, to grunt; Swed. grymta, to grunt; (f. grunzen + L. grunire, (L. grunire; Gk. γρύνω). β . All of imitative origin; cf. Gk. γρύνω, the noise made by a pig. Der. grunt-r.

GUAIACUM, a genus of trees in the W. Indies; also, the resin of the lignum vitae. (Span. — Hayti.) In Minshew, ed. 1627, and in Kersey, ed. 1715. Latinised from Span. guayaco or guayacan, lignum vitae. From the language of Hayti; see Frampton, tr. of Monardes, Joyfull Newes, p. 10, back. Gua- in Haytian is a prefix or article (K. Eden, p. 168). See Notes on E. Etym., p. 347.

GUANACO, a kind of Peruvian sheep. (Span. — Peruv.) Spelt guanoes, pl., in E. G., tr. of Acosta (1604); bk. i. c. 21, p. 70. — Span. guanaco, 'a beast in the West Indies, like a great sheep'; Pineda. — Peruv. guanacu, a wild sheep; see Skeat, Notes on E. Etym., p. 343.

GUANO, the dung of a certain sea-fowl of S. America, used for manure. (Span. — Peruvian.) See E. G., tr. of Acosta, 1604, p. 311 (bk. iv. c. 37); Prescott, Conq. of Peru, c. 5. — Span. guano or huano (Pineda). — Peruvian guan, dung; see Skeat, Notes on E. Etym., p. 343.

GUARANTEE, GUARANTY, a warrant, surety. (F.—OHG.) Guarantee appears to have been misused in place of guaranty, garanty, or garanty, probably owing to the use of words such as lessee, feeoffee, and the like; but the final -ee is (in the present case) incorrect. Moulton's Nomo-lexicon gives the spellings garanty and warranty. Cotgrave has garantie and warrantie. — AF. garantie; OF. garantie (better garantie), 'garrantie, warrantie, or warrantise', Cot. f. fem. form of garanti, warranted, pp. of garantir, to warrant. — OF. garant, also spelt guarant, warrant (Burguy), and explained by Cotgrave as 'a vouchear, warrant, warrantor, supporter, maintainer'. See further under Warrant. ¶ The OHG. u became in OF. first u, then gu, and finally g. Thus OF. garant and E. warrant are the same word. Der. guarantee, vb.

GUARD, to ward, watch, keep, protect. (F.—Teut.) Common in Shak. both as verb and sb. [He also has guardage, Oth. i. 2. 70; guardant, Cor. v. 2. 67; guardian, Macb. ii. 4. 35. But the verb does not seem to be much older, though the sb. is in Lydgate, De Deguil. Pilgrimage, 8793. Rich. cites guardens (= guardians) from Surrey, tr. of Virgil's Æn. b. ii. l. 1013 (E. version).] — OF. garder, 'to keep, ward, guard'; Cot.; also spelt guarder, as in the Chanson de Roland, l. 9; and, in the 11th century, warder. — OSax. wardin, to watch; cognate with E. ward, vb. See further under Ward. ¶ The sb. guard is older than the verb; from OF. garde, guards; from OTeut. wardā*, a guard. Der. guard-age, guard-ant, guard-ian (= OF. garden, which Cot. explains by 'a warden, keeper, garden') ; guard-ed, guard-ed-ly, guard-ed-ness; guard-room, guard-ship. Doublet, word; the doublet of guardian is warden, q. v.

GUAVA, a genus of trees and shrubs of tropical America. (Span. — W. Indian.) The Span. name guayaba is no doubt borrowed from the W. Indian name; see Skeat, Notes on E. Etym., p. 347. Spelt guayaba in 1593; Eng. Garner, ed. Arber, v. 532; in an account of Drake's expedition to Panama, &c. The pl. is spelt guayavos in E. G., tr. of Acosta, bk. iv. c. 24 (1604). The guava is found within the tropics in Mexico, the W. Indies, and S. America.

GUDGEON, a small fresh-water fish. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. i. 1. 102. ME. goujon. 'Goujon, fische; gobius, gobio'; Prompt. Parv. — F. goujon, 'a gudgeon-fish, also the pin which the truckle of a pulley runneth on; also, the gudgeon of the spindle of a wheele; any gudgeon'; Cot. — L. gobionem, acc. of gobio, a by-form of gobius, a gudgeon. — Gk. καβίος, a kind of fish, gudgeon, tench. The Sicilian name was κόβορ (Liddell and Scott).

GUELDER-ROSE, a species of Viburnum, bearing large white ball-shaped flowers. (Du. and F.) So named from some resemblance of the flower to a white rose. See Rose. The word guelder stands for Geldre, the F. spelling of the province of Gelderland in Holland.

GUERDON, a reward, recompense. (F.—OHG.) In Chaucer, C. T. 7460 (1) 1878. He also has the verb guerdonen = to reward; Pers. Tale, Group I, l. 283, Six-text ed.; but this is derived from the sb. Guerdones occurs in Lydgate, Complaint of Black Knight, l. 399. — OF. guerdon, 'guerdon, recompense, meed'; Cot. Equivalent to Ital. guiderdon, a guerdon. — Low L. uaterdunum, which, according to Littré, is found in the time of Charles the Bald. β . This is a singular hybrid compound from OIHG. wider (G. wieder), against, back again, and the L. dunum, a gift; but the whole word is a mere adaptation of OIHG. widartun, a recompence. γ . The OIHG. word has its exact cognate in the AS. widder-lean, a recompence, Grein, ii. 697; which is compounded of the prefix widder, against, back again (connected with F. with- in the word with-stand) and the sb. lean, payment, which is from AS. lean, to lend; and lean is also allied to E. loan. See With, Donation, and Loan. ¶ The same notion of 'back' occurs in the synonymous words re-ward, re-compence, re-muneration.

GUERRILLA, GUERRILLA, an irregular warfare carried on by small bands of men. (Span. — OHG.) We speak of 'guerrilla warfare,' making the word an adj., but it is properly a sb. — Span. guerrilla, a skirmish, lit. a petty war; dimin. of guerra, war (= F. guerre). — OIHG. uerra, discord, the same word as E. war. See War.

GUESS, to form an opinion at hazard, to conjecture. (Scand.) The insertion of u was merely for the purpose of preserving the g as hard. ME. gessen; Chaucer, C. T. 82. — Dan. gisse; Swed. gissa, to guess; MDan. gidze, gise, gelse (Kalkar); NFriesic geze, gedze (Outzen); the oldest form being geze = geiza*, from the base gei-*. β . Closely related to Dan. gjelte, to guess; the mod. Icel. gizka = git-ska*, a denominative vb. from a base git-isko*, for git-isko*, i. e. acquisitive, is from Icel. gizka (1), to get, (2) to guess. The latter word is cognate with AS. gitan, and mod. E. get; and it is highly probable that guess meant originally 'to be ready to get,' being a secondary (desiderative) verb formed from get. See Get. Der. guess, sb.; guess-work.

GUEST, a stranger who is entertained. (E.) The u is inserted to preserve the g as hard. The word is prob. Anglian or Scand., as the AS. gi > y. ME. gest, Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 1374; also gist, Ancrén Riwle, p. 68. AS. gast; also gist, giest; Grein, i. 373. Cf. Icel. gestr; Dan. gast; Swed. gäst. + Du. gast; Goth. gasts; G. gast. Teut. type gastiz*; ldg. type ghostis*, whence L. hostis, a stranger, guest, enemy; Russ. gost(e), a guest, alien. β . The orig. sense appears to be that of 'alien,' whence the senses of 'enemy' and 'guest' arose. See Hostile. Der. guest-chamber, Mark, xiv. 14. From the same root, host (2), hostile.

GUIACUM, a genus of trees. See Guaiacum.

GUIDE, to lead, direct, regulate. (F.—Teut.) ME. gyden, Chaucer, C. T. 13470 (B 1670). [The ME. form gyen is also common (C. T. 1952); see Guy.] The sb. is gyde, (C. T. 806 (A 804)). — OF. guider (14th cent.), from older guier, to guide; the d being inserted by the influence of OProv. guider (Bartsch). Cf. also Ital. guidare; and Span. guiar. Romanic type guidure*. — OSax. uizan (AS. uizan), to pay heed to; OHG. uizan. — Teut. root uiz-, uit-; ldg. root WEID, to know; whence also AS. wis, wise, knowing, uisa, a leader, director, uision, to guide, lead, show the way. See Wit, Wise. Der. guide, sb., guide-post, guid-on, guys, guy-rope.

GUIDON, a pennon; or a bearer of a pennon. (F.—Teut.) 'With guidons trail'd on earth'; Sandys, Travels (1632), p. 84. — F. guidon, 'a standard, or banner, under which a troop of men of arms do serve; also, he that bears it'; Cot. — F. guider, to guide; as pointing the way. See above.

GUILD, GILD, an association of men of one class for mutual aid. (E.) The insertion of u, though common, is quite unnecessary, and is unoriginal. See English Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, Early Eng. Text Soc., 1870. ME. gilde, yilde; the pl. gilden = gilds, occurs in Layamon, 32001. Cf. AS. gildsceipe, a gild, gigilda, a member of a gild; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, Althelst. v. 8. 6; vol. 1, p. 236. These words are formed from AS. gild, a payment, a gild (from the fee paid); also spelt gield, gylde, gold; from the AS. gildan, to pay, whence also mod. E. yield; see Yield; cf. also Icel. gild, a payment, a gild, from gjald (pres. t. geld); to pay; Dan. gild, a feast, a gild. + Du. gild, a gild, company, society; Goth. gild, tribute-money, Lu. xx. 22. ¶ The hard g is remarkable, as the AS. form would rather have given yild. It is usually referred to the influence of Icel. gild, but we must not forget the possible influence of Latin and AF., which adopted the word very early. The N.E. D. cites L. gildis ab. 1009, L. gildam ab. 1189; and AF. forms with gu appear early likewise. It is unlikely that L. g was sounded as y, and it is certain that AF. gu was hard. Der. guld-hall, ME. guld-halle, yidhulle, Chaucer, C. T. 372 (A. 370).

GUILDER, a Dutch coin. (Du.) In Shak. Com. Errors, i. 1. 8; iv. 1. 4. A corrupt form of Du. guldén, a guilder, 'a piece of 20 stivers; (Sewel). Hexham has Corruis-gulden, 'a Charles gilder; Philippus gulden, 'a Philip's gilder; the former evidently refers to Charles V. Cf. G. gulden, gulden, a florin; as the name implies, the coin was at first of gold, though afterwards made of silver. The M.H.G. name was gulden, or guldin pfennig, the golden penny (L. aureus denarius); Goth. guldheinn, golden. From Teut. adj. type gultinaz*, golden; formed with suffix -inaz = L. -inus, from Teut. gult-on*, gold. See Gold. GUILLE, a wile, cunning, deceit. (F.—Teut.) In early use. ME. gile, gyle; Layamon, 1398, 16382 (later text); and common later. —OF. guile, guille (Godfrey). From a Teut. source; see Wile. Der. guile-ful (ME. gileful, Wyclif, Job, xlii. 7, Ps. v. 7), guile-ful-y, guile-ful-ness (ME. gilefulness, Wyclif, Ecclesi. xxxviii. 3); guile-less, guile-lessness. Doublet, wile.

GUILLEBOT, a sea-bird. (F.—Teut.) 'A guilennot or scanehen; Ray, Willughby's Ornithol., p. 324 (1678); N.E. D. 'Willnots; Noddy, Gullies; Hakkylt's Voy. iii. 76.—F. guillenot (1555; Hatfield). Dimin. of F. Guillaume, as willnot and prov. F. willnot (guillenot) are of William.—OHG. Wilhelm. In the Norm. dialect roi Guillemot means our William I. (Robin).

GUILLOTINE, an instrument for beheading men. (F. personal name.) 'Named after the supposed inventor, a physician named Joseph Ignatius Guillotin, who died in 1814. The first person executed by it was a highway robber named Pelletier, April 25, 1792; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Der. guillotine, verb.

GUILT, crime, punishable offence. (E.) The u is inserted to preserve the g as hard. ME. gilt, Gower, C. A. ii. 122 (bk. iv. 3610); Chaucer, C. T. 5057 (B 637); commonly also gult, as in Ancrén Riwe, p. 258. AS. gylt, a crime; Grein, i. 536. Teut. type gultiz*, m. Some have connected it with AS. gealdan, to pay; but this seems to be inadmissible. No cognate word is known. Der. guilt-less = ME. guiltless, Chaucer, C. T. 5063 (B 643); guilt-less-ly, guilt-less-ness; also guilt-y = AS. gyltig, Matt. xxiii. 18; guilt-i-ly, guilt-i-ness.

GUINEA, the name of a (former) gold coin. (African.) 'So named from having been first coined of gold brought by the African company from the coast of Guinea in 1663, valued then at 20s.; but worth 30s. in 1695. Not coined since 1813. Reduced at various times; in 1717 to 21s.; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Der. guinea-fowl, guinea-hen, named from the same country. ¶ The guinea-pig is from S. America, chiefly Brazil; so that the name is an erroneous one, as in the case of turkey.

GUIPURE, a kind of lace; a kind of gimp. (F.—Teut.) First in 1843; see N.E. D. —F. gupure, which Cotgrave defines as 'a grosse black thread, covered or whipt about with silk.'—F. gupier, to cover (thus) with silk; Godfrey gives the pp. gupier,—Teut. uipjan*, to wind; as in Goth. uipjan, to crown (whence uipps, a wreath); G. uipfen, to reel, to wind. Cf. MDan. gimpe, fringe; mod. Dan. gimpe, to whip about with silk (Larsen).

GUISE, way, manner, wise. (F.—O.I.G.) ME. gise, gise, Chaucer, C. T. 995 (A 993). Also guise, guise; first used in Layamon, 19641; later text, where the earlier text has wise. —OF. guise, way, wise; cf. Prov., Port., Span., and Ital. guisa. [The g stands for an older w.] —OHG. wisa, M.H.G. wise (G. weise), a way, wise, guise; cognate with AS. wise, whence E. wise, sb. See Wise (2). Doublet, wise (2).

GUIZAR, a musical stringed instrument. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Give me my guitara.' Ren Jonson, Gipsies Metam. § 1 (end); from Span. guitarra, = F. guitare (Littre). In L. esthara (accented as in Gk.). = Gk. kythara, a kind of lyre. ¶ The ME. form of the word is giterne, Chaucer, C. T. 3333. This also is of F. origin; Cotgrave gives 'Giterne, or Guiterne, a giterne.'

GULES, the heraldic name for red. (F.—L.) ME. gules; Gawain and Grene Kat., 619. Richardson cites: 'And to bere armes than are ye able Of gold and goules sete with sable.' Squier of Low Degre, l. 203, in Ritson's Metrical Romances, vol. iii. At p. 484 of Robt. of Glouc., ed. Hearn, is a footnote in which we find: 'that bere the armes of goules with a white crosse.'—F. goules, red, or sanguine, in blazon; Cot.; OF. goules, goules, gules; AF. goules, gules, P. Langtoft, ll. 430, answering to Late L. gule, gules. ¶ Ducange shows that L. gule also meant 'skins of ermine dyed red.' Cf. also OF. guler, to border with fur; engouler, engouler, angouler, trimmed with fur. Cf. 'murium rubricatas pelliculas, quas gulas vocant,' S. Bernard, Epist. 42. c. 2. The origin of Late L. gule (in this sense) is doubtful.

GULF, a hollow in the sea-coast, a bay, a deep place, whirlpool. (F.—Ital.—Gk.) Formerly spelt goulfe, gulph. 'Hast thou not read in bookes Of fell Charybdis goulfe?' Turckville, Pyndara's Answer to Tymetes. ME. goulfe; the goulfe of Venyae; Mandeville, Trav. ch. v. P. 54. Milton has the adj. gulphic, Vacation Exercise, l. 92; Spenser has gulphing, Virgil's Gnat, 512. —F. golfe (formerly also goulfe), 'a gulph, whirlpool; Cot. Ital. golfo, a gulf, bay.—Late Gk. kythos, variant of Gk. kythos, the bosom, lap, a deep hollow, bay, creek. [Cf. the various senses of L. sinus.] Der. gulfy, en-gulph.

GULL (1), a web-footed sea-bird. (C.) 'Timon will be left a naked gull, which flashes now a Phoenix; Timon, ii. 1. 31.—Corn. gullan, gullan, a gull (Williams); W. guyllan; Bret. gullan; Gael. and Irish faileann, Gael. faileann, Irish faileann, Celtic type uailenno-*. The prob. sense was 'wailer, from its cry; cf. Bret. guel-a, to weep. Stokes-Fick, p. 285.

GULL (2), a dupe. (Low G.) 'Yond gull Malvolio; Tw. Nt. iii. 2. 73. There seems to have been a false notion that the gull was a stupid bird. Thus a person who entraps dupes is called a gull-catcher. Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 204; and it is possible that popular etymology wrongly associated this word with Gull (1); cf. uol, uosse, dattered. But it is probably quite a distinct word, and borrowed from Du. or Low G.—Low G. gull, adj., soft, mild, good-natured, open-hearted (Berghaus); MDu. gull, 'a great wench without wit; Hexham; EFries. gul, soft, mild, liberal (Koolman). Der. gull, verb, Tw. Nt. ii. 2. 145; gull-ible.

GULLET, the throat. (F.—L.) ME. gulet, gullet; Chaucer, C. T. 12477 (C 543). 'Gulet, or throte, gultur, gluma, gula;' Prompt. Parv. —F. goulet, 'the gullet; Cot. Dimin. of OF. gole, goule (mod. F. goulet), the throat.—L. gula, the throat. Brugm. i. § 499. From the same source we have gules, q. v. Doublet, gully, q. v.

GULLY, a channel worn by water. (F.—L.) In Capt. Cook's Third Voyage, b. iv. c. 4 (R.). Formerly written gullet. 'It meteth afterward with another gullet, i.e. small stream; Holsbush, Desc. of Britain, c. 11 (R.). —F. goulet, 'a gullet, . . . a narrow brook or deep gutter of water; Cot. Thus the word is the same as Gullet, q. v. GULP, to swallow greedily and quickly. (E.) 'He has gulped me down, Lance; Icaum, and Fletcher. Wit without Money, A. i. sc. 2. ME. gulpen, glופן, glubben; 'Thi Gloton hedde i-gloupen (v. r. gloppid, ygulpid) a galoun; P. Plowman, A. v. 191. Of imitative origin. Cf. EFries. and Du. gulpen, to swallow eagerly; MDu. golen, gulpen, to quaff (Hexham); Du. gult, a great billow, wave, draught, gulp. β. Further allied to Swed. glupande, Dan. glubende, voracious; Swed. glup-sk, Dan. glub-sk, ravenous. From Teut. root gelp-*; as in Swed. dial. giopa (pt. t. giop, pl. giupum), to swallow, Norw. giopa (pt. t. giop), to swallow. Der. gulp, sb.

GUM (1), the flesh of the jaws. (E.) ME. gome. In Legends of the Holy Kood, ed. Morris, p. 218, l. 250, where it means 'palate.' 'Gome in mannys mowthe, pl. gomys, gingiva, vel gingivae, plur.;' Prompt. Parv. AS. goma, the palate, jaws; Grein, i. 523-4 Icel. gömr, the palate; Swed. gom, the palate; OHG. gomo, G. gumen, the palate. β. Allied to Gk. gymos, gaping; Lith. gomrys, the palate. See Brugm. i. § 196; where the AS. ō is explained as from ou. Der. gum-boul.

GUM (2), the hardened adhesive juice of certain trees. (F.—L.—Gk.—Egypt.) ME. gomme, Chaucer, Good Women, 121; P. Plowman, B. ii. 226. —F. gomme, gum. —L. gummi. —Gk. kyup, gum; but not orig. a Gk. word. Prob. of Egyptian origin. Cf. Coptic kōmē, gum; P. Pyron, Dict., p. 67. Der. gum, verb; gummi-ferous, from L. suffix -fer, bearing, which from ferre, to bear; gum-y, gummi-ness.

GUN, an engine for throwing projectiles. (Scand.) ME. gonne, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, 1643; P. Plowman, C. xxi. 293; King Alisaundra, ed. Weber, 3268. See note by Way in Prompt. Parv. p. 218. [W. gun, Irish gunna, gun, are from E.] Shortened from Icel. Gunnhildr, a fem. proper name (whence Gunnild in Havoklo), a name once given to war-engines, and appropriately enough, because the element gunn (Icel. gunnr) signifies 'war,' and hildr signifies 'battle.' This is confirmed by an account of munitions at Windsor Castle in 1330-1 (Exchequer Accts. Q. R. Bundle 18, no. 34), which mentions 'una magna balista de cornu quæ vocatur Domina Gunnilda.' In ME. Gunne would be the regular pet-name for Gunnhildr. A Gunnild is mentioned in the A. S. Chron. an. 1045 (MS. D); and Gunn is now a surname. Cf. also gonnyde gnoste, a spark of a gun; Politt. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 237. ¶ In Icel. poetry, gunn-eldr (war-fire) meant 'a sword, and gunn-máni (war-moon) meant 'a shield'. Der. gunn-er-y, gun-barrel, -boat, -carriage, -cotton, -powder, -shot, -smith, -stock; also gunn-wale, q. v.

GUNNY, a coarse kind of sacking for bags. (Hind.—Skt.) See Yule. —Hind. and Marhatti gōn, gōni, a sack, sacking. —Skt. gōni, a sack. Perhaps orig. made of hide; cf. Skt. gāus (stem gū-), an ox (Uhlenbeck).

GUNWALE, the upper edge of a ship's side. (Scand. and E.) Corruptly pronounced gunnel [ˈɡʊnəl]. In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Gunwale, or Gunnell of a Ship, a piece of timber that reaches from the halfdeck to the forecabin on either side'; Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Wales or Wails, those timbers on the ship's sides, which lie outmost, and are usually trod upon, when people climb up the sides to get into the ship'; id. β. Compounded of gun and wale; see Wale. So called because the guns used once to rest upon it; cf. 'some guns, that went with a swivel upon their gunnals'; Dampier, Voy., ed. 1729, i. 400. The sense of wale is 'stick' or 'beam', and secondly, 'the mark of a blow with a stick'.

GURGLE, to flow irregularly, with a slight noise. (Ital.—L.) 'To gurgling sound Of Lifty's tumbling streams'; Spenser, Mourning Muse of Thestylis, l. 3. Imitated from Ital. gorgolare, 'to gurgle vs water doth running', Florio; also gorgogliare, to gurgle, purl, bubble, boil; cf. gorgoglio, a warbling, the gurgling of a stream. The latter answers to a L. type gurgulio*, formed as if from L. gurgulio, the gullet. See Gorge. Brugmann, i. § 499. ¶ To be distinguished from gargle, though they were confused.

GURNARD, GURNET, a kind of fish. (F.—Prov.—L.; with Teut. suffix.) 'Gurnard, fische'; Prompt. Parv. 'Gurnarde, a fische, gournault'; Palsgrave. Shak. has gurnet, i. Hen. IV, iv. 2. 13. Cotgrave has: 'Gournault, a gurnard fish'; but the E. word answers rather to OF. gornard (Godefroy), F. gournard* (the suffixes -ard, -ald, -ault being convertible); and this again stands, by the not uncommon shifting of r, for grounard*. The latter form is represented in Cotgrave by 'Grougnaut, a gurnard', marked as being a Languedoc word; cf. Prov. gournan, grougnan, a gurnard (Mistral). From Prov. gourgnas, grougnas, to grunt (which shows that the word is really of Prov. origin). β. Again, we find another form of the word in MF. grougnard (mod. F. groggnard), explained by Cotgrave as 'grunting'; and, in fact, the word gurnard means 'grunter'. Godefroy has OF. grougnart, gruinar, 'grondant'. 'The gurnards... derive their popular appellation from a grunting noise which they make when taken out of the water'; Eng. Cyclop. s.v. Trigla. γ. The F. groggnard is formed by the suffix -ard (= OHG. hard, hart) from F. grogner, for OF. grogner, gronir, to grunt.—L. grunnire, to grunt. See Grunt. The Prov. word is similar.

GUSH, to flow out swiftly. (E.) ME. guschen, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1130. Cf. EFries. gusen, to gush out; Low G. gusen (Berghaus). Allied to MDu. guyven, to gush out (Kilian); Icel. gusa, to gush, spurt out, a derivative of the strong verb giösa (pt. i. gavus, pp. gossinn), to gush, break out as a volcano. Also Du. gushen, to gush; 'het bloed gushde uit zyne wonde, the blood did gush out of his wound'; Sewel. From Idg. gheud*, to pour (Gk. χεύω); whence gheud*, to pour (L. funderē (F. fuse), Goth. gutan, G. giessen, Icel. giöta, Swed. giöta, Dan. gyde, AS. geotan, to pour). See Gut, Geyser, and Fuse. ¶ The final s suggests a Teut. base gut-sk*, extended from gut-, weak grade of Teut. gut-, Idg. gheut-*. Der. gush-ing, gush-ing-ly; gust (1), q. v.

GUSSET, a small insertion of cloth in a garment, for the purpose of enlarging it. (F.) Particularly used of a piece of chain-mail protecting a joint in armour (see gloss to Fairholt's Costume), or an insertion in the armhole of a shirt. ME. guschet, Wallace, bk. ii. 63. The word occurs in Du Wes; see Palsgrave's Dict., p. 906, col. 3.—F. gousset, 'a gusset'; the piece of armour, or of a shirt, whereby the arme-boole is covered; ¶ Cot. β. Named from some fancied resemblance to the husk of a bean or pea; the word being a dimin. of F. gousse, 'the huske, swad, cod, hull of beanes, jase, &c.'; Cot. † Ital. guscio, a shell, husk; a word of unknown origin.

GUST (1), a sudden blast or gush of wind. (Scand.) In Shak. Mer. of Ven. iv. 1. 77.—Icel. gust, a gust, blast; cf. also giösta, a gust. Cf. Swed. dial. gust, a stream of air from an oven (Rietz); Norw. gust, a gust.—Icel. gus, weak grade of giösta, to gush. See Gush. Der. gust-y, gust-i-me.

GUST (2), relish, taste. (L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 3. 33; and in Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 39.—L. gustus, a tasting, taste (whence F. gout); gustare, to taste.—gheud*, to choose; whence also Skt. gust, to enjoy, like, Gk. γύστω, to taste, and E. choose. See Choose. Doublet, gusto, the Ital. form of the word. Der. dis-gust, q. v.

GUT, the intestinal canal. (E.) [The same word as prov. E. gut, a water-course, wide ditch; ME. gote, Prompt. Parv. p. 205; see Way's note.] ME. gutte, gote; P. Plowman, B. i. 36; Rob. of Glouc. p. 289, l. 5865. AS. gut; pl. gutas; 'receptacula viscerum'; A. S. Gloss. in Mone's Quellen und Forschungen, i. 1830, p. 333, l. 198. β. The orig. sense is 'channel'; cf. Swed. giuta, a mill-lead (Rietz); Dan. gyde, a lane; MDu. gote, a channel (Hexham); G. gosse, a drain; ME. gote, prov. F. gut, a drain, water-course. γ. All from the Idg. weak grade gheut-* (Teut. gut-) of gheud, to pour; see Gush, Fuse. ¶ Not connected with gutter, which is of Latin origin. Der. gut, verb.

GUTTA-PERCHA, a solidified juice of certain trees. (Malay.) 'Made known in England in 1843'; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. The trees yielding it abound in the Malayan peninsula and in Borneo.—Malay gatah, gutta, gum, balsam (Marsden's Malay Dict., p. 283); and percha, the name of the tree producing it (though now obtained from other trees). Hence the sense is 'gum of the Percha-tree.' β. The spelling gutta is obviously due to confusion with the L. gutta, a drop, with which it has nothing whatever to do. 'Gutta in Malay means gum, percha is the name of the tree (Isanandra percha), or of an island from which the tree was first imported (Pulo-percha)'; Max Müller, Lect. on Language, 8th ed. i. 231. The former seems to be right; see C. P. G. Scott, Malayan Words in F.

GUTTER, a channel for water. (F.—L.) ME. gutere; Prompt. Parv. The pl. guteres is in Trevisa, i. 181.—OF. gultiere, goutiere; see quotations in Littré, s.v. gouttiere, a gutter; cf. Span. gotera, a gutter. β. Esp. used of the duct for catching the drippings of the eaves of a roof; from OF. gote, goute (mod. F. goutte), a drop.—L. gutta, a drop. See Gout (1). Der. gutter, verb.

GUTTURAL, pertaining to the throat. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave.—F. guttural, 'guttural, belonging to the throat'; Cot.—L. gutturāl; formed with suffix -ālis from guttur, the throat. Der. guttural-ly (2).

GUY (1), a hideous creature, a fright. (F.—Ital.—Teut.) Orig. an effigy of Guy Fawkes; carried about and burnt on Nov. 5; see Hone, Every-day Book, i. 1430.—F. Guy.—Ital. Guido; a name of Teut. origin.

GUY (2), GUY-ROPE, a rope used to steady a weight. (F.—Teut.) A nautical term. Spelt guie in Capt. J. Smith, Works, ed. Arber, p. 795. Dunbar has guy = a guide; p. 278, l. 1 (S. T. S.). In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Guy, a rope made use of to keep anything from falling or bearing against a ship's side, when it is to be hoisted in'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.—OF. guie, guie, a guide; cf. Span. guia, a guide, leader, guy.—F. guier, to guide; earlier form of F. guider, to guide. See Guide.

GUZZLE, to swallow greedily. (F.) 'Guzzle, to drink greedily, to tittle'; Kersey, ed. 1715. Cotgrave explains OF. martiner by 'to quaff, swill, guzzle'. Prob. suggested by OF. goussier, gosillier, to vomit, also to prattle, talk (Godefroy); whence (in Cotgrave) the comp. desgoussier, 'to gulp, to swallow down.' But OF. desgoussier had both senses. Cf. also F. s'goussier, to make one's throat sore with shouting; clearly connected with OF. gosillier, the throat (Godefroy), and F. gosier, the throat. β. Littré connects gosier with Lorraine gosse, the throat, the stomach of fatted animals. Remoter source unknown; see Kürtling, § 4237. Der. guzzler.

GYMNASIUM, a place for athletic exercises. (L.—Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. gymnasium.—Gk. γυμνάσιον, an athletic school; so called because the athletes were naked when practising their exercises.—Gk. γυμνάσιον, to train naked, to exercise.—Gk. γυμνός, more commonly γυμνός, naked. See Prellwitz. Der. From the same source are gymnast = Gk. γυμναστής, a trainer of athletes; gymnastic, gymnastics; also gymnic, from L. gymnicus, Gk. γυμνικός, Milton, Samson Agon. 1324; also gymno-sophist, Ben Jonson, Fortunato Isles (Merefool), from L. pl. gymno-sophista, Gk. pl. γυμνο-sophισται, lit. 'naked sophists.' Also gymnotus, an electric eel; lit. 'naked back', from the absence of dorsal fins upon it; short for gymno-notus, from Gk. γυμνός, naked, and νῶτος, back.

GYNARCHY, government by a woman. (Gk.) Spelt gumarchy by Lord Chesterfield (Todd). Coined from Gk. γυνή, a woman, and -αρχία, -αρχή, rule, from ἀρχω, to rule; cf. olig-archy, tetra-archy, &c. See Queen.

GYPSUM, a mineral containing sulphate of lime and water. (L.—Gk.—Arab.) 'Gypsum, parget, white-lime, plaster; also, the parget-stone'; Kersey, ed. 1715.—L. gypsum, chalk.—Gk. γύψος, for γύψος, chalk; Herod. vii. 69. β. Prob. of Eastern origin; cf. Pers. jabsin, lime; Arab. jibs, plaster, mortar; Rich. Dict. p. 494.

GYPSEY, GIPSEY, one of a certain nomad race. (F.—L.—Gk.—Egypt.) Spelt gipsen by Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, l. 86; see Giption in Nares. This is a mere corruption of ME. Egyptien, an Egyptian. Chaucer calls St. Mary of Egypt 'the Egyptien Marie'; C. T., B 500 (l. 4920); and Skelton, swearing by the same saint, says 'By Mary Gipsy!' Garland of Laurell, 1455.—OF. Egyptien, Egyptien.—Late L. Egyptianus, formed with suffix -ānus from L. Egyptus, an Egyptian. — Gk. Αἴγυρος, an Egyptian. — Gk. Αἴγυρος, Egypt. From the name of the country. ☞ The supposition that they were Egyptians was false; their orig. home was India. Der. Hence perhaps gyp, a college scout (at Cambridge); cf. Gip (dog's name) in David Copperfield. The common fable that gyp is from Gk. γύψ, a vulture, is unsupported.

GYRE, a circle, circular compass. (L. — Gk.) 'Or hurtle round in whirling gyre'; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 8; cf. iii. 1. 23. — L. gyrus, a circle, circuit. — Gk. γῶγος, a ring, circle; cf. γῶγος, adj. round. GYRFALCON, GERFALCON, a bird of prey. (F. — Teut. and L.) 'Gyrfalcon, a bird of prey'; Kersey, ed. 1715; spelt gerfalcon in Cotgrave; gyrfalcon in Trevisa, i. 323, to translate L. gyrfalcon. a. The prefix is French, the word being from OF. gerfalcon, gyrfalcon (Godefroy), MF. gerfaut, 'a gerfalcon, the greatest of hawks, called also falcon gerfaut'; Cot. Cf. Ital. gerfalco, gyrfalco, gyrfalco, a gerfalcon. — Low L. gýrofalco, a gerfalcon, in 55 Hen. III. Excerpta Historica, p. 20; and (corruptly) gyrfalco (as it named from his circling flight; see GYRE above). The right form is gyrfalco. — MHG. gyrvalke; where gyr is from OIIG. gyr-, for giri, greedy (whence also G. gier, a vulture; and valke represents L. falco, a falcon. See Gier-ogale.

GYRON, a term in heraldry. See Giron.

GYVES, fetters. (AF. — E.) In early use; only in the plural. ME. gyves, gyues (with u for v); Layamon, 15338; P. Plowman, C. xvi. 254. The v was orig. hard; we find 'gyuyves de ferro' in Records of Nottingham, iii. 100 (1505); ghuyves (for gyuyves), Allit. Morte Arthure, 3631. From AF. gyuyves, pl., spelt gyuyves, Fr. Chron. of London, p. 89. Of unknown origin; presumably Teutonic, and perhaps E.; probably from AS. wōðe, a thong, cord; see Layamon, 15338, 22833 (N. E. D.).

H

HA, an exclamation. (E.) 'A ha! the fox!' Chaucer, C. T. 15387 (B 4571). When reduplicated, it signifies laughter. 'Ha! ha! ha!' Temp. ii. 1. 36. Common in Shak. as an exclamation of surprise. Of onomatopoeitic origin; see also Ah, Ofries, kaha, to denote laughter; MII.G. hā, G. he; MII.G. hāhā; OF. ha.

HABERDASHER, a seller of small wares. (AF.) 'An haberdasher'; Chaucer, C. T. 363 (A 361). 'The haberdasher heapeth wealth by hattes'; Gascogne, Fruits of War, st. 64. 'Haberdasher, a hatter, or seller of hats; also, a dealer in small wares'; Kersey. 'A haberdasher, mercier, a poor, petty haberdasher of small wares, mercer'; Sherwood, index to Cotgrave. a. So named from selling a stuff called haperas in Anglo-French, of which (possibly) hats were sometimes made. In the Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 225, is mentioned 'la charge de haperas'; in the E. version by Riley, 'the load of haperas'. And again, at p. 230, we find 'les fees de leyne d'Espagne, wadmial, mercerie, canevass, . . . feute, lormerie, peill, haberdassherie, esquireux, . . . et des autres choses qe l'em custument par fee, vi. d.'; thus Englished by Riley: 'the fixed charge upon wool of Spain, wadmial, mercery, canvas, . . . felt, lymere, pile, haberdassherie, squirrel-skins, . . . and upon other articles that pay custom at a fixed rate, is six pence.' β. The word is probably of Teutonic origin; but its history is not known. Der. haberdasher-y.

HABERGEON, a piece of armour to defend the neck and breast. (F. — OIIG.) ME. habergeon, Chaucer, C. T. 76; habergeoun, Wyclif, 1 Kings, xvii. 5. — OF. habergeon, habergeon, a small hauberk (Supp. to Godefroy); dimin. of OF. haubere; see Hauberk.

HABITAMENT, dress, attire. (F. — L.) 'The whiche funnyshynge his people with all habylmentys of warre'; Fabian's Chron., Charles VII. (of France); ed. Ellis, p. 553. — F. habillement, 'apparel, clothing'; Cot. Formed with suffix -ment from habiller, 'to clothe, dress, apparel'; Cot. β. The verb habiller signified orig. 'to get ready', from the F. habile, able, ready; which is from the L. habilis, manageable, fit. See Able. Der. from the same source, dis-habille, q.v.

HABIT, practice, custom, dress. (F. — L.) ME. habit, abit; the latter spelling being common. Spelt habit, P. Plowman, B. prol. 3; abit, id. C. prol. 3; Ancien Riwle, p. 12, l. 8. — OF. habite, 'a garment, raiment, . . . also, an habit, a fashion settled, a use or custom gotten'; Cot. — L. habitum, acc. of habitus, condition, habit, dress, attire. — L. habitus, held in a certain condition, pp. of habere, to have, hold, keep. See Brugmann, i. § 638. Der. habit, verb; pp. habited, i.e. dressed, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 557; habit-u-al, from MF. habitual (mod. F. habituel), explained 'habitual' by Cotgrave, and from Late L. habitu-ilis, formed with suffix -ilis from habitu-, for habitus, habit; habit-u-al-ly; habitu-ate, from L. habitus, from pp. of habitare, to bring into a certain habit or condition. Also, from the same source, habit-ude, q.v., habitable, q.v., habit-at, q.v., habit-at-ion, q.v., hab-ili-ment, q.v. See Habit. Der. habitabl-y, habitable-ness, inhabitable.

HABITANT, an inhabitant. (F. — L.) In Milton, P. L. viii. 99; x. 588. Spelt habitant in Palsgrave. — F. habitant, 'an inhabitant'; Cot.; pres. part. of F. habiter, to dwell. — L. habitare, to dwell (alove). Der. in-habitant.

HABITAT, the natural abode of an animal or plant. (L.) A word coined for use in works on natural history. It means 'it dwells (there)'. — L. habitat, 3 pers. s. pres. of habitare, to dwell.

HABITATION, a dwelling. (F. — L.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 17. ME. habitation, Chaucer, C. T. 2928 (A 2926). — F. habitation, 'a habitation'; Cot. — L. habitationem, acc. of habitiō, a dwelling. — L. habitare, to dwell. See Habitable.

HACK (1), to cut, chop, mangle. (E.) ME. hakken. 'To hakke and hewe'; Chaucer, C. T. 2867 (A 2865). 'Hacked of his heaved' — hacks off his head; Ancien Riwle, p. 298. AS. haccian, to cut; in comp. to-haccian, of which the pt. t. to-haccode occurs in St. Veronica, ed. Goodwin, p. 36, l. 22. + Du. hacken, to hew, chop; Dan. hakke, to hack, hoe; Swed. kacka, to chop; G. hacken, to chop, cleave. Teut. type, hakkon-, or hakkjan-. ☞ Mr. Oliphant calls attention to ONorthumb. hackaude, troublesome, in Early Eng. Psalter, Surtees Soc., Ps. xxxiv. 13. 'Hence, perhaps, our "hacking cough".'

HACK (2), a hackney. See Hackney.

HACKBUT, an arquebus, an old kind of musket. (F. — O. Low G.) In Hollinshed, Hist. Scotland, an. 1583; hackbutter, a man armed with a hackbut, id. an. 1544. Rich. says that 'the 33 Hen. VIII. c. 6, regulates the length in stock and gun of the hackbut or demiquaque, and sets forth who may keep and use them.' Also spelt hackbut, less correctly. — MF. haquebute, 'an haquebute, or arquebuse, a caliver'; Cot. β. A less correct form of hackbush, formerly hakebuse, as in Naval Accounts of Hen. VII (1485), p. 50; see Arquebus. A mere corruption of Low G. hakebuisse, Du. hakenbus (hockbuse in Hexham), an arquebus; due, apparently, to some confusion with OF. bute, to thrust.

HACKERY, a bullock-cart. (Hindī — Skt.?) Anglo-Indian. See Supp. to Yule, who suggests Hindī chakra, a wheel, a cart; from Skt. chakra, a wheel. Forbes gives Hind. chhakṛā, a kind of carriage, car.

HACKLE (1), HATCHEL, an instrument for dressing flax or hemp. (E.) Also spelt Heckle, q.v.

HACKLE (2), long shining feathers on a cock's neck; or a fly for angling, dressed with such feathers. (E.) It appears to be the same word as the above; see N. E. D.

HACKNEY, HACK, a horse let out for hire. (E.) ME. hakenei, Chaucer, C. T. 16027 (G 559); P. Plowman, B. v. 318. Late L. hackneus, as early as 1292; 'pro hackeneio ferente tunicam nocturnam et res alias'; Expenses of John of Brabant; in The Camden Miscellany, vol. ii. p. 2. Cf. AF. un hackenay, Stat. Realm, i. 288 (1340); sur hackenay, P. Langtoft's Chron. ii. 250 (1307). Hackeneus means 'belonging to Hackney', spelt Hakeneia in 1199, Rotuli Curie Regis, ed. Palgrave, i. 216; ME. Hakeney (Middlesex); Inquis. p. Mortem (1285). See Supplement. Der. hackney-ed.

HADDOCK, a sea-fish. (E.) ME. haddoke. 'Hic morus, a haddocke'; Wright's Vocab. i. 222, col. 2. Spelt haddok, Prompt. Parv.; and in Liber Albus, p. 376. Of unknown origin; the Gael. adag, a haddock, is a borrowed word from English; similarly, the OF. hadot, 'a salt haddock' (Cotgrave), is plainly a less original form. The suffix -ock is perhaps diminutive, as in hill-ock. The Irish name is codog.

HADES, the abode of the dead. (Gk.) Spelt Ades, Milton, P. L. ii. 964. — Gk. ᾍδης, ᾍδης (Attic), ᾍδης (Ionic), the nether world. 'Usually derived from a, privative, and hōēr, to see [as though it meant 'the unseen']'; but the aspirate in Attic makes this very doubtful; 'Liddell and Scott. See Homer, II. i. 3. And see the account in Prellwitz.

HADJI, HAJJI, one who has performed the pilgrimage to Mecca. (Arab.) First in 1612. = Arab. hājī, 'a Christian who has performed the pilgrimage to Jerusalem, or a Muhammadan (who has performed)' that to Mecca; 'Rich. Dict., p. 549. Orig. the latter.

HEMATITE, HÆMORRHAGE; see Hematite, Hemorrhage.

HAFT, a handle. (E.) ME. haft, heft. 'Los in the haft' = loose in the handle; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 339. Spelt haft, Wyclif, Deut. xix. 5; heft, Prompt. Parv. AS. haft, a handle; Grein, ii. 20. + Du. heft, hecht; Icel. hefti (pron. hefti); G. heft, a handle, hilt, portion of a book. β. The orig. sense is 'that which is seized, or caught up'; cf. the pp. seen in Icel. haftr, one who is taken, a prisoner, and Goth. hafsts, joined together; with which compare L. captus, taken. γ. All from the verb seen in AS. hebban, L. capere. See Heave.

HAG, an ugly old woman. (E.) ME. hagge; P. Plowman, B. v. 191. The pl. haggens is in the Ancra Riwle, p. 216. The AS. form is fuller, viz. hægtis, hægtesse, used to translate L. pythonissa, a prophetess or witch; Wright's Vocab. i. 60, col. 1. In the same column, we also find: 'Tysiphona, wælcyrre; Parca, hægtesse'; on which Mr. Wright remarks: 'The Anglo-Saxon of these worlds would appear to be transposed. Hægtesse means properly a fury, or in its modern representative, a hag, and would apply singly to Tysiphona, while wælcyrrian was the name of the three fates of the A. S. mythology.' + G. hexe, a witch; OHG. hæizisa, apparently short for hægazissa, also hægazussa. β. The suffix -tisse, OHG. -zissa, contains a feminine ending; the base is possibly (as has been suggested) the AS. haga (G. hag), a hedge, bush; it being supposed that witches were seen in bushes by night. See Hedge, and Haggard. Schade refers the AS. -tisse to tesian, to harm, from tesu, teson, harm; thus -tisse = 'harmer'. Der. hag-gard (2), q.v.; and even haggard (1) is from the same base.

HAGGARD (1), wild, said of a hawk. (F.-G.) Orig. the name of a wild, untrained hawk. 'As hagard hauke'; Spenser, F. Q. i. 11. 19. 'For hagard hawks mislike an empty hand'; Gascoigne's Flowers, Memories, John Vaughan's Theme, l. 26. = OF. hagard, 'hagard, wild, strange, froward'. Faulcon hagard, a hagard, a falcon that preyed for herself long before she was taken; 'Cot. β. The orig. sense is 'living in a hedge,' hence, wild. Formed with suffix -ard (of G. origin, G. -hart), from MHG. hag (OHG. har), a hedge; see Hedge, Haw. See Hatzfeld.

HAGGARD (2), lean, hollow-eyed, meagre. (F.-G.) 'With haggard eyes they stare'; Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Georg. iv. 370. Altered sometimes to haggad, as if 'hag-like.' 'The ghostly prudes with haggad face'; Gray, A Long Story, 4th stanza from end. Wedgwood cites from Lestrang's Fables: 'A haggad carrion of a wolf and a jolly sort of dog with good flesh upon 's back fell into company.' A peculiar use of the word above; 'wild,' hence 'gaunt.' See Hatzfeld.

HAGGIS, a dish commonly made in a sheep's maw, of the minced lungs, heart, and liver of the same animal. (Scand.) with AF. suffix. ME. hagus, hageys, hakkys, Prompt. Parv. Also spelt haggas, haggas, hakrys; see notes to Prompt. Parv., and to the Catholicon Anglicum, p. 169; also the account in Jamieson. The AF. form is hagiz; see Wright's Vocab. i. 172, l. 6: 'Estre le hagiz du pocenet,' to take the hagiz out of the pot. Formed, with AF. suffix -iz, -eis, from the verb hag, to cut, found also in the E. frequentative haggle; see Haggle (1); cf. Norm. dial. haguer, to cut up (Moisy). Cf. also Du. haksel, minced meat, and Low G. haks sn plak, a kind of hash or mince. ¶ The Gael. taigais, a haggis, is merely borrowed from English.

HAGGLE (1), to cut awkwardly, mangle. (Scand.) 'York, all haggled over'; Ilen, V. iv. 6. 11. A frequentative of Lowland Sc. hag, to cut, to hew. = Icel. haggun, to hew, from a base haggw*- (Noreen, § 72, note 8); Swed. dial. hagga, to hew (Kietz); allied to E. hew; see Hew.

HAGGLE (2), to be slow in making a bargain. (Scand.) Cotgrave explains OF. harceler by 'to vex, harry, . . . also, to haggle, hucke, hedge, or pautler long in the buying of a commodity.' He similarly explains baguigner by 'to chaffer, . . . dodge, haggle, brabble, in the making of a bargain.' It is plain that haggle is a weakened form of the same word. β. It seems probable that haggle is ultimately the same as the word above. Similarly we have Du. hakkelen, to mangle, to stammer; explained by Sewel as 'to hackle, mangle, fault'; also Du. hakkeleren, to wrangle, cavil; both derivatives of Du. hakken, to hack. Der. haggl-er; and see Higgle.

HAGIOGRAPHA, holy writings. (Gk.) A name given to the last of the three Jewish divisions of the Old Testament, containing Ps., Prov., Job, Dan., Ez., Nehem., Ruth, Esther, Chron., Cant., Lam., and Eccles. = Gk. ἀγιόγραφα (βιβλία), books written by inspiration. = Gk. ἀγιο-, for ἀγιο-, devoted to the gods, sacred, holy; and γραφειν, to write. β. ἀγιο- is allied to Skt. yaj, to worship. For γραφειν, see Graphio. Der. hagiography (in Minshew), hagiograph-er; cf. hagio-logi, sacred literature.

HA-HA, HAW-HAW, a snuk fence. (F.) 'Leap each ha-ha of truth and common sense'; Mason, Ep. to Sir W. Chambers, l. 14. = F. kaha, an obstacle that interrupts one suddenly; called ha! ha! because it laughs at the man's surprise who meets it. = F. ha! interjection of laughter. ¶ With the prom. haw-haw compare E. spaw for spa. 'Just by the haw-haw'; Murphy, Three Weeks after Marriage, A. i. sc. 1 (1776).

HAIL (1), frozen rain. (E.) ME. hæil, Layamon, 11075; spelt hæwel in the later text. Later hayl (by loss of y or w), Chaucer, Good Women, Cleop. 76. AS. hagl, hagol; Grein, + Icel. hagl; Du., Dan., Swed. hagel; G. hagel. Teut. types hag(a)loz*, m., hag(a)lōm*, n. Allied to Gk. ἀέτης, a round pelt; so that hail-stone is tautological. Der. hail, verb, ME. hailen, Prompt. Parv.; also hail-stone, ME. hail-stone, Wyclif, Wisdom, v. 23 (later text).

HAIL (2), to greet, call to, address. (Scand.) ME. heilen. 'Heylyn, or gretyn, saluto'; Prompt. Parv. Spelt heyllen (for heglen), Ormulum, 2814. A verb formed from Icel. heill, sb., prosperity, good luck; a sb. formed from Icel. heill, adj., hale, sound. This sb. was particularly used in greeting, as in far heill, farewell! β. The usual Icel. verb is heilsa, to say hail to one, to greet one, whence ME. hailen, to greet. In F. Plowman, B. v. 101, we have: 'I hailse hym hendeliche, as I his frende were' = I greet him readily, as if I were his friend; and, in this very passage, the Hodley MS. reads: 'I haille him.' Cf. Swed. heil, hale, Dan. heil, hale, whole. See Hale (1), and Whole.

HAIL! (3), an exclamation of greeting. (Scand.) 'All hail, great master! I grave sir, hail, I come!' Temp. i. 2. 189. 'Hail be jow, mary' = Lat. ave Maria; Myrc's Instructions for Parish Priests, ed. Peacock, l. 422. = Icel. heill, hale, whole, adj., heill, good luck, sb. See Hail (2). β. Similar is the use of AS. wes hail, lit. be whole, may you be in good health; but the AS. heil produced the E. whole, and the Northern E. hale. See Wassail.

HAIR, a filament growing from the skin of an animal. (E.; and influenced by F.) ME. herr, her, Chaucer, C. T. 591 (A 589); Ancra Riwle, p. 424. AS. hær, hær, Grein, ii. 24. + Du. haar; Icel. hær; Dan. haar; Swed. hår; G. haar, OHG. hær. Teut. type hærom*, n. β. But this would have given a mod. E. form hear or here; cf. heares in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 8. 4. The form now in use is due to the influence of ME. heire, heyre, a hair shirt; P. Plowman, B. v. 66; from OF. haire, a hair shirt; and this OF. form is from OHG. hærra (< hær-jā*), hair-cloth, a fem. derivative from OHG. hær, hair. γ. The AS. hær is further related to Icel. haddr, hair (Teut. type hazdoz*); and to Lith. kassa, plaited hair; L. cirere, to card wool. Der. hair-y, ME. heer, Wyclif, Gen. xxvii. 11; hair-i-ness; hair-less; also hair-breadth, -cloth, -powder, -splitting, -spring, -stroke, -trigger, -worm.

HAIRIF, HAYRIF, goose-grass; Galium Aparine. (E.) AS. hege-rife, goose-grass. = AS. hege, a hedge (see Hay (2)); and -rife, prob. allied to Rife, and meaning 'abundant.'

HAKE, a sea-fish of the cod family. (Scand.) 'Hake, fische, squilla'; Prompt. Parv. = Norw. hakfisk (lit. hook-fish), a fish with hooked under-jaw, esp. of salmon and trout (Ansen); from Norw. hake, a hook; see Hook. β. Compare AS. hacod, glossed by L. lucius; Wright's Vocab. i. 55, col. 2; whence Prov. E. haked, a large pike (Cambridgeshire); Blount's Gloss; allied to G. hecht MHG. hechel, OHG. hachit, a pike. We may explain AS. hac-od as furnished with sharp teeth; from Teut. hak-*, to pierce, as in OHG. hecken, MHG. hecken (from hak-jan-*), to pierce, sting; see Hook.

HAKIM, a physician, doctor. (Arab.) 'The Doctors are named hakeems'; Sir T. Herbert, Trav. (ed. 1638), p. 234. = Arab. hakim, wise; also a doctor, physician. = Arab. root hakama, he exercised authority; Rich. Dict., p. 577.

HALBERD, HALBERT, a kind of pole-axe; a combination of spear and battle-axe, with a long handle. (F. - MHG.) In Shak. Com. Errors, v. 185; and in Naval Accounts (1497); ed. 1896, p. 99. An AF. halebarde occurs in 1372; Antiq. Repertory, ii. 27, col. 2. Ben Jonson has halberdiers, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, iii. 5. 14. = OF. halebarde, 'an halberd'; Cot. = MHG. helmbarte, later halembarte, mod. G. hellebarde, an axe with which to split a helmet, furnished with a conveniently long handle, derived from MHG. (and G.) helm, a helmet; and MHG. (and G.) barte, OHG. barta, a broad axe. The latter element is derived from G. bart, a beard; just as Icel. skeggja, an axe, is from skegg, a beard; and see Barb (1). Cf. Icel. barða, a halberd. β. The former element has also been explained as 'long handle'; from MHG. halm, a helve, handle; see Helm (1); but this explanation is no longer favoured; see Kluge and Darmesteter. The halberd may have been named from the jagged and irregular shape of the iron head. Der. halberd-ier, OHG. halberdier, 'an halberdier'; Cot.

HALCYON, a king-fisher; as adj., serene. (L.—Gk.). 'Halcyon days'—calm days; 1 Hen. VI, i. 2. 131. It was supposed that the weather was always calm when the kingfishers were breeding. 'They lay and sit about midwinter, when dates be shortest; and the time whilles they are broody, is called the halcyon days; for during that season, the sea is calme and navigable, especially in the coast of Sicilie'; 1 Holland's Pliny, b. x. c. 32.—L. halcyon, commonly alcyon, a kingfisher.—Gk. ἁλκυών, ἁλκυών, a kingfisher. β. The aspirate seems to be wrong, and due to association with Gk. ἁλς, sea, combined with κύων, 'conceiving'; by popular etymology; but the Gk. name is clearly cognate with L. alcyon, the true L. name for the bird.

HALE (1), whole, healthy, sound. (E.). 'For they bene hale enough, I trowe'; Spenser, Sheph. Kal. July, 107. A Northern E. form; spelt hale in Cursor Mundi, 24888. It is the Northern form corresponding to AS. hāl, whence ME. hual, E. whole. See Who's.

HALE (2), HAUL, to drag, draw violently. (F.—OHG.). ME. halien, halen; whence mod. E. hale and a later form haul; it appears as hail in 1581. Spelt halie, P. Plowman, B. viii. 95; hale, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 151.—F. haler, to pull; which first appears in the 12th cent. (Hatzfeld).—OHG. halān, halōn (G. haleu), to summon, to fetch.—OFr. halia, to fetch; OSax. halin, to bring, fetch; Du. halen, to fetch, draw, pull; Low G. halen (whence Dan. hale, Swed. halen), to pull, haul. Allied to AS. ge-halian, to acquire, get; L. calare, to summon; Gk. καλέω, to summon. See Calenda. Der. haul, sb., haul-er, haul-age; also halyard, q.v. β. Hale is the older form; we find 'halede hine to grunde'—haled him to the ground, Layamon, 25888 (later text); haul first occurs in the pp. ihauled, Life of Iket, ed. W. H. Black, l. 1497.

HALF, one of two equal parts of a thing. (E.). ME. half; 'half a bushel'; Chaucer, C. T. 4242 (A 4244). OMerc. half; AS. healf, Northumb. healf, Luke, xix. 8; where the later AS. text has half. + Du. half; Icel. hálf; Swed. halv; Dan. halv; Goth. halbs; G. halb, OHG. halp. β. In close connexion with this adj. we find ME. half, AS. healf (Gen. xiii. 9), Icel. hálfa, Goth. halba, OHG. halpa, used with the sense of 'side', or 'part'; and this may have been the orig. sense. It occurs, e.g. in the Goth. version of 2 Cor. iii. 10, where the Gk. ἐν τούτῳ τῷ μέρει is translated by in thizai halbai. γ. A late example of the sb. is in the phrase left half—left side, or left hand; P. Plowman, B. ii. 5. It survives in mod. F. behalf; see Behalf. Cf. Skt. kalp-aya (causal of kalp), to arrange, to distribute (Uhlenbeck). Der. halve, verb, ME. halven (= halven), Wyclif, Ps. liv. 24; halv-ed: half-blood, half-breed, half-bred, half-brother, half-sister, half-moon, half-pay, half-way, half-witted, half-yearly. Also half-penny, in which the f (as well as the l) has long been lost in pronunciation; spelt halpenny, P. Plowman, B. vi. 307. Also be-half.

HALIBUT, a large flat-fish. (E.). 'Halibut, a fish like a plaice'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Cotgrave translates OF. stalelet by 'a halibut (fish)'. Spelt halybut in Fabyan's Chron., ed. Ellis, p. 587. Compounded of ME. hali, holy see Holy, and butte, a flounder, plaice, which occurs in Havelok, 759. See Butt (4). So called because excellent eating for holidays; the sense being 'holy (i.e. holiday) plaice'. The fish often attains to a large size, and weighs as much as 400 lbs. The cognate languages have similar names for it. + Du. halibut; from heilig, holy, and bot, a plaice. Cf. Swed. helgöfunda, from helg, holidays, and funda, a flounder; Dan. helle-flynder. from hellig, holy, and flynder, a flounder.

HALIDOM, a holy relic. (E.) ME. halidom, halidom. 'That dar y swere on the halidom;' Rob. of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, l. 5629. AS. haligdōm; 'on þām haligdōme swerian', swear on the halidom, Laws of Æthelred, sect. 3, c. 2; in Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 293.—AS. hālig, holy; and -dōm, suffix, orig. the same as dōm, doom. See Holy and Doom. + Du. heilgdom; Icel. heilgðinn, Dan. heilgdom; G. heiligtum. ¶ By my halidom (with -dam for -dom) was imagined to refer to our Lady (Dame).

HALL, a large room. (E.) ME. halle, Chaucer, C. T. 2523 (A 3521). OMerc. hall; AS. heall, heal, Grein, ii. 50; the acc. healle occurs in Mark, xiv. 15, where the latest text has halle. + Du. hal; Icel. hall, höll; OSwed. hall. (The G. halle is a borrowed word.) Teut. type hallā*, f. for halina*; from hal*, 2nd grade of hela-*, to cover, shelter; cf. AS. helan, to hide, conceal, cover; just as the L. cella is allied to L. cēlāre, to conceal, cover; the orig. sense being 'cover,' or place of shelter. See Cell. Der. hall-mark, guild-hall, hallmote. ¶ Quite unconnected with L. aula.

HALLELUJAH, the same as Alleluiah, q.v.

HALLIARD, the same as Halyard, q.v.

HALLOO, HOLLOW, to shout. (F.). ME. halowen, to chase with shouts; Chaucer, Book Duch. 379; Rich. Redecles, iii. 228; cf. 'Hallow, schymmannys ere, Colema;' Prompt. Parv.—OF. halloer, to pursue with shouts (Godefroy). Of imitative origin. Cotgrave has F. halles, 'an interj. of cheering or setting on a dog,' whence haller, 'to hallow, or encourage dogs with hallowing.'

HALLOW, to sanctify, make holy. (E.) ME. halpien, Layamon, 17496; later halwe, P. Plowman, B. xv. 557; halweu, halowe, Wyclif, John, xi. 55. AS. hālgian, to make holy; from hālig, holy. See Holy. And see below.

HALLOWMASS, the feast of All Hallows or All Saints. (Hybrid; E. and L.). In Shak. Rich. II, v. i. 80. A familiar abbreviation for All Hallows' Mass—the mass (or feast) of All Saints. In Eng. Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, p. 351, we have the expression alle halowene tyd—all hallows' tide; and again, the tyrne of all halowene—the time of all hallows. β. Here halowen is the gen. pl. of hallow, ME. halwe, a saint; just as halowene is the ME. gen. pl. of the same word. The pl. halwes (= saints) occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 14. γ. The ME. halwe = AS. hālgā, definite form of the adj. hālig, holy; so also the ME. halowene = AS. hālgana, definite form of the gen. pl. of the same adj. See Holy, and see Mass (2). 2. Similarly, halloewen—all hallows' even.

HALLUCINATION, wandering of mind. (L.). 'For if vision be abolished, it is called caecitas, or blindness; if depraved, and receive its objects erroneously, hallucination;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 18, § 4. Also in Minshew, ed. 1627. Formed, by analogy with F. sbs. in -tion, from L. hallucinatio, allucinatio, or ālucinatio, a wandering of the mind.—L. ālucināri, ālucināri, or ālucināri, to wander in mind, dream, rave. Cf. Gk. ἀλύνειν, ἀλύνειν, to wander in mind; ἡλός, distraught. Der. hallucinate, verb, hallucinant—or-y.

HALSER (in Minshew), the same as Hawser, q.v.

HALT (1), lame. (E.) ME. halt, Havelok, 543. OMerc. halt, AS. healt, Northumb. halt, Luke, xiv. 21. + Icel. haltir, a halt; Swed. halt; Goth. haltis; OHG. halz. Teut. type haltōz*. Cf. L. claudus, lame. Der. halt, verb = ME. halten, AS. healtian (1's. xvii. 47); halt-ing, halt-ing-ly.

HALT (2), as a sudden stop; as a verb, to stop quickly at the word of command. (F.—G.). 'And in their march soon made a halt;' Sir W. Davenny, The Dream, st. 19. A military term. Dr. Murray says it first came in as an Ital. term, without initial h; and Richardson quotes the form alt from Milton, P. L. vi. 532, where mod. editions have halt. The h is due to F.—F. halte (Hatzfeld). Cf. Ital. alto; as in fare alto, to make a halt, to stop.—G. halt, halt! lit. hold! from halten, to hold, check, cognate with E. Hold (1), q.v. The word has passed, from G., into several languages.

HALTER, a rope for leading a horse, a noose. (E.) ME. halter, Gower, C. A. ii. 47; bk. iv. 1357. Also halter = halter, in O. Eng. Hom., ed. Morris, i. 53, l. 18. L. cap-istrum, a halter, from L. capere, to take hold. Der. halter, verb.

HALVE, to divide in half. (E.) See Half.

HAILYARD, HALLIARD, a rope for hoisting or lowering sails. (E.) Both spellings are in Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. A form due to popular etymology, as if the ropes were so called because fastened to the yards of the ship from which the sails are suspended, and so hale or draw the yards into their places. But the d is excrement; from ME. halier, lit. 'a haler,' or 'hauler.' 'Oon upyte with 2 haliers;' Riley, Mem. of London, p. 370 (A.D. 1373); haliers, Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 847. See Hale (2).

HAM, the inner or hind part of the knee; the thigh of an animal. (E.) ME. hamme, hamme; the pl. is spelt both hammen and hammes, Ancren Riwle, p. 122. AS. hamme, 'popples, hamme'; Wright's Vocab. i. 44, col. 2; 'suffragines, hamme' (pl.); id. + Du. ham; Icel. hām (gen. hamar); OHG. hamma, prov. G. hamme. β. Connected by Brugmann (i. § 421) with Gk. νήρυς, the lower part of the leg. (But see Gambol.) Der. ham-string, sb., Shak. Troil. i. 3. 154; ham-string, verb.

HAMADRYAD, a dryad or wood-nymph. (L.—Gk.) Properly used rather in the pl. hamadryades, whence the sing. hamadryad was (incorrectly) formed, by cutting off the suffix -es. Chaucer, C. T. 2930 (A 2938), has the corrupt form Amadrydes. = L. pl. hamadryades (sing. hamadryas), wood-nymphs. = Gk. pl. ἡμαδρυάδες, wood-nymphs; the life of each nymph depended on that of the tree to which she was attached. = Gk. ἡμα, together with (i.e. coexistent with); and δρῦς, a tree. ἡμα is co-radicate with same; and δρῦς with tree. See Same and Tree.

HAME, one of the two bent sticks round a horse collar. (E.) Usually in the pl. hames. ME. hame; Catholicon Anglic. (1483). In Wright's Vocab. i. 168, the AF. estetes is glossed by hames; and booles by heru-hames; cf. prov. E. bargham (E.D.D.). + Du. haam. Cf. MDu. hamme, 'a cratch of wood to tie beasts to, or a yoke'; Hexham. Further allied to Skt. camyā, the pin of a yoke; Pers. sim, saym, 'the neck-yoke of oxen'; Rich. Diet., p. 866. (Horn, § 764; Uhlenbeck.) Cf. Hem (1).

HAMELET, a small village. (F.—O. Low G.) ME. hamelet, of three syllables; Kolb. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 269; spelt kamelat, Harboure, Bruce, iv. 195; hameliet, id. ix. 403 (Edinb. MS.); hamlet, id. ix. 403 (Camb. MS.). = AF. hamlet, Year-books of Edw. I. 1292-3, p. 25; dimin. of OF. hamel (whence mod. F. hameau). Hamel is used by Froissart, ii. 2. 232 (Littre). The suffix -et is also dimin.; the base being ham. = OFrisic hām, a home, dwelling; cognate with AS. hām, whence E. home. See Home. ¶ The fact that the word is French explains the difference of vowel.

HAMMER, a tool for driving nails. (E.) ME. hamer, hammer; Chaucer, C. T. 2510 (A 2508); Havelok, 1877. AS. hamor, Grein, i. 11. + Du. hamer; Icel. hamarr; Dan. hammer; Swed. hammare; i. hammer; OHG. hamer. β. Of doubtful origin; Curtius (i. 161) connects it with Church Slavonic kamēti (Russ. kamēne), a stone, perhaps orig. 'a stone implement'; Icel. hamarr also means 'a rock'. Der. hammer, verb, K. John, iv. 1. 67; hammer-head (a kind of shark).

HAMMER-CLOTH, the cloth which covers a coach-box. Hybrid; Du. and E. 1. The N.E.D. quotes, from Mann and Housch. Exp. (1465), p. 315, 'My mastyer boyl [bought] . . . xij elles of hamer-clothe'. Also, from Archæol. xvi. 91 (Document of the time of Queen Mary), 'Hammer-clothes, with our arms and badges of our colours . . . apperteyning unto the same wagon.' Of unknown origin. β. But perhaps the form hammer is an E. adaptation of the Du. word kemel (which was not understood); with the addition of E. cloth. Du. kemel (1) heaven, (2) a tector of a bed, roof of a coach, canopy, lais, baldachin (Calisch). 'Den kemel van een koetsse, the seeling of a coach'; Hexham; explained by Sewel as 'the tectum of a coach'. cf. also MDu. kemelen, 'to hide, cover, adorn'; Hexham. Also W.Flem. kemelwigen, a triumphal car (De Bo). γ. Cognate with swed., Dan., and G. himmel, heaven, a canopy, tester. See kemel n. France.

HAMMOCK, a piece of strong netting slung to form a hanging bed. (West Indian.) 'Those beds which they call hamacas, or Brasil beds'; Hakluyt's Voyages, iii. 641. 'Cotton for the making of hamacas, which are Indian beds'; Raleigh, Discovery of Guiana, ed. 1596, p. 32 (Todd). 'Beds or hamacks'; Sir T. Herbert, Travels, v. 6 (id.). Columbus, in the Narrative of his First Voyage, says: 'a great many Indians came to-day for the purpose of bartering their cotton, and hamacas, or nets, in which they sleep' (Webster). Cf. Span. hamaca, a hammock. Of West Indian origin; prob. Caribbean. 'den hamacien, ed. Arber, p. 192; hamaca, p. 230. ¶ Ingeniously corrupted in Dutch to hangmat, i.e. a hanging mat; but the older Du. form was hammak (Sewel).

HAMPER (1), to impede, hinder, harass. (E.) ME. hamperen, ampren; the pp. is hampered and hampred, Will. of Palerne, 441, 604. 'For, I trow, he can hampre ther.' Rom. of the Rose, 6426. A difficult word, but it seems to be a nasalised form allied to Low G. apern, Efrices, happeren, to stop short. Cf. Alsace happeren, hampren, to hesitate, proceed with difficulty; hampert, it goes hard (E. Martin). Low G. hampren, occasional form of happren, happeln, to be stuck at (Berghaus); Du. haperen, to stop, stagnate, flag, fail; de machine apert, the machine flags, is hampert; er haptert iets aan, there is a hitch; Pomeran. happren, haperen, to meet with difficulties; Swed. lial, happin, to stammer; happe, to back a horse; Dan. happe, to tutter. A shortened form of Hanaper, q.v. 'Clerk of the Hamper or hanaper (Clericus hanaperii) is an officer in Chancery (Anno a Edw. v. c. 1) otherwise called Warden of the Hamper in the same statute';

Blount's Law Lexicon. —OF. hanapier; Low L. hanapierum, a large vessel for keeping cups in. —OF. hanap (Low L. hanapus), a drinking-cup. —OFrankish hanap*. (Du. nap); OHG. hanap (MHG. napf), a drinking-cup. + AS. hnap, as a gloss to L. ciatius (cyathus); Wright's Vocab. i. 24, col. 2. Doublet, hanaper.

HAMSTER, a species of rodent, allied to the rat. (G.) 'The skins of hamsters'; 'Yowsell, Four-footed Beasts, ed. 1658, p. 413. = G. hamster, 'German marmot'; Fligel.

HAND, the part of the body used for seizing and holding. (E.) ME. hand, hond, Chaucer, C. T. 843 (A 841). AS. hand, hond; Grein, ii. 11. + Du. hand; Icel. hönd, hand; Dan. haand; Swed. hand; Goth. handus; G. hand; OHG. hant. Teut. type handuz*, fem. Root uncertain. Some connect it with Goth. hnanhan, to seize, a strong verb (pt. t. hant, pp. hantans), only found in the compounds frakinhan, to take captive, winthan, to take captive. Der. hand, verb, Temp. i. 1. 25; hand-er; hand-harrow, hand-hill, hand-book (imitated from G. Handbuch, see Trench, Eng. Past and Present); hand-breadth, Exod. xxxv. 25; hand-cart; hand-fil (Wyclif has handfullis, pl., Gen. xxxvii. 7); hand-gallop; hand-glass, hand-grenade, hand-kerchief (see Kerchief), hand-less, hand-maid (Gen. xvi. 1), hand-maiden (Luke, i. 48), hand-spike, hand-staves (Ezek. xxxix. 9), hand-weapon (Numb. xxxv. 18), hand-writing. And see hand-cuff, hand-i-cap, hand-i-craft, hand-i-work, hand-le, hand-sel, hand-some, hand-y.

HANDCUFF, a manacle, shackle for the hand. (E.) In Todd's Johnson, without a reference; rare in books. The more usual word (in former times) was hand-fetter, used by Cotgrave to translate OF. manette, manicle, and manotte. From hand and cuff. ¶ Too late to be an adaptation of ME. and AS. handcops, a handcuff. We find 'manica, bond-cops' in a vocabulary of the 12th century; Wright's Vocab. i. 95, col. 2.

HANDICAP, a race for horses of all ages. (E.) In a handicap, horses carry different weights according to their ages, &c., with a view to equalizing their chances. The word was formerly the name of a game. 'To the Miter Tavern in Woodstrete . . . Here some of us fell to handycapp, a sport that I never knew before'; Pepys's Diary, Sept. 18, 1660. Orig. the same as the Nrue Feire, described in P. Plowman, B. v. 327; which shows that it was a custom to barter articles, and to settle by arbitration which of the articles was more valuable, and how much (by way of 'amends') was to be given to the holder of the inferior one. From this settlement of 'amends' arose the system known as handicapping. The etymology is from hand f. cap (= hand in cap); from the mode of drawing lots. See the N.E.D. and my Notes on P. Plowman; also N. and Q., June 23, 1855.

HANDICRAFT, manual occupation, by way of trade. (E.) Cotgrave translates OF. mestier by 'a trade, occupation, mystery, handicraft'. A corruption of handcraft; the insertion of i being due to an imitation of the form of handiwork, in which i is a real part of the word. AS. handcraft, a trade; Canons under K. Edgar, sect. xi; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, ii. 246. See Hand and Craft. Der. handicrafts-man.

HANDIWORK, HANDYWORK, work done by the hands. (E.) ME. handiwerk, handiwerk; spelt handiwerk, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 129, l. 20. AS. handgeweorc, Deut. iv. 28. = AS. hand, hand; and geweorc, a collective form of weorc, work. See Hand and Work. ¶ The prefix ge- in AS. is extremely common, and makes no appreciable difference in the sense of a word. In later E., it is constantly rendered by i- or y-, as in y-cleft, from AS. ge-cleofed.

HANDLE, to treat of, manage. (E.) ME. handlen, Chaucer, C. T. 8252 (E 376). AS. handlian, Gen. xxvii. 12. Formed with suffix -l and causal -ian from AS. hand, hand. + Du. handelen, to handle, trade; Icel. höndla; Dan. handle, to treat, use, trade; Swed. handla, G. handeln, to trade. All similarly formed. See Hand. Allied to handle, sb., lit. a thing by which to manage a tool; the dat. pl. handlen occurs early, in St. Juliana, ed. Cockayne and Brock, p. 59; from AS. handle, a handle, Corpus Gloss. 1904. Cf. Dan. handle, a handle.

HANDSEL, HANSEL, a first instalment or earnest of a bargain. (Scand.) 1. In making bargains, it was formerly usual to pay a small part of the price at once, to conclude the bargain and as an earnest of the rest. The lit. sense of the word is 'delivery into the hand' or 'hand-gift'. The word often means a gift or bribe, a new-year's gift, an earnest-penny, the first money received in a morning, &c. See Hansel in Halliwell. ME. hansel, P. Plowman, C. vii. 375; B. v. 326; hansell, Rich. Redeles, iv. 91. 2. Another sense of the word was 'a giving of hands,' a shaking of hands by way of concluding a bargain; see handsal in Icel. Diet. Cf. AS. handelen, a delivery into the hand; cited by Lye from a Glossary (Cot. 136); see Voc. 449. 29. [The AS. word is rare, and the word is rather to be considered as Scand.] = Icel. handsal, a law term, the transaction of a bargain by joining hands; 'hand-shaking was with the men of old the sign of a transaction, and is still used among farmers and the like, so that to shake hands is the same as to conclude a bargain' (Vigfusson); derived from Icel. hand, hand, and sal, a sale, bargain. Cf. Dan. handsel, a handsel, earnest; Swed. handsöl. Der. handsel or hansel, verb, used in Warner's Albion's England, h. xii. c. 75. l. 7; spelt hanselle, Cath. Angl. (1483).

HANDSOME, comely, orig. dexterous. (E.) Formerly it signified able, adroit, dexterous; see Trench. Select Glossary: Shak. has it in the mod. sense. ME. handsom. 'Handsum, or esy to hond werke, esy to han hand werke, manualis;' Prompt. Parv. = AS. hand, hand; and suffix -sum, as in wynsum, winsome, joyous; but the whole word handsom does not appear. † Du. handzaam, tractable, serviceable. β. The suffix -sum is a weaker grade of Du. -zaam, G. -sam (in lang-sam); see -somo, suffix. Der. handsome-ly; handsomeness, Troll. ii. l. 16; spelt handsom-nesse in Palsgrave.

HANDY (1), dexterous, expert. (E.) 'With handy care;' Dryden, Baucis and Philemon, l. 61. From hand and -y. ¶ Somewhat different from ME. hendil, which occurs in King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1336. 'Theonne be 3c his hendil children'—then ye are his dutiful children; Ancien Riwe, p. 186; from AS. hendig, appearing in the comp. list-hendig, having skillful hands (Grein); which is composed of AS. list, skill, and hendig, an adj. regularly formed from the sb. hand by the addition of the suffix -ig and the consequent vowel change from a to e. See Hand, 4. Du. handig, handy, expert; cf. Dan. hendig, usually behandig, expert, dexterous; Swed. händig, dexterous; Goth. handugis, clever, wise. Cf. G. behnd, agile, dexterous; and see Handy (2).

HANDY (2), convenient, near. (E.) Also from hand and -y. 'Very handy and convenient;' T. Fuller, Pisgah Sight, l. 400 (N.E.D.). 'Ah! though he lives so handy, He never now drops in to sup.' Hood's Own, l. 44. ¶ Different in form from ME. hende. 'Nadie his help hende ben'—had not help been near him; William of Palerne, 2513. AS. gehende, near; 'sumor is gehende'—summer is nigh at hand; Luke, xxi. 30; 'he was gehende jän seipe'—he was nigh unto the ship, John, vi. 19. [The prefix ge- could always be dropped, and is nearly lost in mod. English.] The AS. gehende is an adv. and prep., formed from hand by suffixed -e (for -jo-) and vowel-change. See Handy (1).

HANDYWORK, the same as Handiwork, q.v.

HANG, to suspend; to be suspended. (E.) Here two E. verbs and the ON. hængja have been mixed together. See the full account in the N. E. D. A. Trans. and weak verb, pt. t. and pp. hanged. 'Born to be hanged;' Temp. i. l. 35. But the pt. t. is generally turned into hung, as in 'hung their eyelids down;' 1 Hen. IV. iii. 2. 81. ME. hungen, hungen, also hungen, hungen. 'Hanged hym after'—he hanged himself afterwards; P. Plowman, B. i. 68; pp. hanged, id. B. prol. 176. AS. hangan, hongan, G. hungen (weak verb), Grein, ii. 14; the pt. t. hange occurs in Beowulf, ed. Grein, 2085. Cf. Icel. hængja, to hang up (weak verb). G. hungen (weak verb). Teut. type hangan-*. B. ME. hungen, pt. t. heng (sometimes king), pp. hungen. 'And thereon heng a broche of gold full schene;' Chaucer, C. T. 160. 'By ounces henge his lokkes that he hadde;' id. 679. The ME. infin. hungen is conformed to the causal and Icel. forms, the AS. infin. being always contracted. AS. hian, to hang, but transitive in sense (contr. from hikan or hanghan); pt. t. hing, pp. hungen; Grein, ii. 95. Cf. Icel. hanga, to hang, intr.; pt. t. hók, pp. hangan; Goth. hikan, pt. t. hikah (formed by reduplication), pp. hikans; G. hungen, pt. t. hieng, hing, pp. gehungen. Allied to L. huncari, to hesitate, delay, and Skt. cauk, to hesitate, be in uncertainty, doubt, fear. Brugmann, i. § 420. ¶ The Du. hangen, Dan. hange, Swed. hanga, are forms used with both trans. and intrans. senses. Der. hang-er, (1) one who hangs, (2) a suspended sword, orig. part of a sword-belt whence the sword was suspended, Hamlet, v. 2. 157; hanger-on, hang-ing; hang-ings, Tam. Shrew. ii. 351; hang-man, Meas. iv. 2. 18; hang-dog, Pope, Donne Versified, Sat. iv. 267.

HANGNAIL, for angnail, a form of Agnail, q.v.

HANK, a skein or coil of thread or yarn. (Scand.) Cotgrave translates OF. bobine by 'a skane or hank of gold or silver thread.' 'An hank;' Catholicon Angl. (1483). Cf. prov. E. hank, a skein, a loop to fasten a gate, a handle (Halliwell). The rare ME. verb hanken, to fetter, occurs in Cursor Mordun, 16044.—Icel. kank, the hasp or clasp of a chest; hink, a hank, coil; Dan. kank, a handle, ear of a vessel; Swed. kank, a string, tie-band. Also Low G. kank, a handle (Lübben); G. kenkel, a handle, ring, ear, hook. β. The orig. sense seems to be 'a loop,' or 'hasp,' or 'hook;' and the sb.

is a nasalised form allied to Icel. kaki, a hook, G. kaken, a hook, AS. kaca, a fastening of a door. See Hatch (1), Hook.

HANKER, to long importunately. (E.) Not in early use. 'And felt such bowel-hankerings To see an empire, all of kings;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 239. Cf. prov. E. hank, to hanker after (North); Halliwell. This verb is a frequentative allied to prov. E. hake, to wander about, loiter, hanker after; also to tease; further allied to prov. E. hake, a hook, and to hank (above). And see hunker in the E. D. D. † MDu. anckeren (surely for hankerren), 'to long or desire much after anything;' Ilexham. Cf. WFlam. hanken, with the same sense as mod. Du. hunkeren, to hanker after, formerly honeren (= hankerren); see Sewcl. ¶ Perhaps it has often been associated with the verb to hang.

HANSEATIC, pertaining to the Hanse Towns in Germany. (F.—OHG.) 'The chief cities of the Hans;' Hakluyt, Voy. i. 155. The Hanse towns were so called because associated in a league. = OF. hanse, 'the hanse; a company, society, or corporation of merchants;' Cot.—OHG. hansa, mod. G. hansa, an association, league (Flügel). † Goth. hansa, a band of men, Mk. xv. 16; Luke, vi. 17. † AS. hās [for hans*], a band of men; Beowulf, 924. The Finnish kansa, people, was borrowed from Teutonic. ¶ The league began about A.D. 1140 (Haldan).

HANSEL, the same as Handsel, q.v.

HANSON, a kind of cab. (E.) Modern. An abbreviation for 'Hanson's patent safety cab.' From the name of the inventor (1834). Hansom is prob. a variant of Hanson (son of Hans); see Bartley's E. Surnames.

HAP, fortune, chance, accident. (Scand.) ME. hap, happ; P. Plowman, B. xlii. 108; Layamon, 816, 3857.—Icel. happ, hap, chance, good luck. Cf. AS. gehap, ft.; Ælfric's Colloquy, in Voc. 92. 81; also AS. maegenhap, full of strength, midhap, full of courage, Grein, ii. 219, 259. ¶ The W. hap, hap, hap, chance, must be borrowed from E.; but the Irish hap, Irish coch, victory, triumph, is cognate. Der. happ-y, orig. lucky, Pricke of Conscience, 1334. happ-ly, happ-ness, hap-less, Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 108; hap-ly; hap-ly, Shak. Two Gent. i. 1. 32 (happily in the same sense, Mens. iv. 2. 98); hap-hazard, Holland, tr. of Livy, p. 578 (K.); happ-en, verb, q.v.; mis-hap, fer-hap.

HAPPEN, to befall. (Scand.) ME. happenen; Gower has happeth—it happens; C. A. iii. 62; bk. vi. 1815. 'xif me þe lyffe happene'—if life be granted me; Mort. Arthure, ed. Brock, 1269. β. The form happen is an extension of the commoner form happen (mod. E. hap); 'In any cas that mighte falle or happe;' Chaucer, C. T. 587 (A 585). The latter verb is formed directly from the sb. hap above. ¶ With the ending -enen compare Goth. verbs in -sun.

HARAKIRI, a form of suicide. (Japan.) Also known as 'happy dispatch;' but lit. suicide by disembowelling.—Jap. hara, belly; kiri, to cut (N. E. L.).

HARANGUE, a popular address. (F.—OHG.) In Milton, P. L. xi. 663. ME. arung, Katis Raving, l. 244.—MF. harangue, 'an oration, set speech, long tale;' Cot. Cf. Span. aranga, Ital. arringa, arring, an harangue. β. The Ital. arringa signifies a speech made from an arango, which Florio explains by 'a pulpit;' arango also meant an arena, lists, place of declamation. The more lit. sense is a speech made in the midst of a ring of people.—OHG. kring (mod. G. ring), a ring, a ring of people, an arena, circus, lists; cognate with E. ring. See Ring. ¶ The vowel a (for i) reappears in the sb. rank; see Rank, Range. ¶ The prefix ha- in F., and a- in Span. and Ital., are due to the OHG. h-, now dropped. Der. harangue, verb, Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 438.

HARASS, to torment, vex, plague. (F.—OHG.) Also spelt harras. 'To harass and weary the English;' Bacon, Life of Hen. VII. ed. Lumby, p. 61 (spelt harrasse in K.).—MF. harrasser, 'to tire, or toile out, -vex, disquiet;' Cot. β. OF. of disputed origin; but it seems best to suppose it to be an extension of OF. harer; 'harer un chien, to hound a dog at, or set a dog on a beast;' Cot.—OHG. haren, to cry out; allied to Goth. hazjan, to praise. Der. harass, sb., Milton, Samson, 257; harasser.

HARBINGER, a forerunner. (F.—OHG.) In Shak. Macb. i. 4. 45. See Trench. Select Glossary. The n stands for r, and the older form is ME. herbergeour, one who provided lodgings for a host or army of people. This sense is retained in Bacon, who says, 'There was a harbinger who had lodged a gentleman in a very ill room;' Apophthegms, no. 54 (or 63). 'The fame anon thurgh Rome town is born. . . By herberger, that werten him biorn;' Chaucer, C. T. 5417 (B 995). In the title of the legend of St. Julian, in Bodley MS. 1596, fol. 4, he is called 'St. Julian the gode herberour,' i.e. the good harbourer. Herbergerour is formed (by help of the suffix -ur, -iūren, denoting the agent) from the OF. herberger, 'to harbour, lodge, or dwell in a house;' Cot. (and see Godfrey).—OF. herberge, 'a house, harbour, lodging; 'Cot.; mod. F. auberge. — MHG. herberge, OHG. herberga, a lodging, harbour; see further under Harbour.

HARBOUR, a lodging, shelter, place of refuge. (Scand.) ME. harboure, Chaucer, C. T. 767 (A 765); whence mod. E. harbour by change of -erue to -our, and the use of or to represent the later sound of er. The w stands for an older j, and this again for g; the spelling herberg is in Layamon, 288y. — Icel. herbergi, a harbour, inn, lodging, lit. a 'host-shelter'; derived from Icel. heri, an army, and berg, and grade of bjarga, to save, help, defend. Cf. MSwed. herberge, an inn; derived from her, an army, and berga, to defend (Ihre). — OHG. herberga, a camp, lodging; from OHG. hari (G. heer), an army, and bergan, to shelter; whence come mod. F. auberge, Ital. albergo, an inn, and mod. E. harbinger, q. v. β. For the former element, see Harry. For the latter element, cf. Goth. hairgan, AS. beorgan, to preserve; and see Bury. ¶ It is usual to cite AS. herberga as the original of harbour; but it is hardly native; though the word may have been borrowed very early. Der. harbour, verb, ME. herberwen, P. Ploverman, B. xvii. 73, from Icel. herbergja, to shelter, harbour, a verb formed from the sb. herbergi; also harbour-er; harbour-age, K. John, ii. 234; harbourless; harbour-master; also harburing, q. v.

HARD, firm, solid, severe. (E.) ME. hard, Chaucer, C. T. 229 (and common). AS. heard, Goth. hard, vi. 60; (OFries. hard, + Du. hard; Dan. haard; Swed. hård; Icel. hárðr; Goth. hardus; G. hart. Teut. type harduz*; allied to Gk. σπῆρ, strong; cf. σπῆρ, καρπός, valiant, stout. See Brugmann, i. § 792. Der. hard-ly, hard-ness = AS. hardnes, Mark, x. 5; hard-en = ME. hardenen, Ormulum, 1574, 18219, which is an extension of the commoner ME. harden, of which the pp. gharden occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 10559 (F. 245); hard-en-ed; hard-ship, ME. hardships, Ancrén Riwe, p. 6, l. 9; hard-ware, hard-featured, hard-fisted, hard-handed, hard-headed, hard-hearted, hard-mouthed, hard-visaged; also hard-y, q. v.

HARDOCK, HORDOCK, prob. the corn-bluebottle; Centaurea cyaneus. (E.) Hardokes, pl., King Lear, iv. 4. 4 (1623); the quartos have hornocks. The same as haudocks, used in Fitzherbert's Flusbandry to mean the corn-bluebottle; see Glossary, and Pref. p. xxx. Mr. Wright (note to K. Lear) shows that hardhake meant the Centaurea nigra. Both plants were called, indifferently, knobweed, knawweed, and loggerhead. Named from the hardness of the head of the Centaurea nigra, also called knawweed, iron-weed, iron-head, &c. See Plant-names, ed. Britten and Holland. ¶ No kind of dock is suitable for a wreath, or grows among corn.

HARDS, fibres of flax. (E.) ME. herdes. 'Itempen herdes,' Chaucer, Rom. Rose, 1233. AS. heordan, pl. 'Stuppa, heordan,' Corp. Gloss. 1008. + MDu. heerde, herde (Kilian); later hede (Hexham); OFries. hede. Teut. type hizdōn*; cf. Meed. ¶ Not allied to hard. Der. hard-en, adj.

HARDY, stout, strong, brave. (F. — OHG.) ME. hardi, hardy, P. Ploverman, B. xix. 285; the comp. hardiere is in Layamon, 4348, later text. — OF. hardi, 'hardy, daring, stout, bold'; Cot. Hardi was orig. the pp. of OF. hardir, of which the compound enhardir is explained by Cotgrave to mean 'to hearten, embolden'. — OHG. hart (hartjan (MHG. herien), to harden, make strong. — OHG. harti (G. hart), hard; cognate with AS. heard, hard. See Hard. Der. hardi-ness, P. Ploverman, B. xix. 31; hardi-head, Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 38; hardi-hood, Milton, Comus, 650. ¶ Hardi-ly, hardi-ness, hardi-head, hardi-hood are all hybrid compounds, with E. suffixes; showing how completely the word was naturalised.

HARE, the name of an animal. (E.) ME. hare, Chaucer, C. T. 13626 (B 1886). AS. hara, as a gloss to I. lepus, Ælfric's Gloss., in Voc. 119. 11. + Du. haas; Dan. and Swed. hare; Icel. hári (formerly here); G. hase; OHG. hasso. Teut. types hazon-, hason-, m. 1dg. type has-on*; cf. OPRuss. sasnis (for hasnis*), W. wein-ach, f. (Rhys); and Skt. gāṇa, orig. gāṇa, a hare. See Stokes-Fick, p. 74; Brugmann, i. § 826. Uhlenbeck connects Skt. gāṇas with AS. hasu, gray. Der. hare-brained, 1 Hen. IV. v. 2. 19; hare-lip, K. Lear, iii. 4. 123; hare-lipped; hare-i-er, q. v.; hare-bell, q. v.

HAREBELL, the name of a flower. (E.) In Cymb. iv. 2. 222. The word does not appear among AS. names of plants; but we find ME. hare-belle, Voc. 713. 9. Certainly compounded of hare and bell; but, owing to the absence of reason for the appellation, it has been supposed to be a corruption of hair-bell, with reference to the slenderness of the stalk of the true 'hair-bell,' the Campanula rotundifolia. The apparent absence of reason for the name is, however, rather in favour of the etymology from hare than otherwise, as will be seen by consulting the fanciful AS. names of plants given in Cockayne's Leechdoms, vol. iii. To name plants from animals was the old custom; hence hare's beard, hare's ear, hare's foot, hare's lettuce, hare's palae, hare's tail, hare-thistle, all given in Dr. Prior's Popular Names of British Plants; to which add AS. haran-hyge (hare's foot trefoil), haran-speel (now called viper's bugloss), haran-wurt (hare's wort), from Cockayne's Leechdoms. The spelling hair-bell savours of modern science, but certainly not of the principles of English etymology. ¶ A similar modern error (invented in 1851, by Fox Talbot) is to derive fox-glove from folk's-glove (with the silly interpretation of folks as being 'the good folks' or fairies), in face of the evidence that the AS. name was foxes glāfa = the glove of the fox.

HAREM, the set of apartments reserved for females in large Eastern houses. (Arab.) Not in Todd's Johnson. Spelt haram in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1634, p. 62 (N.E. D.); and in Moore's Lalla Rookh; 'And the light of his haram was young Nourmahal.' Also in Byron, Bride of Abydos, c. i. st. 14. — Arab. haram, women's apartments; lit. 'sacred'; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 197. — Arab. root harama, he prohibited; the haram is the place which men are prohibited from entering; Rich. Dict., p. 563.

HARICOT, (1) a stew of mutton, (2) a kidney bean. (F.) Haricot, in cookery, a particular way of dressing mutton-cutlets; also, a kind of French beans; 'Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. — F. haricot, 'mutton sod with little turneps, some wine, and toasts of bread crumbled among,' &c.; Cotgrave (who gives two other methods of preparing it, showing that it was sometimes served with 'chopped herbs'). β. See Littre, who discusses it; it is found that the sense of 'bean' is later, whilst the sense of 'minced mutton with herbs' is old. Perhaps the bean was so named from its use in the dish called haricot, or from their being cut up; cf. Du. snijboon, French bean, from snijden, to cut. γ. Of unknown origin, but presumably Teutonic. Hatfield quotes Jebbes de haricot, haricot beans (1642), hericog de mouton, haricot of mutton, 14th c. Perhaps connected with OF. haligoter, harigoter, to cut in pieces; haligote, harigote, a piece, a rag (Godefroy).

HARK! listen! (E.) ME. herke, Coventry Mysteries, 55 (Stratmann). The imp. mood of ME. herken; 'And herke why,' Chaucer, C. T. 9187 (F. 1323). Cf. herkien, inf., O. E. Hom. i. 31, l. 6. OFries. herkia, harkia. Closely allied to ME. herkenen, to harken. See Hearken.

HARLEQUIN, the leading character in a pantomime. (F. — Ital.) 'The joy of a king for a victory must not be like that of a harlequin upon a letter from his mistress'; Dryden (in Todd's Johnson; no reference). He also has: 'Those nauseous harlequins.' Epil. to Man of Mode, l. 3. — F. arlequin, a harlequin; spelt harlequin in the 16th cent. — Ital. arlecchino, a harlequin, buffoon, jester. β. It seems best to connect it with the OF. hierlekin or helliekin (13th century) for which Littre gives quotations. This word was used in the phrase la maison hierlekin (Low l. harlequini familia) which meant a troop of demons that haunted lonely places, called in Middle-English Hurlerwainnes kynne or Hurlerwainnes myne = Hurlerwain's kin or troop, mentioned in Richard the Redeles, i. 90, and in the Prologue to the Tale of Beryn, l. 8. The orig. signification of OF. helliekin (see Godefroy) seems to have been 'a troop of demons,' sometimes also a demon, a devil. Cf. also Ital. Alichino, the name of a demon in Dante, Inf. xxi. 118. The origin of the name is wholly unknown. See note to Rich. Redeles, ed. Skeat, i. 90. ¶ I shall here venture my guess. Perhaps helliekin may have been of Teut. origin; thus OF. hella cunni, OFriesic helle kin (AS. helle cyn, Icel. hellar kyn) would mean 'the kindred of hell' or 'the host of hell,' hence a troop of demons. The sense being lost, the OF. maison would be added to keep up the idea of 'host,' turning hierlekin into (apparently) a personal name of a single demon. The change from helliekin to harlequin, &c., arose from a popular etymology which connected the word with Charles Quint (Charles V.); see the story in Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 581. It may also have been confused with OF. herle, hierle, tumult.

HARLOT, a wanton woman. (F. — Teut.) Orig. used of either sex indifferently; in fact, more commonly of men in Mid. Eng. It has no very bad sense, and means little more than 'fellow.' 'He was a gentil harlot and a kind'; Chaucer, C. T. 649 (A 647). 'A sturdy harlot [a stout fellow] wente ay hem behinde,' id. 7336 (D 1753). 'Dauwe the dykere with a dosen harlotes of portours and pykeporces and pyldele toth-drawers' — Davy the ditcher with a dozen fellows who were porters and pick-purses and hairless (?) tooth-drawers; P. Ploverman, C. vii. 369. 'Beggen ase on harlot' = beg like a vagabond, Ancrén Riwe, p. 356. Undoubtedly of Romance origin. — OF. herlot, arlot, explained by Godefroy as 'fripon, coquin, ribaud,' a vagabond; for which Diez gives a reference to the Romance of Tristan, i. 173 (where it is misprinted berlot by Michel). β. The Prov. arlot, a vagabond, occurs in a poem of the 13th century; Bartsch, Chrestomathe Provençale, 207. 20; and Mistral explains Prov. arlot by 'pillard, ribaud, goujat qui suivait les armées.' Florio explains Ital. arlotto by 'a lack-Latin, a hedge-priest,' and arlotto as a harlot in the modern E. sense. Dugange explains Late L. arlotus, erlotus, to mean a glutton. γ. Of disputed origin, but presumably Teutonic, viz. from OHG. heri, hari (G. heer), an army, and a suffix -lot. This suffix occurs in Du. labber-lot, a blackguard, which Franck mentions in connexion with Du. leuteren, to loiter, linger, the sense of lot being

'loiterer.' The fem. of lot occurs in WFlem. lutte; De Bo explains dronke-lutte as a drunken woman, a slut; and jenewer-lutte as a gin-drinking woman. Allied to OHG. lotar, MHG. lotter, lotter, useless, vagabond-like, OIG. lotar, a frivolous fellow; cf. prov. G. lotter-bube, a vagabond (Flügel); Slav. lotter (Schmeller). Thus her-lot meant 'army-loiterer, a camp-follower. [We find also W. herlad, a stripling, lad; but this is merely the E. word borrowed; the Cornish not only borrowed the E. herlot unchanged (with the sense of 'rogue'), but also the word harlotry, corruption, which is plainly the ME. karlotrie, with a suffix (-rie) which is extremely common in French. See Williams, Cornish Lexicon, p. 211. Der. harlot-ry = ME. karlotrie, of which one meaning was 'ribald talk'; see Chaucer, C. T. 563, 3147 (A 561, 3145). The suffix -ry is of F. origin, as in caval-ry, bribe-ry, &c.

HARM, injury, wrong. (E.) ME. harm, P. Plowman, C. xvi. 113; spelt herm, Ancien Kiewe, p. 116. AS. hearm, herm, grief of mind, also harm, injury; Grein, ii. 60. + Icel. harmr, grief; Dan. harme, wrath; Swed. karm, anger, grief, pity; G. harm, grief. Teut. type harmoz*, m. Cf. Russ. sram, shame. Brugmann, ii. § 72. Der. harm, verb, ME. harmen, spelt hearmen in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, p. 263, l. 7; harmful, Wyclif, Prov. i. 22; harmful-ly, harm-ful-ness; harm-less = ME. harmles, Will. of Palerne, 1671; harm-less-ly, harm-less-ness.

HARMONY, concord, esp. of sounds. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. armonie, Gower, C. A. iii. 90; bk. vii. 165. 'There is a melodye in heven, which clerkes clejen armony.' Testament of Love, ii. 9. = F. harmonie. = L. harmonia. = Gk. ἀρμονία, a joint, joining, proportion, harmony. = Gk. ἀρμος, a fitting, joining. = Gk. ἀρμω, ἀρμωσκειν (fut. ἀρμω), to fit, join together. = AR*, to fit; whence also E. arm, article, &c. Der. harmoni-c, Milton, P. Also in Phillips, New World of Words, 1706, in the same sense; see Trench, Select Glossary. So called from the coarse grass of which it was made; ME. hassok. 'Hassok, ulphus;' Prompt. Parv.; see Way's Note, showing the word to be in use A.D. 1147; whilst in 1465 there is mention of 'segges, soddes, et hassokes' = sedges, sods, and hassocks. Forby explains Norfolk hassock as 'coarse grass, which grows in rank tufts on boggy ground.' AS. hassuc, a tump or clump of coarse grass or sedge; in Kemble, Cod. Dipl. iii. 223. η Distinct from W. hessg, pl. sedges.

HASTATE, shaped like the head of a spear. (L.) Modern, and botanical. - L. hastatus, spear-like; formed from hasta, a spear, which is co-ordinate with E. gad. See GAD (1).

HASTE, HASTEN, to go speedily; HASTE, speed. (F. - Teut.) The form hasten appears to be nothing more than an extended form of the verb to haste; the pt. t. and pp. hastened (or hastened) do not occur in early authors; one of the earliest examples is that of the pp. hastened in Spenser, Shep. Kal., May, 152. Strictly speaking, the form haste (pt. t. hasted) is much to be preferred, and is commoner than hasten both in Shak. and in the A. V. of the Bible. ME. hasten (pt. t. hastede), where the t is merely the sign of the infin. mood, and was readily dropped. Thus Gower has: 'Cupide .i. Syh [saw] Phebus hasten him so sore, And, for he sholde him haste more, . . . A dart throughout his herte he caste;' C. A. i. 336; bk. iii. 1697. 'To hasten hem;' Chaucer, C. T. 8854; (F. 978). 'But hasteth yow' = make haste, id. 17383 (F. 72). 'He hasteth wel that wysly can abyde; and in wikked haste is no profit;' id., Six-text, B 2244. β . It is hard to say whether the vb. or sb. first came into use in English; both occur in the Cursor Mundi, 5198, 26737; where we also find the phr. in hast = in haste, 13402. Neither is found in AS. - OF. haste (F. hâte), sb. = WGer. hait* (F. hâte), violence; as seen in OFries. heest (Richtofen, s. v. hast), AS. hæst, violence, fury. Cf. AS. hæste, violent, vehement. OIlg. heisti, violent; also Goth. haisfts, f. strife; Icel. hæipt (= heift), war. η Du. haast, G. haast, Swed. hast, haste, are all borrowed from French. Der. hast-y, Will. of Palerne, 475; hast-i-ly, hast-i-ness. η We also find ME. hasty, hasty, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, iii. 520; this is from OF. hastif, adj. derived from the OF. haste (mod. F. hâte), haste, which was borrowed from the Teutonic (as above).

HAT, a covering for the head. (E.) ME. hat, Chaucer, C. T. 472; 1390 (A 470, 1388). AS. hat; 'Galerus, vel pileus, fellen hat;' Voc. 118. 14; 'Calamanea, hat;' id. 153. 22. + Icel. hatt, a hood, later hatt; Swed. hatt; Dan. hat. Teut. type hattuz*, m. If it is related to hood, this form stands for an earlier type hadnaz*. Der. hatt-er, hat-band (Minshew).

HATCH (1), a hall-door, wicket. (E.) A word presenting some difficulty. 'Leap the hatch;' King Lear, iii. 6. 76. It is the same as North of E. heck, an enclosure of open-work, of slender bars of wood, a hay-rack; a heck-door is a door only partly pannelled, the rest being latticed (Halliwell); cf. Lowland Sc. heck or heck, a rack for cattle, a frame for cheeses (Jamieson). It seems to have been specially used of anything made with parallel bars of wood. Palgrave has: 'Hatche of a door, heep.' In a 15th-cent. vocabulary we find: 'Illoc ostium, a hatche;' Voc. 778. 14. Also: 'Illoc ostium, hek;' id. 608. 4. AS. hæc, f. (gen. hæcce); 'to þære caldan wude hæcce,' to the old wood hatch; Thorpe, Diplom. Ævi Sax. p. 395. + Du. hac, a fence, rail, gate, Swed. häck, a coop, a rack. Teut. type haki*, f. Prob. named from being lightly fastened with a hook. Cf. AS. haca, a fastening of a door; Epinal Gloss. 803. All, probably, from the same source as hook: cf. prov. F. hatch, to fasten (Halliwell); and see Shak. Per. iv. 2. 37. See HAKE and HOOK. Der. hatch-es, q. v.; also hatch-way.

HATCH (2), to produce a brood by incubation. (E.) ME. hachen. 'This brid [bird] . . . hopith for to hache;' Richard the Redeles, Pass. iii. l. 44. The pt. t. hachte occurs in The Owl and Nightingale, l. 105. Not found earlier; but prob. E. + Swed. hächta, to hatch, to breed; Dan. hække, to breed, whence hækkebuur, a breeding-cage (lit. a hatch-bower), and hækkefugl, a breeder (lit. a hatch-fowl). In German, we have hachen, to hatch, MIIG. hachen. Origin unknown.

HATCH (3), to shade by minute lines, crossing each other, in drawing and engraving. (F. - G.) Hatch, to draw small strokes with a pen; Kersey, ed. 1715. A certain kind of ornamentation on a sword-hilt was called hatching, and is spelt hachyng in 1389; see Riley, Memorials of London, p. 513; hence 'hatched in silver,' Shak. Troil. i. 3. 65; 'my sword well hatched;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Bonduca, ii. 2. - F. hacher, 'to hack,' . . . also to hatch a hipp; Cot. - F. hache, an ax. - OIlg. happya*, whence OHG. heppa, a bill, a sickle. See HASH. Der. hatch-ing (perhaps sometimes confused with etching); and see hatch-et.

HATCHES, a frame of cross-bars laid over an opening in a ship's deck. (E.) ME. hatches, Chaucer, Good Women, 648; Will. of Palerne, 2770. Merely the pl. of HATCH (1), q. v. Der. hatch-way, from the sing. hatch.

HATCHET, a small axe. (F. - G.) ME. hachet. 'Axe other [or] hatchet;' P. Plowman, B. iii. 304. Spelt hachet, John de Garlande; in Wright's Vocab. i. 137. - F. hachette, 'a hatchet, or small axe;' Cot. Dimin. of F. hache, 'an axe;' id.; see HATCH (3), and HASH.

HATCHMENT, the escutcheon of a deceased person, publicly displayed. (F. - L.) In Shak. Hamlet, iv. 5. 214. Well known to be a corruption of atchment, the shortened form of achievement (mod. E. achievement), the heraldic name for the same thing. Dryden uses achievement in the true heraldic sense; Palamon and Arcite, l. 1620; achievement is in Ferne (1586); and hachement in Hall (1548). See N. E. D. See ACHIEVE.

HATE, extreme dislike, detestation; to detest. (E.) A. The sb. is ME. hate, Chaucer, C. T. 14506 (B 3778). AS. hete, Grein, ii. 39; the mod. E. sb. takes its vowel from the vb. (AS. hatan), + Du. hat; Icel. hatr; Swed. hat; Dan. had; Goth. hatis; G. has, hate. These forms suggest a Teut. type hatoz*, neut., gen. hatoz*; 1dg. type kodos*, gen. kodos*; whence a form hatoz* in W. Germanic. Cf. Gk. hêvêv, to vex; W. caudil, displeasure. Stokes-Fick, p. 68. B. The verb is AS. hatan, OFries. hata, OSax. hātōn, OHG. hazzin; allied to Goth. hatan, to hate; from the same base hatoz*. Der. hat-er; hate-ful, Chaucer, C. T. 8608 (E 732); hate-ful-ly, hate-fulness; also hat-red, q. v.; from the same source, hateful, q. v.

HATED, extreme dislike. (E.) ME. hatred, P. Plowman, B. iii. 140; fuller form hatreden, Pricke of Conscience, 3363. Not found in AS.; but the suffix is the AS. suffix -ræden, signifying 'law,' 'mode,' or 'condition,' which appears in frœndræden, friendship (Gen. xxxvii. 4), &c.; see KINDRED. And see HATE.

HAUBERK, a coat of ringed mail. (F. - OIlg.) Orig. armour for the neck, as the name implies. ME. hauberk, Chaucer, C. T. 2433 (A 2431); hauberik, King Alisaunder, 2372. - OF. haubere, halbere (Burguy) = OIlg. halsberc, halsberge, a hauberk; - OHG. hals (G. hals), the neck, cognate with AS. heals, L. collum, the neck; and OIlg. bergan, to protect, cognate with AS. beorgan, to protect, hide. See COLLAR and BURY. Der. haubergeron, q. v.

HAUGH, a piece of alluvial land beside a river. (E.) Northern; also hagh, as in Greenhagh. AS. heath, a nook, a corner; see N. E. D. η From the dat. case heale, hale, we have ME. hale, a nook; common in place-names as a suffix, and often written hail.

HAUGHTY, proud, arrogant. (F. - L.) A. The spelling with gh is a mistake, as the word is not E.; it is a corruption of ME. haulein, loud, arrogant. 'I peine me to have an hautein speech' = I endeavour to speak loudly; Chaucer, C. T. 12264 (C 330); cf. Rob. of Glouc., l. 1504. 'Myn hauteyn herte' = my proud heart; Will. of Palerne, 472. β . The corruption arose from the use of the adj. with the E. suffix -ness, producing a form hautein-ness, but generally written hautesness, and easily misdivided into hauti-ness (like naughtiness). 'For heo [she, i.e. Cordelia] was best and fairest, and to hautesness drow lest' [drew least]; Rob. of Glouc. p. 29 (where the best MS. has hautesce); l. 687. Later forms hauteyn, Book of St. Alban's, fol. a. 5, hautey in Palsgrave, - OF. hautein, also spelt hautain by Cotgrave, who explains it by 'hautey, proud, arrogant.' - OF. haut, formerly hault, high, lofty; with suffix -ain = L. -anus. = L. altus, high; see ALTITUDE. Der. haughti-ly; haughti-ness (for hautin-ness = hautein-ness, as explained above).

HAUL, to hale, draw; see HALE (2). This spelling occurs early. 'I-hauled hi were . . . out of the lond;' Beket, l. 1407.

HAULM, HALM, HAUM, the stem or stalk of grain. (E.) Little used, but an excellent E. word. 'The haume is the strawe of the wheat or the rie;' Tussers Husbandry, sect. 57, st. 15 (E. D. S.). η Halme, or stobyl [stubble], Stipula; Prompt. Parv. Omerc. halme; Vesp. Psalter, l's. lxxxii. 14 (lxxxiii. 13); AS. healm, in the compound healm-streaw, lit. haulm-straw, used to translate L. stipulam in Ps. lxxxii. 12, ed. Spelman. + Du. halme, stalk, straw; Icel. hálmr; Dan. and Swed. halme. + Russ. soloma, straw; L. culmus, a stalk; calamus, a reed (borrowed from Gk.); Gk. kálampos, a reed; kálamy, a stalk or straw of corn; W. calaf, a stalk. See Brugmann, i. § 72; Stokes-Fick, p. 73. β . From the same root as CULMINATE, q. v.

HAUNCH, the hip, bend of the thigh. (F. - OHG.) ME. hanche, Morte Arthur, ed. Brock, 1100; spelt haunche, Ancien Riwe, 280. - F. hanche, 'the haunch or hip;' Cot. Cf. Span. and Ital. anca, the haunch; the F. word was also sometimes spelt anche (Cotgrave). Of Teut. origin; from Frankish hauki*, fem., represented by MDu. hauke, 'the haunch or the hip'; Hexham; whence also O. North F. hanke, Norm. dial. hanque, haunch (Moisy). Körtig, §§ 663, 4479.

HAUNT, to frequent. (F.) ME. haunten, hanten, to frequent, use, employ. 'That haunted folie' = who were ever after folly; Chaucer, C. T. 12398 (C 464). 'We haunten none tauerces' = we frequent no taverns; Pierce Plowman's Crele, ed. Skeat, 106. 'Haunted Man-metric' = practised Mohammedanism, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 320. The earliest use of the word is in Itali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 25, l. 15. — OF. haunter, 'to haunt, frequent, resort unto'; Cot. β. Origin unknown, and much disputed. Suggestions are: (1) Icel. heimta, lit. to fetch home, to draw, claim, recover; but neither form nor sense suit: (2) Bret. hent, a path: (3) a nasalised form of L. habitare, to dwell (Littre): (4) a Late L. form ambitiare* (not found), to go about, from L. ambitus, a going about (Scheler). The last seems to me the most likely; there are many such formations in F. Der. haunt, sb.

HAUTBOY, a kind of musical instrument. (F. — L.) [Also called oboe, the Ital. name.] In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, iii. 2, 351; where the old edd. have haeboy. Spelt hautboy (sic) in Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry, where the L. has tibia; Ars Poet. 202. Spelt hobois, hoboy in Cotgrave. — MF. hautbois (or hautbois), 'a hobois, or hoboy'; Cot. — OF. haut, later haut, high, from L. altus, high; and F. bois < Late L. bocanus, wood. See Altitude and Bush. Thus the lit. sense is 'high wood', the hautboy being a wooden instrument of a high tone. Doublet, oboe.

HAUT-GOUT, a high flavour. (F. — L.) Spelt haugou in Howell's Letters, vol. i. § 5, let. 38. — F. haut, high; gout, taste. — L. altus, high; gustus, taste; see Gust (2).

HAVE, to possess, hold. (E.) ME. hauen, pt. t. haudd, pp. haul (common). AS. habban, pt. t. heafde, pp. gehafd; Du. hebben, heba; Swed. hafva; Dan. have; Goth. haban; G. haben. Teut. stem habē-*. If cognate, as some hold, with L. habere, to have, the Idg. stem is h₂habē-*. Streitberg, § 206, p. 307.

HAVEN, an inlet of the sea, harbour, port. (E.) ME. hauen (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 409 (A 407); spelt hauene, Layamon, 8566. Late AS. hafene (acc. hafenan), A. S. Chron. an. 1031. — Icel. hafn; Dan. havn, Swed. hamn; Du. haven; G. hafen. β. Allied to AS. haf (Grein, ii. 19), Icel. and Swed. haf; Dan. hav, MHG. hab, the open sea, main.

HAVERSACK, a soldier's bag for provisions. (F. — G.) Lit. 'oat-bag' or 'oat-sack'. A late importation. It occurs in Sinollett's tr. of Gil Blas, b. ii. c. 8 (K.). — F. havresac, a haversack, knapsack (Hamilton). — G. haversack, haversack, a sack for oats. — G. haber, haber, oats (cognate with Icel. hafn, Du. havere, Swed. hafre, Dan. havre, oats), from MHG. habere, OllG. habaro, oats; and G. sack, cognate with E. sack.

HAVILDAR, a sepooy non-commissioned officer, corresponding to a sergeant. (Pers. — Arab.) So in Yule. From Pers. hawildār, a military officer of inferior rank; Rich. Diet., p. 585. — Arab. hawāla (hoc), commission, charge; and Pers. dār, holding (as in sr-dār).

HAVOC, general waste, destruction. (F. — Teut.) 'Cry havoc', Shak. Cor. iii. 1. 275; Jul. Cæs. iii. 1. 273; 'cries on havoc', Hamlet v. 2. 375. 'Pell-mell, havoc, and confusion'; 1 Hen. IV, v. 1. 82. 'They entrid in-to Ylion and pillyd hit, and after did cry havoc hawk upon all the treasures'; Caxton, Troy-book, fol. 175. 'To crye havoc' occurs in 1419; Excerpta Historica, p. 32. From the AF. phrase crier havoc; Black Book of Admiralty, i. 455. An Eng. adaptation of OF. havot, pillage, plunder (Godefroy), used in precisely the same way; esp. in the phrase crier havoc, to cry out 'plunder', which Godefroy gives two examples. It is clearly connected with OF. have, a handful (Godefroy), which Cotgrave explains by 'a gripe, or handfull, also a booty, or prey'; from the OF. verb haver, 'to hooke, or to grapple with a hook'; Cot. Cf. haver, 'a little hook', Cot.; havey, the same (Godefroy). W. de Bibbesworth explains havet by 'a flesh-hook'; Wright, Vocab. i. 172. Apparently from the Teut. base haf-* seen in Goth. hafjan, to heave, lift up; see Heave and Haft. 'To cry havoc' was to give the signal for seizing upon the spoil. Notes on E. Etym., p. 128. Der. havoc, verb (rare). Hen. V, l. 2. 173, where a cat is said 'to tear and havoc more than she can eat'.

HAW, a hedge; a berry of the haw-thorn. (E.) The sense of 'inclosure' or 'hedge' is the orig. one. In the sense of 'berry', the word is really a short form for haw-berry or hawthorn-berry; still it is of early use in this transferred sense. ME. hawe. Chaucer uses hawe, lit. a haw-berry, to signify anything of no value, C. T. 6241 (T 659); but he also has it in the orig. sense. 'And eke ther was a polkat in his hawe' = there was a polcat in his yard; C. T. 12789 (C 855). AS. haga, an enclosure, yard, house, Grein, ii. 5; whence the usual change to later hage, haz, hawe, by rule. — Icel. hagi, a hedged field, a pasture; Swed. hage, an enclosed pasture-ground; Dan. have [for hage], a garden; Du. haag, a hedge; whence 's Gravenhage', i.e. the count's garden, the place called by us the llague. Teut. type hagom*, m. Allied to G. hag, a fence, hedge; and further, to W. cae, an enclosure. See Quay. Stokes-Fick, p. 66. Der. haw-fish; haw-thorn = AS. hagþorn, which occurs as a gloss to alba spinu, Wood. 139. 23; ONorthumb. hagþorn, Matt. vii. 16. Also hedge, q.v.

HAWK (1), a bird of prey. (E.) ME. hawk, Chaucer, C. T. 4132, 5997 (A 4134, D 415). Earlier hauek (= hawk), Layamon, 3258. AS. hafoc, more commonly heafoc, Grein, ii. 42. — Du. hawe; Icel. hawk; Swed. hök; Dan. høg; G. habicht, OHG. harpuh. β. All probably from the Teut. base hab*, to seize, hold; see Heave, and cf. L. capere. Cf. Low L. capus, a falcon, from L. capere; and L. accipiter, a hawk. Der. hawk, verb, ME. hauken, Chaucer, C. T. 7957 (E 81); hawk-er.

HAWK (2), to carry about for sale. (O. Low G.) Not in early use. Rich. quotes from Swift, A Friendly Apology, the line: 'To hear his praises hawk'd about.' The verb is a mere development from the sb. hawker, which is an older word. See Hawker.

HAWK (3), to force up phlegm from the throat, to clear the throat. (E.) 'Without hawking or spitting'; As You Like It, v. 3. 12. Apparently an imitative word; cf. W. hochi, to throw up phlegm; hoch, the throwing up of phlegm; Dan. harke, Swed. harska, to hawk. And (perhaps) Norw. hauka, to shout, call out (Aasen); F. hoquet, hiccough.

HAWKER, one who carries about goods for sale, a pedlar. (O. Low G.) Minshew tells us that the word was in use in the reign of Hen. VIII; it is much older, in E., than the verb to hawk. 'Hawkers, be certain deceitfull fellows, that goe from place to place buying and selling brasse, pewter, and other merchandise, that ought to be vttered in open market . . . You fide the word An. 25 Hen. VIII, cap. 6, and An. 33 eiusdem, cap. 4.' Minshew. 'Those people which go up and down the streets crying newbooks and selling them by retail, are also called Hawkers;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [The earliest trace of a similar word is in P. Plowman, B. v. 227, where the trade of the pedlar is denoted by hokkerie, spelt also hukkerie and hukrie; where the base of the word is the same as that of the word huckster.] β. A word introduced from abroad; cf. Low G. höker, a retail-dealer, Du. heuker; MDu. heukeren, to sell by retail, to huckster; heukelaar, a huckster, retailer (Scwcl). We find also Dan. höker, a chandler, huckster, hökeri, a hawker's trade, höker, to hawk; Swed. hökeri, higgling, hökare, a chandler, cheese monger. Also G. höcker, a retailer of goods. See further under Huckster.

HAWSE, HAWSE-HOLE. (Scand.) 'Hawse', two large round holes in a ship, under the head or beak, through which the cables pass, when the ship lies at anchor; Phillips, ed. 1706. Cf. 'I was forced to cut cable in the haws'; Eng. Garner, vii. 83 (ab. 1606). So called because made in the 'neck' or bow of the ship. — Icel. hál, hals, the neck; also (as a sea-term) part of the bow of a ship or boat. Cf. Du. hals, neck; halsblok, a hawse-block; Dan. and Swed. hals, neck, also a tack (as a sea-term). Also AS. heals, G. hals, Goth. hals, neck; cognate with L. collum, neck. ¶ Distinct from hawser: see below.

HAWSER, HALSER, a small cable. (F. — L.) 'Hawser, a three-stroud [strand] rope, or small cable'; Kersey. In Sherwood's index to Cotgrave, halser means a tow-rope by which boats are drawn along. In Grafton's Chron., Rich. III, an. 3, we read: 'He wayed up his ancors and halsed up his sayles.' 'Two hawser poor boy-rope'; (1373) Riley's Mem. of London, p. 369. 'With well-weathered halsers raise Their white sails'; Chapman, tr. of Od. ii. 609. From the old verb hause, to lift, raise, as in Rom. of Partenay, 3083. — OF. halcier, F. hawser (Hatzfeld), to raise. — Late L. altiare, to elevate. — L. altus, high. See Altitude. Similarly the Ital. alzaniere, 'a halsier [hawser] in a ship' (Florio) is from Ital. alzare, to raise. ¶ Often associated with hawse (above), though of different origin.

HAWTHORN, from haw and thorn; see Haw.

HAY (1), grass cut and dried. (E.) Formerly used also of uncut growing grass. ME. hey, hay; Chaucer, C. T. 16963 (H 14). 'Vpon grene hey' = on green grass; Wychif, Mark, vi. 39. From OMerc. hig (faenum), Vesp. Psalter, xxxv[i]. 2. AS. hig, grass, hey; 'ofer þæt grene hig' = on the green grass; Mark, vi. 39. — Du. hooi; Icel. hey; Dan. and Swed. hø; Goth. hawi, grass; G. heu, MHG. houwe. β. The true sense is 'cut grass'; the sense of 'growing grass' being occasional. The Teut. type is haw-rom*, n. From the base haw(w)*: of the verb to haw, i.e. to cut. See Hew. Der. hay-cock, hay-maker. But not ME. hay-ward, where hay = hedge (below).

HAY (2), a hedge. (E.) ME. heie, heye; 'bi the heie', by the hedge; Owl and Night, 817. AS. hege; see Corpus Gloss., 606. Teut. type hagiz*; allied to Haw. Cf. OF. haie, a hedge, of Low

G. origin. Der. hay-ward, an officer who had charge of fences and enclosures; P. Plowman, C. vi. 16, and note.

HAZARD, chance, risk. (F.—Span.—Arab.) ME. hasard, the name of a game of chance, generally played with dice; Chaucer, C. T. 12525 (C 591). Earlier, in Havelok, 2326.—F. hasard, 'hazard, adventure'; Cot. The orig. sense was certainly 'a game at dice' (Littre). B. We find also Span. azar, an unforeseen accident, hazard, MSpan. azar, 'an ill token, a pricke or note in a die, a hucklebone'; also azar en el dado, 'a game at dice called hazard'; Minshew. Cf. MItal. zara, 'a game at dice called hazard, also a hazard or a nick at dice'; Florio. It is probable that F. ha, Span. a, answers to the Arab. article al, turned into az by assimilation. Thus the F. word is from Span., and the Span. from Arab. al zahr, the die, a word only found in the vulgar speech; see Devic's Supplement to Littre. But Arab. zahr is a word of doubtful authority; and the etym. is uncertain. Der. hazard, verb, hazardous.

HAZE, vapour, mist. (Low G.) Not in early use. The earliest trace of the form haze is in Ray's Collection of Northern-English Words, 1691 (1st ed. 1674). It gives: 'it hazes, it mists, or rains small rain.' As a sb., it occurs in Phillips, ed. 1706: 'Haze, a Kime or thick Fog.' 'Hazy weather' is in Dampier's Voyages, ed. 1684 (R.), and 'thick and hawsey' occurs in 1625 (N. E. D.). Apparently due to the Low G. phrase de Hase Broutet, i. e. a mist or haze is rising; see Bremen Wörterbuch. Broutet=brews, brewing. Berg-haus enters the phrase under Hase, a hare; but does not explain the connexion. Kietz gives häs, a slight shower of rain, as a Swed. dial. word. Note also prov. F. haar, a cold sea-fog or mist (E. D. D.); Du. dial. hazig, foggy, misty (Hockenoogen). Der. hazy, haziness.

HAZEL, the name of a tree or shrub. (E.) ME. hasel. 'The havel and the haz-borne' [haw-thorn]; Gawayne and the Gine Knight, ed. Morris, 744. AS. hasel. 'Corulus, hasel. Saginus, hwit hasel'; Wright's Vocab. i. 32, col. 1. 'Abellana, hasel, vel hasel-nutu' [hazel-nut]; id. 33, col. 2 (Voc. 137, 16, 139, 17). + Du. hazelaar; Icel. hasl, hæsl; Dan. and Swed. hasel; G. hasel; OHG. hasala. + L. corulus (for cosulus); W. coll; OIrish coll (for cosl). Stokes-Fick, p. 92. Teut. type hasalaz*; Idg. type kosolos*. Der. hazel-nut=AS. hasel-nutu, as above; hazel-twigs, Tam. Shrew, ii. 255.

HE, pronoun of the third person. (E.) ME. he; common. AS. he; declined as follows. Masc. sing. nom. he; gen. his; dat. him; acc. hine. Fem. sing. nom. heo; gen. and dat. hire; acc. hi. Neut. sing. nom. and acc. hit; gen. his; dat. him. Plural (for all genders); nom. and acc. hit, hie; gen. hira, heora; dat. him, heom. + Du. hi; OSax. he, hi; allied to Goth. neut. hi-ta. Allied to Lith. szis, this, I. ci-ta, on this side, Gk. i-tai, there, keiros, that one. Brugmann, i. § 83, 604. Der. hence, her, kither.

HEAD, the uppermost part of the body. (E.) ME. hed, heed; earlier hæd (= hævel), from which it is contracted. 'His heed was halld' [bald]; Chaucer, C. T. 198. In P. Plowman, B. xvii. 70, it is spelt hed; but in the corresponding passage in C. xx. 70, the various readings are hede, head, and hæde. AS. hæfod, Mark, vi. 24, where the latest MS. has hæfed. + Du. hoofd; Goth. haubith; G. haupt; OHG. houbit. Also OIcel. haufod, later hufod; Dan. hoved; Swed. hufvud. Teut. types haubith*, haubith*; n., which have no equivalents. The L. caput (with short a) is allied to AS. hafela, hafola, head. Der. head, vb.; head-ache, band (Isa. iii. 20), -dress, -gear, -land, -less, -piece (C. Lear, ii. 2), -quarters, -stall (Tam. Shrew, iii. 2, 58), -stone (Zech. iv. 7), -strong (head-strong in Palsgrave), -tire (I. Psalms, iii. 6), -way, -wind. Also head-ling, a late word; head-sman (All's Well, iv. 3, 342); head-y (2 Tim. iii. 4), head-ly, head-iness. Also head-ling, q.v.

HEADLONG, rashly; rash. (E.) Now often used as an adj., but orig. an adv. ME. hedling, heddling, heddynges, heddyngy; Wyclif, Deut. xxii. 8; Judg. v. 22; Matt. viii. 32; Luke, viii. 33. 'Heore hors heddyng mette' = their horses met head to head; King Alisaunders, 2261. The suffix is adverbial, answering to the AS. suffix -ling, which occurs in bae-ling, backwards. In this suffix, the -l is separable; the common form being -ing; as in fiar-ing, suddenly.

HEAL, to make whole. (E.) ME. helen. 'For he with it coude bothe hele and dere'; i. e. heal and harm, Chaucer, C. T. 10554 (P 240). AS. helau, to make whole; very common in the pres. part. hæled=the healing one, saviour, as a translation of Jesus. Regularly formed with -l mutation of h to æ from AS. hæl, whole; see Whole. + Du. heelen, from heel, whole; Icel. heila, from heil; Dan. hele, from heel; Swed. hela, from hel; Goth. hailan, from hails; G. heilen, from heil. Der. heal-er, heal-ing; and see Health.

HEALTH, soundness of body, or of mind. (E.) ME. helth, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 137. AS. hælt (acc. hælt); Ælfric's Hom. i. 466, l. 8; ii. 306, l. 21. Formed from AS. hæl, whole. Teut. type hailitha*, l. The suffix -itha denotes condition, like L. -itas. Not a very common word in old writers; the more usual form is ME. hale

(P. Plowman, C. vi. 7, 10), from AS. hælt, Grein, ii. 22. Der. health-y, health-ly, health-ness; health-ful, health-ful-ly, health-ful-ness; health-some, Romeo, iv. 3, 34.

HEAP, a pile of things thrown together. (E.) ME. heep (dat. hepe, hepe), Chaucer, C. T. 577 (A 575); P. Plowman, B. vi. 190. AS. hæp, a heap, crowd, multitude; Grein, ii. 56. + Du. hoop; (whence Icel. höp; Dan. høb; Swed. hop); G. haufe, OHG. hūfo, + Russ. hupa, a heap, crowd, group; Lithuanian kaupas, a heap (Fick, iii. 77). Brugmann, i. § 421 (7). Der. heap, vb., AS. hæpian, Luke, vi. 38. Doublet, hope (2).

HEAR, to perceive by the ear. (E.) ME. heren (sometimes hure), pt. t. herde, pp. herd; Chaucer, C. T. 851 (A 849); 13448 (B 1708). OMerc. heran; AS. hyran, pt. t. kyrde, pp. gekyred; Grein, ii. 132. + Du. hooren; Icel. heyra; Dan. høre; Swed. höra; Goth. haurjan; G. hören, OHG. hōrian. Teut. type haurjan-*. Cf. Gk. ἀκούειν, to hear. ¶ It does not seem possible so to ignore the initial h as to connect it with the word ear, though there is a remarkable similarity in form between Goth. haurjan, to hear, and Goth. auso, the ear. See Ear. Der. hear-er, hear-ing, hear-ny, q.v., hearken, q.v.

HEARSAY, a saying heard, a rumour. (E.) From hear and say. 'I speake unto you since I came into this country by hearsay'. For I heard say that there were some dayly theeves, &c.: v. l. Latimer, Ser. on the Gospel for St. Andrew's Day (R.). The 1st sp. say, being the latter of two verbs, is in the infin. mood, as in A.S. 'Ful oft time I haue herd sein': Gower, C. A. i. 367; bk. iii. 262. 'He . . . secan hyrde'=he heard say; Beowulf, ed. Grein, 875.

HEARSE, a carriage in which the dead are carried to the grave. (F.—L.) Much changed in meaning. ME. herse, herce. First (perhaps) used by Chaucer, 'Adoun I fel when that I saugh the herse'; Complaint to Pity, st. 3. 'Heeres on a dede corce (herce vpon dede corces)', Pirama, piramis; Prompt. Parv. p. 236. Mr. Way's note says: 'This term is derived from a sort of pyramidal candlestick, or frame for supporting lights, called hercia or herpica, from their resemblance in form to a harrow, of which mention occurs as early as the xiii. century. It was not, at first, exclusively a part of funeral display, but was used in the solemn services of the holy week . . . Chaucer appears to use the term herse to denote the decorated bier, or funeral pageant, and not exclusively the illumination, which was a part thereof; and towards the 16th century, it had such a general signification alone. Hardyng describes the honours falsely bestowed upon the remains of Richard II. when cloths of gold were offered "upon his hers" by the king and lords; &c. See the whole note; also Kock, Church of our Fathers, ii. 495. The changes of sense are (1) a harrow, (2) a triangular frame for lights in a church service, (3) a frame for lights over a tomb, (4) a frame to support a pall, (5) a carriage for a dead body; the older senses being quite forgotten.—OF. herse, 'a harrow, also, a kind of portcullis, that's stuck, as a harrow, full of sharp, strong, and outstanding iron pins' [which leads up to the sense of a frame for holding candles]; Cot. Mod.F. herse, Ital. erpic, a harrow.—L. hirpicem, acc. of hirpex, a harrow, also spelt irpex. ¶ A remarkable use of the word is in Berners' tr. of Fioissart, cap. cxxx, where it is said that, at the battle of Crecy, 'the archers ther stode in maner of a herse', i. e. drawn up in a triangular form, the old F. harrow being so shaped. See Specimens of English, ed. Skeat, p. 160. Der. re-herse.

HEART, the organ of the body that circulates the blood. (E.) ME. herte, properly dissyllabic. 'That dwelled in his herte site and sore, Gan fallen, when the herte felid deth'; Chaucer, C. Der. heat, verb. - AS. hētan, in The Shrine, ed. Cockayne, p. 16, l. 15; formed rather from the adj. hāt, hot, than from the sb.; heat-er.

HEED, to take care, attend to. (E.) ME. heden, pl. t. heide; Layamon, 17801; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1050 (or 1051). AS. hēdan, to take care; pt. t. hēdde; Grein, ii. 29. A weak verb, formed by vowel change from a sb. hād*, care, not found in AS. but occurring in OFries. hāde, hāde, care, protection, and allied to G. hut, OHG. huota, heed, watchfulness; OSax. hādian, to heed; Du. hoeden, to heed, guard, from hoede, guard, care, protection; G. hüten, to protect (OHG. huaten), from G. hut (OHG. huota), protection. β. HEEL (1), the part of the foot projecting behind. (E.) ME. heel, heele; Wyclif, John, xiii. 18. AS. hela, the heel; Grein, ii. 30. We find also the gloss: 'Calx, hēla, hōh nīpewærd' = the heel, the lower part of the heel; Wright's Vocab. i. 283, col. 2 (Voc. 266. 8). + Du. hiel (from OFriesic hēle); Icel. heill; Swed. hæl; Dan. hæl. β. It is probable that AS. hela is a contraction of hēh-la*, with the usual vowel-change from hē (followed by i) to e; this would make the word a diminutive of AS. hāh, which also means 'the heel'; and is a commoner word. See Hough. Der. heel-piece.

HEEL (2), to lean over, incline. (E.) A corrupted form; the word has lost a final d, whilst the vowel has been lengthened. It is modified from ME. hēlden, hilden. Cf. the Efrices, Du. and Swed. forms. Palsgrave has: 'I kyld, I leane on the oyle syde, as a rote or slipp, or any other vessel, is encline de costé'. Sytic fast, I rote [advise] you, for the bote begynneth to kyld. 'Hēldyn, or bowyn, inclino, flecto, deflecto'. Prompt. Parv. p. 234; see Way's note. β. The ME. hēlden or hilden was frequently transitive, meaning (1) to pour, esp. by tilting a vessel on one side; and (2) intransitively, to heel over, to incline. Wyclif has: 'and whanne the boxe of alabastre was brokun, she hēlde it [poured it out] on his heed'; Mark, xiv. 3. AS. hēldan, hēldan, trans. to tilt, incline, intrins. to bow down; Grein, ii. 131. 'Pā gēstaoladest . . . eorðan swā fæste, þæt hit on ānige healle ne hēlde' = Thou hast founded the earth so fast, that it will not heel over on any side; Ælfred's Metres, xx. 164. It is a weak verb, related to the (participial) adjective heald, inclined, bent down, which occurs in nīder-heald, bent downwards; Grein, ii. 295. + Icel. halla (for hældr*), to lean sideways, heel over, esp. used of a ship; from hallr (< hælt*), leaning, sloping; Dan. heide, to slant, slope, lean, tilt (both trans. and intrins.); cf. hæld, an inclination, slope; Swed. hälla, to tilt, pour; cf. Efrices. hella, to heel over. The adj. is AS. heald, OFries. hald, Icel. hallr, OHG. hald, inclined, bent forward; Teut. type hælt*-. Allied to AS. hold, G. hold, faithful, true (to a master), Goth. hulhs, gracious; Teut. type hulth*-. Cf.

AS. heahfore. 'Annicula, vel vacula, heahfore;' also, 'Allitum, fast heahfore [a fat heifer];' id. p. 23, col. 2 (Voc. 120. 29, 35). Also spelt heahfr; Voc. 274. 20. β. In Cotgrave. = MF. hemisphere, 'a hemisphere'; Cot. — L. hémisphærium. = Gk. ἡμισφαῖριον, a hemisphere. = Gk. ἡμι-, prefix, signifying half; and σφαῖρα, a ball, sphere. See Hemi- and Sphere. Der. hemispheric — al. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 1, § 13.

HEMISTICH, half a line, in poetry. (L. — Gk.) Not from F. hemistiche (Cotgrave), but directly from L. hémistichium, by dropping the two latter syllables. Kersey has: 'Hémistichium, a half verse.' = Gk. ἡμιστίχον, a half verse. = Gk. ἡμι-, half; and στίχος, a row, order, line, verse. See Hemi- and Distich.

HEMLOCK, a poisonous plant. (E.) ME. hemlok; spelt humlok, humlok, Wright's Vocab. i. 226, col. 1, 265, col. 1; homelok, id. i. 191, col. 2 (Voc. 711, 34; 786, 16; 645, 21). = AS. hemic, hymelic; Gloss to Cockayne's Saxon Leechdoms; early form hymblic, Epinal Gloss. 185. Of unknown origin.

HEMORRHAGE, a great flow of blood. (F. — L. — Gk.) Spelt hemorrhagy by Kay, On the Creation, pt. 1 (R.). = MF. hemorrhagic, 'an abundant flux of blood'; Cot. — Late L. hemorrhagia, Latinised from Gk. αἱμορραγία, a violent bleeding. = Gk. αἷμα, for αἷμα, blood; and ρρᾶναι, a grade of ρῥῆναι, I break, burst; the lit. sense being 'a bursting out of blood'. Gk. ρρᾶναι is allied to F. urak.

HEMORRHOIDS, EMERODS, painful bleeding tubercles round the margin of the anus. (F. — L. — Gk.) 'Hemorroides be veynes in the fundament'; Sir T. Eliot, Castel of Ithel, b. iii. c. 9. = MF. hemorrhoides, 'an issue of blood by the veins of the fundament'; Cot. — L. hemorrhoides, hemorrhoids, pl. of hemorrhoida. = Gk. αἱμορροΐδες, pl. of αἱμορροΐς, adj. liable to flow of blood. = Gk. αἷμα, for αἷμα, blood; and ρρᾶναι, to flow, cognate with Skt. srj, to flow, and allied to E. stream. Der. hemorrhoid-al. Doublet, emerois.

HEMP, a kind of plant. (L. — Gk.) ME. hemp, havelok, 782. Contracted from a form hemp; the n becoming m by the influence of the following p. AS. kenep, kenep; Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, i. 124, ll. 1, 3, and note. [Cf. Den. kenep; Icel. kampa; Dan. kamp; Swed. kampa; G. hanf; OHG. hanf.] All from L. cannabis; Gk. κάνναβις; hemp. Cf. Skt. gajāśa, hemp; prob. not an Idg. word. β. The L. word is merely borrowed from Gk. 'Grimm and Kuhn both consider the Gk. word borrowed from the East, and the Teutonic one from the L. cannabis which certainly made its way to them'; Curtius, i. 173. The word was borrowed so early that it suffered consonantal change. Der. hemp-en, with adj. suffix, as in gold-en; Hen. V, iii. chor. 8. Also cannas, q.v.

HEN, the female of a bird, especially of the domestic fowl. (E.) ME. hen, Chaucer, C. T. 15445; pl. kennes, id. 14872 (B 4629, 4056). AS. heun, hen, hūn; Grein, ii. 23. Tent. type hanjā, f.; from AS. hana, a cock; Grein, ii. 11. — Du. hen, fem. of han, a cock; Icel. hena, fem. of hani; Dan. køne, fem. of kane, a cock; Swed. küna, fem. of kane; G. henne, fem. of hahn, a cock. Cf. Goth. hana, a cock. β. Thus hen is the fem. of a word for cock (obsolete in English), of which the old Teutonic type was han-on-*. γ. The AS. hana means, literally, 'singer', the suffix -a denoting the agent, as in AS. hant-a, a hunter. = γ. KAN, to sing; whence L. canere, to sing. Der. hen-bane, Prompt. Parv. p. 235; lit. 'fowl-poison'; see Bane. Also hen-coop, hen-harrier, a kind of hawk (see Harrier); hen-pecked, i.e. pecked by the hen or wife, as in the Spectator, no. 176: 'a very good sort of people, which are commonly called in scorn the henpecked.' 'My henpecked sire'; Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Past. iii. 49.

HENCE, from this place or time. (E.) ME. kennes, P. Plowman, B. iii. 108; whence the shorter form hens, occurring in Lydgate's Minor Poems, p. 220. In the modern hence, the -ee merely records that the ME. hens was pronounced with voiceless s, not with a final z-sound. β. In the form hennes, the suffix -ee was due to a habit of forming adverbs in -ee, as in twy-ee, twice, need-ee, needs; an older form was kenne, havelok, 843, which is found as late as in Chaucer, C. T. 2358 (A 2356). γ. Again, hene represents a still older heneu or heonene, spelt heonene in Ancrén Kniwe, p. 230, l. 8. AS. heonane, hionane, hence; Grein, ii. 67. Here heonane stands as usual for an older hianau*. A shorter form appears in the AS. heona (for hina), hence; Grein, ii. 67; closely allied to hi-ne, acc. masc. of the pron. hi, he. See He. δ. Similarly, L. hinc, hence, is connected with L. hic, this. Der. henceforth, compounded of hence and forth, and answering to AS. forð heonane, used of time; see examples in Grein, II. 68, ll. 1-4; henceforward, comp. of hence and forward.

HENCHMAN, a page, servant. (E.) In Shaks. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 121. 'Compare me the few . . . disciples of Jesus with the solemn pomp . . . of such as go before the bishop, of his henzemen, of trumpets, of sundry tunes; &c.; Udall, on Sk. Mark, c. 11, vv. 1-10. 'And every knight had after him riding Three henzemen on him awaiting.' The Flower and the Leaf, l. 252 (a poem wrongly ascribed to Chaucer, and belonging to the fifteenth century). ME. henzeman; the pl. henzemen occurs in 1392, in the Earl of Derby's Expedition (Camden Soc.), p. 163; cf. p. 280. Spelt henzeman in 1492. The full (Latinised) form hengestmannus occurs in the Issue Roll for 1380 (Easter); see N. E. D. β. We also find Henzman as a proper name in Wills (in the Clergy List, 1873); showing that the right etymology is from ME. hengest (cognate with Du. and G. hengst, Swed. and Dan. hest), a horse, and E. man. We find similar formations in Icel. hestvörðr (lit. horse-warrior), a mounted guard (Cleasby); and in Swed. kingstridare (lit. horse-rider), 'a groom of the king's stable, who rides before his coach'; Widgegren's Swed. Dict. In this view, the sense is simply 'groom,' which is the sense required in The Flower and the Leaf. γ. The ME. hengest occurs in Layamon, l. 3546, and is from AS. hengest, a horse (Grein, ii. 34), once a common word. It is cognate with Icel. hest, Swed. and Dan. kingst and húst, G. hengst; from an orig. Teutonic hangistoz*. The orig. sense of henzeman was 'horseman'; then 'a page,' usually a young man of high rank. See A Student's Pastime (index). ¶ I find in Blount's Nomoclexicon, ed. 1691, the following: 'Henchenan, qui equo inittitur bellicosus, from the G. hengst, a war-horse; with us it signifies one that runs on foot, attending upon a person of honor or worship.' [Mentioned] Anno 3 Edw. 4, cap. 5, and 24 Hen. 8, cap. 13. It is written henzman, anno 6 Hen. 8, cap. 1.

D.). = Arab. hinna, the dyeing or colouring shrub; Lavonia inermis; Rich. Dict., p. 582.

'Hepaticus, obstructions of the liver'; Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. = MF. hepatique, 'hepatic', of or belonging to the liver; Cot. — L. hepaticus. = Gk. ἥπατικός, belonging to the liver. = Gk. ἥπαρ, stem of ἥπαρ, the liver. + L. icere, the liver; Skt. yakri, the liver. Der. hepatic-al; hepatic-a, a flower, the liver-wort; see hepaticque, hepatique in Cotgrave.

Hist. for Children, p. 40. = Gk. ἑπτά, for ἑπτά, seven; and -αρχία, government. See Seven and Anarchy.

AS. hire, gen. and dat. case of heo, she; the possessive pronoun being made from the gen. case, and indeclinable; see Sweet's A. S. Reader, Grammat. Introduction. The word is to be divided as hi-re, where hi- is to be referred to a Teut. pronominal base, signifying 'this'; and -re is the usual AS. fem. inflection in the gen. and dat. of adjectives declined according to the strong declension. See He. Der. her-s, ME. hires, Chaucer, C. T. 4647 (B 227); not found much earlier; her-self.

HERALD, an officer who makes proclamations. (F. — OHG.) ME. herald, heraud; Chaucer, C. T. 2601 (A 2599); P. Plowman, B. xviii. 16. = OF. heralt, heraut, a herald; Low L. heraldus; cf. Ital. araldo, a herald; OHG. herolt (G. herold), a herald (from OF.). β. Nevertheless, the OF. word is of Teut. origin; and prob. from OHG. harān, to proclaim, cry aloud; with the usual F. suffix -ant for -ant < G. -wald (Toynbee, Gr. § 692, xx); the sense being 'crier' or 'proclaimer.' Cf. OHG. fora-haro, a herald; from for-harān, to proclaim. γ. The OHG. harān is cognate with Goth. harjan, AS.

Supposed to be allied to OL. herba, food, and to Gk. φωβή, pasture, fodder, forage, φωβή, to feed. Dor. herb-less, herb-ac-cous, in Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6, § 15, from L. herbaceus, grassy, herb-like; herb-age, from F. herbage, 'herbage, pasture' (Cot.), answering to a L. form herbaticum*; herb-al; herb-al-ist, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6, § 4; herb-ar-ium, from L. herbārium, a book describing herbs, a herbal, but now applied to a collection of plants; herbivorous, herb-devouring, from L. vorare, to devour (see Voracious). Englished from L. hereditarius, hereditary.—L. hereditus, hereditary.—L. hereditus, decl. stem of heres, an heir. See Heir. Dor. hereditarily. from OF. haironier; Cotgrave explains faulcon haironier as 'a heron, a faulcon made only to the heron.' Also heron-ry. And see Heronshaw, Egret.

HERONSHAW, HERNSHAW, (1) a young heron, (2) a herony. (F. — OHG.) Spenser has herushaw, a young heron; F. Q. vi. 7. Two distinct words have been confused here. 1. Hernshaw, a heron, is a corruption of heronseue; the name heronseue for the heron is still common in Lincolnshire and Yorkshire. Mr. Peacock's Glossary of Manley and Corringham (Lincoln) words has: 'Heronseue, the common heron, "There were vewed at this present survey certayne heronseues which have allwayes used to brede there to the number of iiii."—Survey of Glastonbury, temp. Hen. VIII, Mon. Ang. i. 11. See Chaucer, Squieres Tale, F. 68. 'The etymology of this heronseue is given by Tyrwhitt, who cites the F. heronseue from 'the glossary,' meaning probably that in Urry's ed. of 'Chaucer; but it is verified by the fact that the OF. heroncel (older form of heronseue) occurs in the Liber Custumarum, p. 304, and means 'a young heron.' And again, Palgrave has 'heronseue, an heronseue, a p. 187. The suffix -cel is a double dimin., as in lion-cel, lancioncel. For ew < F. eau, cf. ME. beu-tee, F. beau-té. 2. Hernshaw in its other sense is due to a (false) popular etymology, as if it were from heron, and shaw, a wood. This sense is given by Cotgrave, who explains OF. haironier by 'a heron's nest, or ayrle; a herushaw, or shaw of wood wherein herons breed.' Hence heronshaw (1) is (F. — OHG.); heronshaw (2) is hybrid.

HERRING, a small fish. (E.) ME. hering (with one r), Havelok, 758. AS. hæring; the pl. hæringas is in Ælfric's Colloquy, in Thorpe's Analecta, p. 24; also hæring, Wright's Vocab. i. 56, l. 4 (Voc. 94, 13; 181. 4); + Du. haring; G. haring; OHG. haring (Kluge). β. The explanation that the fish is named 'from its appearance in large shoals,' from the Teut. type hærjōz*, an army (as seen in Goth. hærjis, AS. here, G. heer), seems to be phonetically impossible. The word remains unexplained.

HESITATE, to doubt, stammer. (L.) Spelt hesitate, hesitate in Minshew, ed. 1627. [Perhaps suggested by the sb. hesitation, which occurs in Cotgrave to translate F. hesitation, whereas he explains hesite only by 'to doubt, feare, stick, stammer, stagger in opinion.'] — L. hesitāto, pp. of hesitare, to stick fast; a frequentative formed from hesum, supine of hærrere, to stick, cleave. + Lithuanian gaisztis, gaisztoti, to tarry, delay (Nesselmann); Fick, i. 576. — G. hais, to stick, cleave; where the gh is not palatal. Brugmann, i. § 627. Der. hesitat-ion, hesit-ant-y; from the same root, ad-herere, co-herere, in-herere.

HESPERIAN, western. (L. — Gk.) 'Your feigned Hesperian orchards.' Massinger, Virgin Martyr, A. iv. sc. 3 (where it refers to the Hesperides). — L. Hesperius, western; with suffix -an. — L. Hesperia — Gk. Ἑσπερία, the western land; fem. of ἑσπεριος, evening, western. — Gk. ἑσπερος, evening. + L. vesper, evening; see Vesper. Der. Closely allied to the adj. ἑσπεριος is the fem. ἑσπερίς, whence the pl. ἑσπεrides, the daughters of Night, who dwell in a western isle, and guarded a garden with golden apples; Hesiod, Th. 215.

HEST, a command. (E.) ME. hes, hesce, a command; also, a promise; Chaucer, C. T. 11376 (F. 1064). The final t is properly excrement, as in whits-t, again-t, amongs-t, amids-t, from ME. whites, againes, amonges, amides. AS. hes, a command, Grein, i. 24; Teut. type haitiz*, f. (> haissiz, with s for t). — AS. haitan, to command; Teut. type haitan*. + Icel. heit, a vow, from heita, to call, promise; OHG. heiz (G. geheiss), a command, from OHG. heizan (G. heissen), to call, bid, command. Cf. Goth. haitan, to name, call, command.

HETEROCLITE, irregularly inflected. (L. — Gk.) A grammatical term; hence used in the general sense of irregular, disorderly. 'There are strange heteroclitics in religion now adays'; Howell, Familiar Letters, vol. iv. let. 35. — L. heteroclitus, varying in declension. — Gk. ἑτερόκλιτος, otherwise or irregularly inflected. — Gk. ἑτερο-, decl. stem of ἑτερος, other; and -κλιτος, formed from κλίνειν, to lean, hence, to vary as a case does, cognate with E. lean (1).

HETERODOX, of strange opinion; heretical. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Compounded from Gk. ἑτερο-, decl. stem of ἑτερος, another, other; and δόξα, opinion, from δοκεῖν, to think. Der. Heterodox-y, Gk. ἑτεροδοξία.

HETEROGENEOUS, dissimilar in kind. (Gk.) Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, gives the adjectives heterogene, heterogeneous, and the sb. heterogeneity. Compounded from Gk. ἑτερο-, decl. stem of ἑτερος, another, other; and γενος, kind, kin, cognate with E. kin. Der. heterogeneous-ly, -ness; heterogene-it-y.

HETMAN, a captain; of Cossacks, or in Poland. (Pol. — G.) First in 1710, in Whitworth, Acc. of Russia (ed. 1758, p. 19). — Polish hetman (Russ. ataman), a captain. — G. hauptman, a captain. — G. haupt, head; and mann, man.

HEW, to hack, cut. (E.) ME. heuen, Chaucer, C. T. 1424 (A 1422). AS. heawan, to hew; Grein, ii. 62. + Du. houwen; Icel. hoggva; Swed. hugga; Dan. hugge; G. hauen; OHG. houwan. Teut.

type hawwan-*. + Russ. kouute, to hammer, forge; Lith. kauti, to fight; cf. Lith. kouā, battle. Allied to L. cidere, to strike, pound, beat. Brugmann, i. § 639. The root appears to be KEU, to strike, beat. Der. he-wer-; also any (1), q.v.; hor, q.v.

HEXAGON, a plane figure, with six sides and angles. (L. — Gk.) Hexagonal is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Hexagon in Minshew, ed. 1627. Named from its six angles. — L. hexágōnum, a hexagon. — Gk. ἑξάγωνος, six-cornered. — Gk. ἑξ, six, cognate with E. six; and γωνία, an angle, corner, allied to γωνία, knee, cognate with F. knée. See Six and Knee. Der. hexagon-al, hexagon-al-ly.

HEXAMETER, a certain kind of verse having six feet. (L. — Gk.) 'This provoking song in hexameter verse'; Sidney's Arcadia, b. i. (R.). 'I like your late English hexameters'; Spenser, letter to Harvey, qu. in Globe ed. of Spenser, p. xxviii. — L. hexamēter; also hexamētrus. — Gk. ἑξάμετρος, a hexameter; properly an adj. meaning 'of six metres' or 'feet'. — Gk. ἑξ, six, cognate with E. six; and μέτρον, a measure, metre. See Six and Metre.

HEY, interjection. (E.) ME. hei, Legend of St. Katharine, l. 579; hay, Gawayn and Grene Knight, 1445. A natural exclamation. + G. hei, interjection; Du. hei, hey! ho!

HEYDAY (1), interjection (G. or Du.). In Shak. Temp. ii. 2. 190. 'Heyday, what Hans Fluterkien is this! what Dutchman does build or frame castles in the air?' Ben Jonson, Masque of Augurs. 'Ioly rutterkin, heyday!'; Skelton, Magnificat, 757. 'Horrified either from G. heida, ho! hallo! or from Du. hei daar, ho! there. It comes to much the same thing. The G. da, Du. daar, are cognate with E. there. β. But note that Cotgrave has MF. hadea, 'interj. of perceiving or surprising, ha! are you there?'; cf. OF. hē dea, hē dia, interj. (Godefroy, s. v. de). ¶ The interj. hey is older; see above.

HEYDAY (2), frolicsome wildness. (E.) 'At your age the heyday in the blood is tame'; Hamlet, iii. 4. 69. I take this to be quite a different word from the foregoing, though the commentators confuse the two. In this case, and in the expression 'heyday of youth,' the word may well stand for high day (ME. hey day); and it is not surprising that the old editions of Shakespeare have highday in place of heyday; only, unluckily, in the wrong place, viz. Temp. ii. 2. 190. So also 'in the highday of blood'; Macklin, Love-a-la-Mode, A. i. (Sir Archy); 'in the highday of youth'; Smollett, Hum. Clinker, 1771, ii. 50. Cf. 'that sabbath day was an high day'; Johu, xiii. 31. For the old spellings of high, see High.

HIATUS, a gap, defect, &c. (L.) In Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. — L. hiatus, a gap, chasm; cf. hiatus, pp. of hiare, to yawn, gape; cognate with E. yawn. See Yawn. Doublet, chasm, q.v.

HIBERNAL, wintry. (F. — L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 13, § 10, where it is spelt hybernal. — F. hibernal, 'wintry'; Cot. — L. hibernalis, wintry (Wisdom, xvi. 29, Vulg.); lengthened from L. hibernus, wintry. β. Hibernus is allied to Gk. χειμαρῖνος, wintry, χείμα, winter; and to L. hi-ems, winter, Gk. χι-ών, snow, Skt. hi-ma-s, cold, winter; the form of the root is GIEFI. Der. from same source, hibern-ate.

HICCUGH, HICCUP, HICKET, a spasmodic inspiration, with closing of the glottis, causing a slight sound. (E.) Now generally spelt hiccough. Spelt hiccup (riming with prick up), Butler's Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1. 346. Also hicket, as in the old edition of Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 9, § 5; and in Minshew. Also hiccough; Florio explains Ital. singhiozzio by 'yeaxings, hiccoughs.' Also hiccok; Cotgrave has: 'Hoquet, the hiccok, or yexing;' also 'Hocqueter, to yex, or cluck [cluck], to have the hiccup or hiccok.' β. It seems to be generally considered that the second syllable is cough, but it is ascertained (see N. E. D.) that hiccough is an accommodated spelling, due to popular etymology. The evidence takes us back to the forms hick-ock, hick-et, both formed from hick by the help of the usual dimin. suffixes -ock, -et. Cf. F. hoyu-et, the hiccough, in which the final -et is certainly a dimin. suffix; Walloon hikett, a hiccough, hikel, a shaking (Remacle). γ. The former syllable hie, hik, or hick is of imitative origin, to denote the spasmodic sound or jerk; and is preserved in the prov. E. hick, to hiccough. It is not peculiar to English. + MDu. huck-up, 'the hick or hock'; also hick, 'the hick-hock'; Hexham; Du. hik, the hiccough, hikken, to hiccough; Dan. hikke, the hiccough; also, to hiccough; Swed. hicka, the hiccough; also, to hiccough. And cf. W. ig, a hiccough, sob; igio, to sob; Breton, hik, a hiccough, called hik in the dialect of Vannes, whence (perhaps) F. hoquet. δ. All from an imitative base HIK, variant form of KIK, used to denote convulsive movements in the throat; see Chinough.

HICKORY, an American tree of the genus Carya. (N. Amer. Indian.) Short for pohickery, recorded in 1653 as the Amer. Indian name; Virginian powohickora (Trumbull).

HIDALGO, a Spanish nobleman of the lowest class. (Span. — L.) The word occurs in Terry, Voyage to East India, ed. 1655, p. 169 (Todd); fidalgo, Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 116. — Span.

hidalgo, a nobleman; OSpan. fidalgo, Port. fidalgo, a nobleman; also MSpan. hijodalgo (Minshcu). Lit. 'son of something', i.e. a son to whom a father has left an estate. (So Körtling; the explanation from filius italicus is baseless.) β. Hijo, OSpan. hijo, is from L. filium, acc. of filius, son; see FILIAL; -dalgo is from L. dē aliquo, of something.

HIDE (1), to cover, conceal. (E.) ME. hiden, huden; Chaucer, C. T. 1479 (A 1477); Ancrén Riwle, p. 130. AS. hýdan, Grein, ii. 125. + Gk. κεκρυπτο, to hide. And cf. L. custos, a custodian (see CUSTODY); W. cuddio, to hide (base coud). — ✓ KEUDII, to hide. Der. hid-ing. Brugmann, i. § 699.

HIDE (2), a skin. (E.) ME. hyde, Pricke of Conscience, l. 5299; hude, Ancrén Riwle, p. 120. AS. hýd, the skin; Grein, ii. 125. + Du. huid; Icel. húð; Dan. and Swed. hud; OHG. hūt; G. haut. + L. cutis, skin; Gk. κῡρος, κῡρος, skin, hide; OPruss. heuto, hide. — ✓ SKEU, to cover; Pick, i. 816. See Sky. Der. hide-bound, said of a tree the bark of which impedes its growth, Milton's Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 32, l. 2; also hide (3).

HIDE (3), to flog, castigate. (E.) Colloquial; 'to skin' by flogging. Cf. Icel. hýða, to flog; from húð, the hide. Der. hid-ing.

HIDE (4), a measure of land. (E.) 'Hide of land,' Blount's Law Dict., ed. 1691. Of variable size; estimated at 120 or 100 acres; or even much less; see Blount. Low L. hida; Duange. AS. hid; Alfréd's tr. of Beke, b. iii. c. 24; b. iv. c. 13, 16, 19. (See Kemble's Saxons in England, b. i. c. 4; and the Appendix, showing that the estimate at 120 or 100 acres is too large.) β. This word is of a contract form; the full form is higid; Thorpe, Diplomatarium Aevi Saxonici, p. 657; Kemble, Codex Diplomaticus, no. 243. This form higid is equivalent to hiwne, another term for the same thing; and both words orig. meant (as Beeda says) an estate sufficient to support one family or household. They are, accordingly, closely connected with AS. hiwan, domestics, those of one household, and with the Goth. hiwne-fraga, the master of a household; see further under Hind (2). ¶ Popular etymology has probably long ago confused the hide of land with hide, a skin; but the two words must be kept entirely apart. The former is AS. higid, the latter AS. hýd.

HIDEOUS, ugly, horrible. (F.—L.?) The central e has crept into the word, and it has become trisyllabic; the true form is hidæus. It is trisyllabic in Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 3. 34. ME. hidous (the invariable form); Chaucer, C. T. A 3520; he also has hidously, C. T. A 1701. — OF. hidus, hidus, hidæus, later hidæus, hideous; the earliest form is hidus. β. Of uncertain origin; if the former s in hidous is not an inserted letter, the probable original is L. hispidus, roughish, an extended form of L. hispidus, rough, shaggy, bristly. (Körtling, § 4581.) Der. hideous-ly, hideous-ness.

HIE, to hasten. (E.) ME. hien, hyen, higen; P. Plowman, B. xx. 322; cf. Chaucer, C. T. 10605 (F 291). The ME. hie or hye, haste, is also found; id. 4629 (B 209). AS. higian (higian), to hasten; Grein, ii. 72. β. Allied to Du. hijgen, to pant; which seems to be of imitative origin.

HIERARCHY, a sacred government. (F.—Gk.) Gascoigne has the pl. hierarches; Steel Glas, 993; ed. Arber, p. 77; spelt hierarches, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, i. 1. § 4. — F. hierarchie, 'an hierarchy'; Cot.—Gk. ἱεραρχία, the power or post of an ἱεραρχος. — Gk. ἱεραρχος, a steward or president of sacred rites. — Gk. ἱερα, for ἱερός, sacred; and ἀρχαίω, to rule, govern. β. The orig. sense of ἱερός was 'vigorous'; cognate with Skt. ishiras, vigorous, fresh, blooming (in the Peterb. Dict.); see Brugmann, i. § 851. For ἀρχαίω, see Arch-, prefix. Der. hierarchie-cal; we also find hierarch (Milton, P. L. v. 468). From Gk. ἱεραρχος.

HIEROGLYPHIC, symbolical; applied to picture writing. (L.—Gk.) 'The characters which are called hieroglyphics.' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 1051 (R.). 'An hieroglyphical answer.' Raleigh, Hist. of the World, b. iii. c. 5. s. 4 (R.). — L. hieroglyphicus, symbolical. — Gk. ἱερογλυφικός, hieroglyphic. — Gk. ἱερό, decl. stem of ἱερός, sacred; and γλυφάω, to hollow out, engrave, carve, write in incised characters. See Hierarchy and Glyptic. Der. hieroglyphic-al, -al-ly; also the sb. hieroglyph, coined by omitting -ic.

HIEROPHANT, a revealer of sacred things, a priest. (Gk.) In Warburton's Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 4 (R.). — Gk. ἱεροφάντης, teaching the rites of worship. — Gk. ἱερα, for ἱερός, sacred; and φάω, to show, explain. See Hierarchy and Phantom.

HIGGLE, to chaffer, bargain. (E.) 'To higgles thus;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2. l. 491. And used by Fuller, Worthies, Northumberland (R.). A weakened form of haggle; see Haggle (2). Der. higgl-er.

HIGH, tall, lofty, chief, illustrious. (E.) ME. heigh, high, hey, hy; Chaucer, C. T. A 316; P. Plowman, B. x. 155. AS. āhah, hāh; Grein, ii. 44. + Du. hoog; Icel. há; Swed. hög; Dan. høi; Goth. hauks; G. hoch; OHG. Teut. type haukhoz*. β. The orig. sense is 'knoblike, humped or bunched up'; cf. G. hügel, a bunch, knob, hillock; Icel. haugr, a mound. The still older sense is simply 'rounded'; cf. Lith. kaukas, a hill, kaukas, a boil, a swelling; Skt. kucha-s, the female breast. ✓ KEUK, to bend, make round; cf. Skt. kuch, to contract, bend. Der. height, q. v.; high-ly; also high-born, K. John, v. 2. 79; high-bred; high-coloured, Ant. and Cleop. ii. 7. 4; high-fed; high-flown; high-handed; high-minded, i Hen. VI., i. 6. 12; high-minded-ness; high-ness, Temp. ii. 1. 172; high-priest; high-road; high-spirited; high-way = ME. hegh weye, P. Plowman, B. x. 155; high-way-man; high-wrought, Othello, ii. 1. 2; with numerous similar compounds. Also highland (below); and see how (2).

HIGHLAND, belonging to a mountainous region. (E.) 'A generation of highland thieves and redshanks;' Milton, Observ. on the Art of Peace (quoted in Todd). AS. hēahland, a high land; from hēah, high, and land; Cædmun, Exod. 385. Der. highland-er; highlands.

HIGHT, was or is called. (F.) Obsolete. A most singular word, presenting the sole instance in English of a passive verb; the correct phrase was he hight = he was (or is) called, or he was named. 'This grisly beast, which lion hight by name' = which is called by the name of lion; Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 140. ME. highte. 'But ther as I was wont to highte [be called] Arcite, Now highte I Philostrate;' Chaucer, C. T., A 1557. Older forms hatte, hetle. 'Clarice hatte that maide' = the maid was named Clarice; Floriz and Blanchefleur, ed. Lumby, l. 479. 'Thet hetten Calce and Iosue' = that were named Calce and Joshua; Aenbite of Inwyt, p. 67. And see Stratmann's Dict., s. v. hāten. From AS. hātan, I am called; I was called; pres. and pt. passive or middle, of AS. hātan, active verb, to bid, command, call; Grein, ii. 16, 17. + Icel. heiti, I am named, from heita, to call; G. ich heisse, I am named, from heissen, to call. β. Best illustrated by Gothic, which has haitan, to call, name, pt. t. haitait; whence was formed the passive pres. tense haitanda, I am called, he is called; as in 'Thomas, sael haitanda Didymus' = Thomas, who is called Didymus; John, xi. 16. See Heat.

HILARITY, cheerfulness, mirth. (F.—L.—Gk.) 'Restraining his ebriety unto hilarity;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. v. c. 23, § 16. — F. hilarité, mirth; omitted by Cotgrave, but see Litttré. — L. hilaritatem, acc. of hilaritas, mirth. — L. hilaris, hilarus, cheerful, gay. Not an orig. L. word; but borrowed. — Gk. ἰλαρός, cheerful, gay. Cf. Gk. δαός, propitious, kind; ἰλαος, I am gracious. — ✓ SEL; whence F. silly. Brugmann, iv. § 594. Der. Hence the late word hilari-ous, formed as if from a L. hilarious*; hilarious does not occur in Todd's Johnson. From same source, ex-hilarate. ¶ Hilary Term is so called from the festival of St. Hilary (L. Hilarius); Jan. 13.

HILDING, a base, menial stretch. (E.) In Shak. used of both sexes; Tam. Shrew, ii. 26; &c. [Not derived, as Dr. Schmidt says, from AS. healdan, to hold; which is impossible.] We also find hilding, hilding, applied to a worthless horse, a jade (N. E. D.). Prob. from ME. heltten, to incline, to bend down. Cf. ME. helttinge, a lending aside; AS. hýlding, a bending (Voc. 382. 2). See Heel (2).

HILL, a small mountain. (E.) ME. hil (with one l.); Havelok, 1287; also hul, Ancrén Riwle, p. 178. AS. hýll; Grein, ii. 132. 'Collis, hýll;' Wright's Vocab. i. 54, col. 1 (Voc. 177. 24). And see Northumbrian version of St. Luke, xxiii. 30. + MDu. hil, hille; Oudemans. β. Further allied to Lithuan. kalnas, L. collis, a hill; culmen, a top; Gk. κολλῶν, a hill. Brugmann, i. § 633. See Culminate, and Holm. From ✓ QEL, to be elevated, rise up. Der. hill-ly, hill-i-ness; dimin. hill-ock, in Shak. Venus and Adonis, 237. ¶ Not connected with G. hügel, a hill; for that is related to F. how, a hill; see How (2).

HILT, the handle of a sword. (E.) In Shak. Hamlet, v. 2. 159; it was common to use the pl. hills with reference to a single weapon; Jul. Caesar, v. 3. 43. ME. hilt; Layamon, 6506. AS. hilt, Grein, ii. 75; helt, O. E. Texts. + Icel. hýll; Dan. hælt; North Fries. heelt; OHG. helza, a sword-hilt. Cf. OF. helt (from Teutonic). Perhaps allied to Low G. helst, an ax-handle, and to Helve. Der. hilt-ed.

HIM, the objective case of he; see He.

HIN, a Hebrew liquid measure. (Heb.) In Exod. xxix. 40, &c. Supposed to contain about 6 quarts. = Heb. hin, a hin; said to be a word of Egyptian origin.

HIND (1), the female of the stag. (E.) ME. hind, hynde; P. Plowman, B. xv. 274. AS. hind, fem.; Grein, ii. 76. + Du. hinde, a hind, doe. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. hind; OHG. hinta, MHG. hinde; whence G. hindin, a doe, with suffixed (fem.) -in. Perhaps allied to Gk. νεῖ-ās, a young deer. Der. hind-berry, a wild raspberry.

HIND (2), a peasant. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. vi. 8. 12. The d is excrement. ME. hine, Chaucer, C. T. 605 (A 603); kyne, P. Plowman, B. vi. 133. AS. hina*, a domestic; but the word is unauthenticated as a nom. sing., and was orig. a gen. pl.; so that hina really stands for hina man = a man of the domestics. We find hina ealdor = elder of the domestics, i.e. master of a household; Alfréd's

tr. of Beda, iii. 9. β. Further, kina stands for kigna, gen. pl. of kiwan (pl. nom.), domestic; Grein, ii. 78. Cf. kiwen, a family; kiwreden, a household; also G. hei-rath, marriage; Goth. keiwa-frauja, master of a household. Allied to L. ciuis, a citizen. Brugmann, i. § 609.

HIND (3), adj. in the rear. (E.) We say 'hind feet', i.e. the two feet of a quadruped in the rear. But the older expression is 'hinder feet', as in St. Brandan, ed. Wright, p. 30, the positive degree not being used; we also find hynderre, hynderre, Wyclif, Gen. xvi. 13; hynderst, Chaucer, C. T. 624 (A 622). AS. hindan, only as adv. at the back of; hindeward, hindwards, backwards; hinder, adv. backwards; Grein, ii. 76. † Goth. hindar, prep. behind; hindana, prep. beyond; G. hinter, prep. behind; hinten, adv. behind; (HIG. hintaro, comp. adj., hinder. We also find Goth. hindunists, hindmost. All from the base which appears in AS. hin-an (heon-an), hence; while the comp. suffix -der answers to Gk. -tero-. See Hence, He, Behind. Der. hindward, Wyclif, Ps. xlix. 17, lxx. 4; also hind-most, q. v.; hinder, verb, q. v.; be-hind.

HINDER, to put behind, keep back, check. (E.) ME. hindren, hyndren; Gower, C. A. i. 311; bk. iii. 937. It also has the sb. hinderer; i. 330; iii. 111; bk. iii. 1526; bk. vii. 803. AS. hindrian; A. S. Chron. an. 1003. = AS. hinder, adv. behind; cf. hind, behind, † Icel. hindra, to hinder; G. hindern. See Hind (3). Der. hinder-er; also hinder-ance (for hind-ance), with F. suffix -ance; 'damages, hurt, or hinderance'; Frith's Works, p. 15; and see La Belle Dame sans Merci, 602.

HINDMOST, last. (E.) In Shak. Sonnet, 85, l. 2; Hen. VI, iii. 1, 2; cf. heennast, Barlowe, Bruce, viii. 245. The suffix is the word most, and the compound is of late formation. β. Distinct from AS. hindema, hindmost; Grein, ii. 76; where the suffix -ma is the same as that seen in L. opti-mus, opti-mus, best; see Aftermost; cf. Goth. hindunists, hindmost, Matt. vii. 12; to be divided as hind-unists; cf. Goth. fru-na, first. See Hind (3). ¶ Also spelt hindernmost, as in Hollarsh, Hist. Scotland, an. 1290 (R.). And again, we have ME. hind-er-most, as in Chaucer, C. T. 624 (A 622).

HINGE, the joint on which a door turns. (E.) The i was formerly e. ME. henge (with hard g), a hinge; with dim. form hengel, a hinge. 'As a door is turned in his hengis' [earlier version, in his heng]; Wyclif, Prov. xxvi. 14. 'Hengyl of a dore'; Prompt. Parv. p. 235. 'Ite gumser, a hengyllie'; Wright's Vocab. i. 261, col. 1 (Voc. 779, 3). β. So called because the door hangs upon it; from ME. hengen, to hang. 'Henged on a tre'; Havelok, 1429. Hengen is a later variant (cf. Icel. hengja) of ME. hangen, AS. hangian, to hang; see Hang. Cf. AS. henge-clif, a steep cliff, and stone-henge; Dan. dial. hinge, hange, a hinge (Dan. hængsel); Low G. henge; MDu. henge, hengene, a hinge (Du. hængsel). For the sound, cf. singe, swinge. Der. hinge, verb.

HINT, a slight allusion. (E.) a. The verb is later than the sb. 'As I have hinted in some former papers'; Tatler, no. 267. First found in 1648. Only the sb. occurs in Shak., where it is a common word; Oth. i. 3. 142, 166. Esp. used in the phrases 'to take the hint', or 'upon this hint'. β. Hint properly signifies 'a thing taken', i.e. a thing caught or apprehended; being a derivative of the ME. henten (pp. hent), to seize upon. Palsgrave has: 'I hent, I take by violence'; also spelt hinten. Cf. hint, sb., a sudden seizure, Dunbar, Fenyct Friar, l. 88. 'Hlyntyd, raptus; Hlyntyn, or reynn, or hentyn, raptio, arripio'; Prompt. Parv. p. 240. The earlier spelling of the verb was hentten, pt. t. hentte, Chaucer, C. T. 700 (A 698); the pp. hent occurs even in Shak. Meas. iv. 6. 14. AS. hentan, to seize, to hunt after; Grein, ii. 34. Cf. Goth. -hinnan, to seize. See Hunt. Der. hint, verb.

HIP (1), the haunch, upper part of the thigh. (E.) ME. hupe, hipe, hippe. 'About hire hipes large'; Chaucer, C. T. 474 (A 472). 'Hipes had hue faire'—she had fair hips; Ailsaund, l. 190; printed with Will. of Palerne, ed. Skeat. AS. hype; Gregory's Pastoral, ed. Sweet, p. 383, l. 2. † Du. hup; (Dan. høfte; Swed. höft; from G. hüfte); Goth. hups; OIG. huf. β. The suffixed -i or -te in some of these words stands for the Idg. suffix -to-; the older Teut. type is hupia-*. Perhaps allied to Gk. ὑψία, the hollow near the hips of cattle. Der. hip-bone, AS. hype-bān; Wright's Vocab. i. 44, col. 1, last line (Voc. 159, 24). ¶ The word hipped, depressed, is connected with hypochondria; see Hippish.

HIP (2), also hip, the fruit of the dog-rose. (E.) ME. hepe. 'And swete as is the bremble flour That bereth the rede hepe'; Chaucer, C. T. 13677 (B 937). AS. heope (Voc. 133, 36); whence the comp. hēop-brymel, a hip-bramble; Wright's Vocab. i. 33, col. 1; to translate L. rubus (Voc. 138, 37). † Dan. hyben, pl.; MDan. hyben-torn, hip-thorn; MIG. hiefe, OIG. hiofo, a bramble-bush.

HIPPIE, hypochondriacal. (Gk.) In Byron, Beppo, st. 64. The word is merely a colloquial substitute for hypochondriacal, of which only the first syllable is preserved. Hence hippish is for hyp-ish. See Somerville's poem entitled 'The Hipp.'

HIPPOCAMPUS, a kind of fish. (Gk.) Hippocampus ends a line in W. Browne's Britannia's Pastorals, bk. ii. song 1. It has a head like a horse, and a long flexible tail; whence the name.—Gk. ἵππος, ἵππος, a horse; a monster, allied to ἵππος, masc. of ἵππος, a caterpillar; also a sea-monster, allied to ἵππος, to bend.

HIPPOTAMUS, the river-horse. (L.—Gk.) ME. ypotamus, Alexander and Dindimus, ed. Skeat, 157. Also ypotamus, King Ailsaund, 654. Both corrupted from L. hippotamus.—Gk. ἵππος, ἵππος, a horse; and ἵππος, masc. of ἵππος, a river-dwelling horse.—Gk. ἵππος, for ἵππος, a horse; and ἵππος, a river.—Gk. ἵππος, a horse; see Equine. ἵππος is 'running' water; cf. L. equus, a horse; ἵππος, flight, ἵππος, 1 fly (Trellwitz). ¶ From the same Gk. ἵππος we have hippo-drome, a race-course for horses; hippo-phagy, a feeding on horse-flesh; hippo-griff, a monster, half horse, half griffin; &c.

HIRE, wages for service. (E.) ME. hyrr, Chaucer, C. T. 509 (A 507); also kuere, hyrr, hyrr, P. Plowman, A. ii. 91; B. ii. 122. AS. hyrr, fem. (gen. hyrr). Luke xix. 23. † Du. huur, wages, service; Swed. hyrr, rent, wages; Dan. hyre, hire; prov. G. keuer, hire (Flügel's Dict.). Teut. type hūr-jis*, f. Der. hire, verb, AS. hýrian, Matt. xx. 7; hire-ling, AS. hýrling, Mark, i. 20.

HIRSUTE, rough, shaggy, bristly. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Iacon, Nat. Hist., § 616.—L. hirsutus, rough, bristly. Allied to Gk. ἵρσις, dry, hard; L. hirsere, to bristle. See Horror. Der. hirsute-ness (Todd).

HIS, of him, of it. (E.) Formerly neut. as well as masc. AS. his, gen. m. and n. of he, he. See He, Ita.

HISS, to make a sound like a serpent or a goose. (E.) Wyclif has hissing, a hissing, 2 Chron. xxix. 8; and hisse, v. 26. The L. sibilat is glossed by hysset, i.e. hisses; Wright's Vocab. i. 180, l. 1 (Voc. 627, 15). † MFLem. hischen, to hiss; Kilian, Oudemans; Norw. hysse; MSwed. hys, a noise to drive away pigs (lire); Gascon hissa, to hiss (Moncant). β. Formed from the sound; the Du. sisen, G. zischen, to hiss, are even more expressive; cf. fizz, whizz, whistle. Der. hiss, sb.; hiss-ing, Jer. xvii. 16, &c.; and see hiss, hush.

HIST, an interjection enjoining silence. (E.) In Shak. Romeo, ii. 2. 159. In Milton, II Penseroso, 55, the word hist appears to mean 'to summon by saying hist'; so that 'And the mute silence hist along'—summon (and bring) along the mute silence by saying hist. Also ist, st. Cf. Dan. hys, interj. silence! hysse, to hush.

HISTOLOGY, the science which treats of the minute structure of the tissues of plants and animals. (Gk.) A modern scientific term. Coined from Gk. ἵστωρ, for ἵστωρ, a web; and λόγος, from λόγος, a discourse, from λέγω, to speak. β. The orig. sense of ἵστωρ is a ship's mast, also the bar or beam of a loom, which in Greek looms stood upright; hence, a warp or web. γ. So called because standing upright; from Gk. ἵστωρ, to make to stand, set, place; from ἵστωρ, to stand; see Stand.

HISTORY, also STORY, a narrative, account. (L.—Gk.) Story (q. v.) is an abbreviated form. Gower has hystorie, C. A. iii. 48; bk. vi. 1383. Fabian gave to his Chronicle (printed in 1516) the name of The Concordance of Histories. In older authors, we commonly find the form storie, which is of F. origin. Hystorie is Englished directly from L. historia, a history.—Gk. ἱστορία, a learning by enquiry, information, history.—Gk. ἵστωρ, stem of ἵστωρ or ἵστωρ, knowing, learned; for ἵστωρ*, from the weak grade ἵστωρ of ἵστωρ, to know.—WED, to know; see Wit. Der. histori-an, formerly historien, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 24; histori-c-al, Tyndal's Works, p. 266, col. 2; histori-c-al-ly; histori-c; histori-o-grapher, a writer of history (from Gk. ἵστωρ, to write), Gascoigne's Steel Glas, 981; histori-o-graphy.

HISTRIONICAL, relating to the stage. (L.) In Minshew. 'And is a histrionical contempt'; Ben Jonson, Magnetic Lady, A. iii. sc. 4. Coined with suffix -al, from L. histrionicus, of or belonging to a player.—L. histrioni, decl. stem of histrion, a player, actor. From Etruscan hister, a player; Livy, vii. 2.

HIT, to light upon, to strike, to attain to. (Scand.) ME. hitten, P. Plowman, B. xii. 108; xvi. 87; Layamon, l. 1550.—Icel. hitla, to hit upon, meet with; Swed. hitla, to find, discover, light upon; Dan. hitte, to hit upon. Der. hit, sb.

HITCH, to move by jerks, catch slightly, suddenly. (E.) ME. hicken. 'Hytchen, hychyn, kythen, or remeyvyn, Amosen, move, remove'; Prompt. Parv. p. 239; where the word should have been printed as kychen or kychen. We also find 'Hatchyd [read kachyd], or remeyvd, hichid, hychyd, Amotus, remotus'; ibid. Cf. Lowland Scotch hatch, hatch, to move by jerks; Jamieson. Also prov. E. hutch, hutch, to jerk, to hitch; huck, to draw near, to hitch (E.D.D.). Of obscure origin. Perhaps related to prov. E. huck, to lurch up; Du. hokken, to squat, to crouch, also to stick; as het hokt, there is an obstacle (or hitch); Calisch. If so, it is allied to huckster. See Phil. Soc. Trans. 1903, p. 150. Der. hitch, sb.

HITHE, HYTHE, a small haven. (E.) ME. hihte; as in Garlebe-hithe, P. Plowman, B. v. 324; and see Prompt. Parv., p. 242, note 1. AS. hȳð, a haven; Grein, ii. 126. Teut. type hūhja*, f.

HITHER, to this place. (E.) ME. hider, hither, Chaucer, C. T. 674 (A 672); the right form in Chaucer being probably hider, since he rhymes hider with slider; C. T. 1265 (A 1263). [So also ME. fader, moder are now futher, mother.] AS. hider (common); Grein, ii. 71. + Icel. híðra (for híðra); Goth. híðrā. + L. citrā, on this side. β. From the Teutonic pronominal base hi- (see HE); with a suffix allied to the Idg. comparative suffix -ter. Der. hither-to; hither-ward, ME. hiderward, P. Plowman, B. vi. 323.

HIVE, a basket for bees. (E.) The old sense is 'hood.' ME. kyue (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 15398 (B 4582). Spell kyfe, Wright's Vocab. i. 223, col. 2 (Voc. 706. 41). AS. hȳf, f.; Voc. 123. 16; 'Aluearin, hyfi'; Corpus Gloss. 133. Teut. type hūfz*. + Du. huif, a hood, a hive (see FRANCE); Dan. dial. kyue. Allied to L. cūpa, a tub, a cup. See Cupola.

HO, HOA, a call to excite attention. (E.) 'And cried ho' Chaucer, C. T. 1, A 1706. Merely a natural exclamation; cf. Icel. hó, interj. hó, also Icel. hóa, to shout out ho!

HOAR, white, grayish white. (E.) ME. hor, hoor; Chaucer, C. T. 3876, 7764 (A 3878, D 182); P. Plowman, B. vi. 85. AS. hār, Grein, ii. 14. + Icel. hár, hoar, hoary; G. hehr, exalted, OHG. hēr, proud, lofty, orig. 'reverend.' Teut. type hairoz* (= hai-raz), lit. 'shining'; hence, white. The base hai- appears in Goth. hais, a torch, G. hei-ter, orig. 'bright', Icel. hei-ð, brightness; cf. Skt. hēta-, a sign, a meteor (Kluge). ¶ To be kept distinct from Icel. hár, which is the E. high (the r being merely the sign of the nom. case); and also from E. hair. Der. hoar-y, occurring in the comp. hoarlocket, having hoary locks, Layamon, 25845; hoar-i-ness; also hoar-frost, ME. hoorfrost, Wyclif, Exord. xvi. 14; also hoar-hoimd, q. v.

HOARD, a store, a treasure. (E.) ME. hord, Chaucer, C. T. 3262; Gower, C. A. iii. 155; bk. vii. 2094. AS. hord, Grein, ii. 96. + Icel. hóld; G. hort; Goth. huzd, a treasure. β. The Teutonic type is huzdo-, due to Idg. huzd-dho-, a thing hidden; from huzd*, weak grade of KEUDH1*, whence Gk. κρυπτός, AS. hryd-an, to hide. See HIDE (1). Brugmann, i. 699. Der. hoard, verb, AS. hordian, in Sweet's A. S. Reader; cf. Goth. huzdjan, to hoard; hoard-er, AS. hordere (Bosworth).

HOARDING, HOARD, a fence enclosing a house while builders are at work. (F.—Du.; or Du.) Rare in books; it is difficult to say how long it may have existed in F. as a builder's term. Hoard occurs in 1757 (N. E. D.). Either taken directly from Du. horde, a hurdle, or from OF. hoard, 'a scaffold', in Froissart (Godefroy, s. v. hoart); which is borrowed from it. The suffix -ing is, of course, English. Cf. Picard houardage, a scaffold (Corllet); AF. hurdys, a scaffold, in Liber Albus; p. 477. The true E. word is Hurdle, q. v.

HOAREBOUND, HOREHOOUND, the name of a plant. (E.) The true hoarhound is the white, Marrubium vulgare; the first part of the word is hoar, and the plant is so called because its bushy stems are covered with white woolly down; 'Johns, Flowers of the Field. The final d is excrement; the MF. form being horehune. 'Marubium, horehune.' Wright's Vocab. i. 139 (Voc. 554. 2). AS. hārkhūne; or simply hūne; for numerous examples of which see Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 334; & where we also find: 'the syllable hār, hoary, describes the aspect, so that a "black horehound" shows how we have forgotten our own language.' The words are also found separate; þa hāran hūnan. We also find kwite hāre hūnan, white horehound, an early indication of the black horehound, Ballota nigra, a very strong-smelling plant. β. The first syllable is obvious; see HOAR. The second syllable is unexplained. ¶ It thus appears that the right names should have been hoar houn and black houn; white hoarhound involves a reduplication; and black hoarhound, a contradiction.

HOARSE, having a rough, harsh voice. (E.) The r in this word is probably intrusive, and is (generally) not sounded; still, it was inserted at an early period. ME. hoos, hos, hous; all three spellings occur in P. Plowman, B. xvii. 324 (and various readings); hous, Chaucer, Book of the Duchesse, 347. AS. hās, Grein, ii. 14. + Dan. has; Swed. häs; Du. heesch; G. heiser. β. All from a Teutonic type haisoz*; or (if the r be original) haisroz*; perhaps the latter is indicated by the Icel. form häss. See N. E. D. Der. hoarsely, hoarseness.

HOARY, white; see HOAR.
HOAX, to trick, to play a practical joke. (Low L.) In Todd's Johnson; not found in early writers. The late appearance of the word suggests that it is a corruption of hocus, used in just the same sense. 'Legerdemain, with these jugglers hocus the vulgar'; Nalson, in Todd. 'This gift of hocus-pocussing'; L'Ettrange (Todd). See Hocus-Pocus. Der. hoax, sb.

HOB (1), HUB, the nave of a wheel, part of a grate. (E.) The true sense is 'projection.' Hence hub, 'the nave of a wheel (Oxfordshire); a small stack of hay, the mark to be thrown at in quoits, the hilt of a weapon; up to the hub, as far as possible'; Halliwell. The mark for quoits is the same word as hub, 'a small piece of wood of a cylindrical form, used by boys to set on end, to put half-pence on to chuck or pitch at'; Halliwell. Hob also means the shoe (projecting edge) of a sledge. The hob of a fire-place is explained in the N. E. D. as having been orig. 'a boss or mass of clay behind the fire-place.' EFries. hobbe, a rough tump of grassy land rising out of water; hubbel, a projection. + Du. hobbel, a knob; G. hubel, OHG. hubel, a hillock. [Cf. Du. heuvel, a hill; AS. hofs, a hump.] Lith. kup-stas, a tump of grass. Der. hob-nail, a nail with a projecting head, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 398; 2 Hen. VI, iv. 10. 63; hob-nail-ed.

HOB (2), a clown, a rustic, a fairy. (F.—OHG.) 'The hobbes as wise as grauest men'; Drant's tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry (R.). 'From elves, hobbs, and fairies That trouble our dairies'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Monsieur Thomas, iv. 6. See Narcs; also Hob in Atkinson's Cleveland Glossary, where, however, the suggestion of identifying hob with elf is to be rejected. It is quite certain that Hob was a common personal name, and in early use. 'To beg of Hob and Dick'; Cor. ii. 3. 123. That it was in early use is clear from its numerous derivatives, as Hobbs, Hobbins, Hobson, Hopkins, Hopkinson. β. That Hob, strange as it may seem, was a popular corruption of Robin is clearly borne out by the equally strange corruption of Hodge from Roger, as well as by the name of Robin Goodfellow for the hobgoblin Puck; (Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 40). Robert Bruce was nicknamed 'kyng Hobbe'; Polit. Songs, p. 216. γ. The name Robin is French, and, like Robert, is of OHG. origin; Littré considers it as a mere pet corruption from Robert, a name early known in England, as being that of the eldest son of Will. I. Der. hob-goblin (see goblin); spelt hobgobling in Palsgrave, who translates it by F. goblin.

HOBBLE, to limp, walk with a limp. (E.) ME. hobelen (with one b), P. Plowman, A. i. 113; P. Plowman's Crede, 106; and see Barbour's Bruce, iv. 447. Practically, the frequentative of hop; so that the lit. sense is 'to hop often.' + Du. hobbelen, to toss, ride on a hobby-horse, stammer, stutter (all with the notion of repetition of uneven motion); frequent. of hoben, to toss up and down; allied to huppen, huppelen, to hop, skip. Cf. EFries. and Westphal. hubbelen, to hobble; OF. hober, to move, bestir oneself; prov. G. huppeln, to hop, hobble (Flügel). See HOP (1). Der. hobbie, sb.

HOBLEDEHOY, a youth appearing in manhood. (E.) A jocular word, very variously spelt (see N. E. D.). Palsgrave, in 1540, has hobledehoy; Cotgrave explains F. marmaille as 'young rascals . . . a troop of . . . unprofitable hobdihoholes.' The true origin is unknown. Perhaps suggested by E. hobbie, expressive of clumsy movement, and hoy is an interjection. Cf. F. hober, 'to remove from place to place, a rustic word'; Cot. Low G. hop-hoi, an assembly of common people who dance about; Alace hoppethopp, a giddy, slightly, eccentric man (Martin); Low G. hupperling, a boy who jumps about, and cannot be still. Hobby was also a pet name for Robert; see Hobby (1).

HOBBY (1), HOBBY-HORSE, an ambling nag, a toy like a horse, a favourite pursuit. (F.—OHG.) See Hobby in French, Select Glossary. A hobby is now a favourite pursuit, but formerly a toy in imitation of a prancing nag, the orig. sense being a kind of prancing horse. In Hamlet, iii. 2. 142. 'They have likewise excellent good horses, we term the hobbies'; Holland, Camden's Ireland, p. 63. A corruption of ME. hobin, a nag; Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xiv. 68, 500; [whence OF. hobin, 'a hobby, a little ambling and short-maned horse'; Cot.] β. But this ME. hobin was a horse's name (see N. E. D.); of which Dobbin is a familiar variant. And Hobin is but an F. variant of F. Robin; see farther under HOB (2).

HOBBY (2), a small species of falcon. (F.—Du.) Obsolete. Cotgrave translates MF. hobren by 'the hawk termed a hobby.' ME. hohi, hoby (with one b). 'Hoby, hawk'; Prompt. Parv.; pl. hobies, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, cap. xviii; see Spec. of English, ed. Skeat, p. 204. Like other terms of falconry, it is of F. origin; being from OF. hobet, a hobby, allied to the MF. hobren mentioned above. So named from its movement.—OF. hober, 'to stirre, move, remove from place to place'; Cot.—MDu. hoben, to toss, move up and down. See HOBble. ¶ This etymology is confirmed by noting that the OF. verb hober was sometimes spelt auber (Cot.); corresponding to which latter form, the hobby was also called auberen (Cot.).

HOBGOBLIN, a kind of fairy. (F.—OHG.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 40; hobgobling in Palsgrave. Compounded of hob and goblin. See HOB (2) and Goblin.

HOBNAIL, a kind of nail. See HOB (1).

HOBNOB, HABNAB, take or leave, in any case, at random. (E.) Compounded of hob and nab, derived respectively from AS. habban, to have, and nabban, not to have. 1. In one aspect it means in Wright's Vocab. i. 163, l. 17; the spellings holin, holis both occur in the Ancræn Riwle, p. 418, note 1. AS. holen, holegn; Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, iii. 332. + W. celyn; Corn. celin; Bret. celen, holly; Gael. cickinn; Irish cúileann, holly. Idg. type holenno*-; Stokes-Fick, p. 91. β. The base of the AS. word is also preserved in Du. hulst, Low G. hulst, holly; and from the older form (hulis, huls) of the G. word the F. houe is derived. Der. holm-oak, q. v.

HOLLYHOCK, a kind of mallow. (E.) It should be spelt with one l, like holich. ME. holioke, to translate L. althæa and OF. ymalue, in a list of plants; Wright's Vocab. i. 140, col. 1, l. 6 (Voc. 556. 24). [Here the OF. ymalue = mod. F. guimauve, the marsh mallow (Cot.).] Also spelt holiocco, holiokke; see Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 332, col. 1, bottom. Compounded from ME. holi, holly; and hocco, hoke, hoc, a mallow, from AS. hoc, a mallow; id. Minshen, ed. 1627, gives 'Holie hocke, i. e. malua sacra.' β. The mallow was also called in AS. hoclæf. Cf. W. hocys, mallows; hocys bendigadig, hollyhock, lit. 'blessed mallow' (where bendigadig is equivalent to L. benedictus); but this W. form is merely borrowed from the AS. nom. pl. hocceas. γ. 'Of hagiological origin; another name was caulis Sancti Cuthberti,' N. E. D.

HOLM, an islet in a river; flat land near a river. (Scand.) 'Holm, a river-island; Coles, ed. 1684. 'Holm, in old records, an hill, island, or fenny ground, encompassed with little brooks; Phillips, ed. 1706. The true sense is 'a mound,' or any slightly rising ground; and, as such ground often has water round it, it came to mean an island. Again, as a rising slope is often situated beside a river, it came to mean a bank, wharf, or dockyard, as in German. The most curious use is in AS., where the main sea itself is often called holm, from its convex shape; the later senses are Scandinavian. ME. holm. 'Holm, place besyde a water, Hulmus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 243; see Way's note, which is full of information about the word. [The Low L. hulmus is nothing but the Teutonic word Latinised.] Icel. hólmr, hólmi, holmr, an islet; 'even meadows on the shore with ditches behind them are in Icelandic called holms;' Dan. holm, a holm, quay, dockyard; Swed. holme, a small island; whence G. holm, a hill, island, dockyard, wharf (Flügel). + L. culmen, a mountain-top; cf. L. collis, a hill. See Culminate and Hill.

HOLM-OAK, the evergreen oak. (E.) Cotgrave translates MF. yeuse by 'the holme oak, barren scarlet oak, French oak.' The tree is the Quercus Ilex, or common evergreen oak, 'a most variable plant, . . . with leaves varying from being as prickly as a holly to being as even at the edge as an olive;' Eng. Cyclop. s. v. Quercus. Whether because it is an evergreen, or because its leaves are sometimes prickly, we at any rate know that it is so called from its resemblance to the holly. β. The ME. name for holly was holin, sometimes phonetically varied to holm or holy. 'Holme, or holy;' Prompt. Parv. p. 244; and see Way's note. 'Hollie, or Holmtree;' Minshen. The form holm is in Chaucer, C. T. 2923 (A 2921). Thus holm-oak = holly-oak. See Holly.

HOLocaust, an entire burnt sacrifice. (L.—Gk.) So called because the victim offered was burnt entire. It occurs early, in the Story of Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1319, 1326, where it is plainly taken from the Vulgate version of Gen. xii. 8. — L. holocaustum; Gen. xxii. 8. = Gk. ὁλοκαυστον, neut. of ὁλοκαυστος, ὁλοκαυτος, burnt whole. — Gk. ὅλος, for ὅλος, whole, entire; and καίειν (fut. καύσ-ω), to burn. β. The Gk. ὅλος is cognate with Skt. sarva(s), all. Brugmann, i. § 319. For καίειν see Caustic.

HOLothURIAN, belonging to the genus of sea-slugs; as sb., a sea-slug, sea-cucumber, trepaug. (L.—Gk.) Modern. — L. holothuria, neut. pl. of Gk. ὁλοθούριος, a kind of zoophyte (Aristotle).

HOLSTER, a leather case for a pistol. (Du.—G.) Merely 'a case,' though now restricted to a peculiar use. In Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1. 391. — Du. holster, a pistol-case, holster; also, a soldier's knapsack (Sewel). β. The word is not orig. E., though we find holstrad = covered, Rom. of the Rose, 6146; and AS. holstior, a hiding-place, case, covering, Grein, i. 67; as well as Icel. hulstr, a case, sheath; Goth. hulstr, a veil, 3 Cor. iii. 13. γ. But any real connexion with these words is very doubtful; as the Du. word appears to have been borrowed (with change of st to s) from G. hulfter, hulfter, a holster; MHG. hulfter, a quiver; from OHG. hulft, a cover, case (Frank, Kluge). Hexham has MDu. hulftie, 'a galloch to wear with shoes or boots.'

HOLT, a wood, woody hill. (E.) 'Holt, a small wood, or grove;' Kersey, ed. 1715. ME. holt, Chaucer, C. T. 6. 'Hoc virgultum, a holt;' Wright's Vocab. i. 270, col. 1 (Voc. 796. 29). Teut. type hailagoz*, a derivative of Teut. hailaz*, whole (AS. hāl) or of hailoz* or hailiz*, sb., a good omen. Cf. Irish cél, W. coel, an omen; Stokes-Fick, p. 88. See Whole. Teut. types haimoz*, haimiz*. Some compare Skt. kshēmas(s), safety, safe abode, from kshi, to dwell; but this is to be rejected. Cf. Brugmann, i. § 920. Der. home-bred, Rich. HOP (2), the name of a plant. (Du.) In Cotgrave, to translate MF. houbelon (= F. houbelon). Also in Minshew's Dict., ed. 1627, 'Hoppe, humulus, lupulus'; Levins, ed. 1570. 'Hoppes in bierre' [beer]; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 21. The pl. hoppis occurs as early as 1502, in Arnold's Chron.; ed. 1811, pp. 236, 246; and hops are frequently mentioned in the Northernland Household-book, 1512. 'Hoppe, sede for beyre (v. r. bere), Humulus, secundum extraneos;' (i.e. it is a foreign word); Prompt. Parv. (1440). — MDu. hoppe (Frank), Du. hop, the hop-plant. + G. hopfen, the hop. β. We also find AS. hymel, Icel. humal, Swed., Dan. humle, MDu. hommel, the hop (Kilian); whence the Late L. humulus, now used as the botanical name. [The F. houblon is of Wallon origin, and ultimately from the Dutch.] But these can hardly be related words. ¶ An old note of the word occurs in an Old Westphalian gloss: 'volubilis major, hoppe;' Mone, Quellen, p. 292. Cf. O. Low G. hoppo, hupo, the hop (Gallée). Dr. E. Scott writes: 'One of the Westminster Abbey documents, temp. Henry I or late 11th century, begins— "Hec est firma . . . ad panem vi. cumbas . . . xx hopis de brasio."'

Dor. hop-vine, hop-bind (corruptly hop-bine).
HOPE (1), expectation; as a verb, to expect. (E.) The verb is weak, and seems to be derived from the sb. ME. hope, sb., Chaucer, C. T. 88. ME. hope, verb, sometimes in the sense 'to expect'; as, 'Our manciple, I hope he will be deed' = I fear he will be dead; Chaucer, C. T. 4027 (A 4029). See P. Plowman, C. xviii. 313, and the note. AS. hōpa, sb., in Ælfric's Hom. i. 350, l. 24; i. 568, l. 8; also used in the comp. tōhopa, hope, Grein, ii. 545; hōpian, v. to hope, Grein, ii. 96. + Du. hopen, sb., hopen, v.; Dan. haab, sb., haabe, v.; Swed. hopf, sb., whence the reflexive verb hoppas, to hope; MHG. hoffe, sb., represented by mod. G. hoffung; G. hoffen, to hope. Der. hope-ful, hope-ful-ly, hope-ful-ness; hope-less, -ly, -ness.

HOPE (2), a troop. (Du.) Only in the plur. forlorn hope, North's Plutarch, ed. 1631, p. 372. The plur. also occurs in An Eng. Garner, vii. 128, where Sir F. Vere describes the battle of Nieuport (S.W. of Ostend) in the year 1600; here it is at once connected with Du. verloren hoop; see FORLORN. Here hoop = band, troop, as in 'een hoop krijgs-volk, a troupe or band of soldiers; Hexham. Cf. verloren hoop (Kilian). It is now obsolete in Dutch. The usual sense of Du. hoop is heap; see HEAP.

HOPLITE, a heavy-armed foot-soldier. (Gk.) Modern. From Gk. hoplitēs, a hoplite. — Gk. hopla, a weapon, piece of armour; with suffix -itēs (E. -ite); allied to hoplaia, I prepare for myself, and to hōw, I am busy with (Prelwitz).

HORDE, a wandering troop or tribe. (F. — Turk. — Tatar.) Spelt hoord in Sir F. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 61; and in Hakluyt, Voy. i. 491. — F. horde, first in use in the 16th century (Littre). — Turk. urdu, a camp (Zenker, p. 117); cf. Pers. urda, 'a court, camp, horde of Tartars;' also urda, a camp, an army; Rich. Pers. Dict., pp. 56, 201. — Tatar urda, a royal camp, horde of Tatars (Tatars); see l'aveit de la Courteille, p. 54. First applied to the Tatar tribes.

HORDOCK: see HARDOCK.

HOREHOUND, a plant; see HOARHOUND.

HORIZON, the circle bounding the view where earth and sky seem to meet. (F. — L. — Gk.) In Shak. 3 Hen. VI. iv. 7. 81. [But we also find ME. orizante, Chaucer, Treatise on the Astrolabe, prol. l. 7. This is (through the OF.) from the L. acc. horizontem.] — F. horizon, 'a horizon'; Cot. — L. horizon (stem horizont-). — Gk. ōpizōn, the bounding or limiting circle; orig. the pres. pt. of the vb. ōpizein, to bound, limit. — Gk. ōpos, a boundary, limit; perhaps allied to Gk. ēpos, an enclosure (Prelwitz). AS. horn, Grein, ii. 98. + Icel. dan, and Swed. horn; Du. horen [for horn, the h being due to the trilling of the r]; G. horn; Goth. haurn. Teut. type hornom*, n. + W., Gael., and Irish corn; L. cornu. β. The Celtic forms are from the Idg. base kor-no-*; Stokes-Pick, p. 79. Further allied to Gk. kēp-as, a horn; and to Hart. Der. horn-beam, a tree; horn-bill, a bird; horn-blende, a mineral term, wholly borrowed from G. horn-blende, where -blende, i.e. a 'deceitful' mineral, yielding little ore, is from blenden, to dazzle, lit. to make blind; horn-book, L. L. i. v. 1. 49; horn-ed, Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 243, spelt hornyid in Prompt. Parv. p. 247; horn-owl or horn-ed owl; horn-pipe, Wint. R. ii. 267; also horn-et, q. v. From the same source are corn (2), corn-er, corn-et, &c.

HORNET, a kind of large wasp. (E.) So called from its resounding hum. In Holland's Pliny, b. xi. c. 21. AS. hyrnet, hyrnet; the pl. hyrnyta occurs in Exod. xxiii. 28. 'Crabro, hyrnet;' Ælfric's Gloss, De Nominibus Insectorum. Formed, with suffix -et, from horn, a horn, by regular vowel-change; cf. hyrned = horned, Grein, ii. 133. The vowel has, however, reverted in mod. E. to the original o, for clearness. See HORN. + EFries. hōrnetje; Westphal. hornje; Low G. horneke (Schambach). Cf. OSax. horn-bero, a hornet, lit. a 'horn-bearer'; AS. horn-bera, a trumpeter. Hexham has MDu. horener, hornte, a hornet, horentoren, a wasp; from horn, a horn. ¶ It is curious that G. hörnisse, O.H.G. hornaz (without vowel-change) is referred to a Teut. type hurnzatoz* (cf. Du. horz-elen, to buzz), allied to L. crabro (for eras-ro*), a hornet, Lith. szirszas (gen. szirszas-ens), a hornet; lit. 'a buzzer'; see Brugmann, i. § 626.

HOROLOGE, an instrument for telling the hours, a clock. (F. — L. — Gk.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 135. Nearly obsolete. ME. orloge, Chaucer, C. T. 14860 (B 4044). — OF. horologe, horloge; 'Horloge, a clock or dyall'; Cot. — L. horologium, a sun-dial, a water-clock. — Gk. ōpologion, the same. — Gk. ōpo-, for ōpa, a season, period, hour; and -logion, formed from lōgein, to tell. See Hour and Logic. Der. horolog-y, horolog-i-c-al.

HOROSCOPE, an observation of the sky at a person's nativity. (F. — L. — Gk.) A term in astrology. In O'grave. [The 'baucer uses the L. term horoscopus; Treatise on the Astrolabe, ed. Skeat, pt. ii. § 4.] — F. horoscope, the horoscope, or ascendant at a nativity; Cot. — L. horoscopus, a horoscope; from horoscopus, adj., that shows the hour. — Gk. ōpōskōnos, a horoscope; from the adj. ōpōskōnos, observing the hour. — Gk. ōpo-, for ōpa, season, hour; and skōnos, to consider, related to skēntōmai, I consider. See Hour and Seoptie. Der. horoscop-y, horoscop-i-c, horoscop-i-st.

HORRIBLE, dreadful, fearful. (F. — L.) ME. horribil, also written orribil, Chaucer, C. T. 4893 (B 473). — OF. horrible, 'horrible, terrible'; Cot. — L. horribilis, terrible, lit. to be trembled at; formed with suffix -bilis from horrere, to tremble, shake. See Horror. Der. horrid-y, Chaucer, C. T. 14535 (B 3807); horrible-ness.

HORRID, dreadful. (L.) Directly from Latin. Spenser uses it in the L. sense of 'rough.' 'His haughty helmet, horrid all with gold'; F. Q. i. 7. 31. — L. horridus, rough, bristly, &c. — L. horrere, to be rough. See Horror. Der. horrid-ly, horrid-ness.

HORRIFY, to make afraid, scare. (L.) A late word; not in Johnson. Coined, by analogy with words in -fy (mostly of F. origin), from L. horrificare, to cause terror. — L. horrificus, causing terror. — L. horri-, from horrere, to dread; and -fic-, for facere, to make. Der. From L. horrificus has also been coined the adj. horrific, Thomson's Seasons, Autumn, 782. See Horror.

HORROR, dread, terror. (F. — L.) Formerly also spelt horrou (Minshew), because at first taken from the French. Sir T. Elyot has horrou; Castel of Helth, bk. iii. ch. 1; and so in Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale (I 224). We find 'sad horror' in Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7. 23; and horrors in Hamlet, ii. 1. 84, in the first folio edition. — OF. horrou; later horrou, 'horror'; Cot. — L. horrōrem, acc. of horror, terror, dread. — L. horrere, to bristle, be rough; also, to dread, with reference to the bristling of the hair through terror. Cf. Skt. hr̥sh, to bristle, said of the hair, esp. as a token of fear or of pleasure. Thus horrere is for hirsere* (cf. L. hirsutus, rough, shaggy); from ✓ GHERS, to be rough. Der. From L. horrere we have horrent (from the stem of the pres. part.); also horri-ble, q. v., horri-d, q. v.; horri-fy, q. v.; and horri-fic. Cf. hirsute, urchin.

HORSE, the name of a well-known quadruped. (E.) The final e merely marks that the s is hard, and is not to be pronounced as z. ME. hors; pl. hors (unchanged), also hors-es, as now. Chaucer, C. T. 74, 10504 (A 74, F 190). 'Thei sellen bothe here hors and here harneys' (they sell both their horses and their harness; Mandeville's Travels, p. 38. AS. hors, neut. pl. hors, Grein, ii. 98. + Icel. hross, also hors; Du. ros; G. ross, MHG. ros, ors, OHG. hros. β. Teut. type horsesm*, n.; Idg. stem h₂ers-*; prob. allied to h₂ers-us, pp. of L. currere, to run, whence also currere with the sense of 'horse.' See Coursier. γ. This supposition is made more probable by the fact that the same base will account for AS. horse, swift, Grein, ii. 98; cf. MHG. rosch, swift. Brugmann, i. § 516; i. § 662. Der. horse, verb, Wint. Tale, i. 2. 288; horse-bak, ME. hors-bak, Gower, C. A. iii. 256; bk. vii. l. 4908; horse-block, horse-breaker, horse-fly, horse-guards, horse-hair, Cymb. ii. 3. 33; horse-leech, Hen. v. ii. 3. 57; horse-man, Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 67; horse-man-ship, Hen. v. iii. 7. 58; horse-power, horse-race, horse-racing; horse-shoe, Merry Wives, iii. 5. 123; horse-tail, horse-trainer, horse-whip, sb. and vb. Also numerous other compounds, as horse-bread, horse-flesh, horse-pound, all readily understood. Also horse-chestnut, said to be so called because the nuts were ground and given to horses; the word also occurs in several plant-names, as horse-foot, horse-knop, horse-radish, horse-tail, horse-thistle, horse-tongue, horse-veich. Also wal-rus.

HORSE-COURSER, HORSE-SCORSER, a jobbing dealer in horses. (Hybrid; (E. and F. — L.) The latter form is corrupt; see examples in Nares, s. v. Horse-coursier, Scorse. And coursier is for cossier, coser; 'Ille mangat, a cossy'; Voc. 684. 40. And cf. Gloss. to Elyot's Gower, ed. Croft, s. v. Skoer. From

AF. cosour (1310), a broker, in Riley, Mem. of London, p. xxii. = Late L. coeitorem, acc. of coeiator, a broker (Duc.). Cf. L. coeio, a broker. See my Notes on E. Etym., p. 136.

HORTATORY, full of encouragement. (L.) 'He animated his soldiers with many hortatory orations;' Holland, Ammanius, p. 202 (R.). Formed as if from L. hortātrius*, a coined word from hortātor, an encourager. = L. hortā-, as in hortāri, to encourage; prob. connected with horri (pres. tense horior), to urge, incite. Perhaps allied to F. years (Prest, s. v. yaipa). Der. So also hortative (Minshcu), a better form, from L. hortātrius, encouraging; also ex-hort, q. v.

HORTICULTURE, the art of cultivating gardens, gardening. (L.) First in Phillips, ed. 1678. From L. horti, gen. of hortus, a garden; and cultura, Englished form of L. cultūra, cultivation. See Culture. L. hortus is allied to F. yard; see Yard (1). Der. horticultur-al, horticultur-ist.

HOSANNA, an expression of praise. (Gk. -Heb.) In Matt. xxi. 9, 15; &c. It is rather a form of prayer, as it signifies 'save, we pray.' = Gk. ᾠδὴ ὑμῶν, Matt. xxi. 9. = Heb. hoshānā nūi, save, we pray; Ps. cxviii. 25. = Heb. hoshān, save, from yā-hā, to save; and nā, a particle signifying entreaty.

HOSE, a covering for the legs and feet; stockings. (E.) ME. hose, pl. hosen; (Chaucer, C. T. 458 (A 456); Ancren Riwle, p. 420. AS. hosa, pl. hosan; 'Caliga vel ocrea, hosa'; Wright's Vocab. i. 81, col. 2 (Voc. 327. 29). + Du. hose, hose, stocking, spout, water-spout; Icel. hosa, the hose covering the leg between the knee and ankle, a kind of gaiter; Dan. hose, pl. hoser, hose, stockings; G. hose, breeches (whence OF. hose). Perhaps cf. Skt. kūsha-s, a sheath. Der. hos-i-er, where the inserted i answers to the y in law-y-er, bow-y-er; hos-i-er-y.

HOSPICE, a house for the reception of travellers as guests. (F. - L.) Modern; chiefly used of such houses in the Alps. = F. hospier, a hospice. = L. hospitium, a hospice. = L. hospit-, decl. stem of hospes, a guest; also, a host. See Host (1), Hospital.

HOSPITABLE, showing kindness to strangers. (F. - L.) In K. John, ii. 244; Cor. i. 10. 26. = F. hospitable, 'hospitable'; Cot. Coined, with suffix -able, from Late L. hospitāre, to receive as a guest; Duange. = L. hospit-, stem of hospes, a guest, host. See Host (1). Der. hospitā-ly, hospitable-ness.

HOSPITAL, a building for receiving guests; hence, one for receiving sick people. (F. - L.) ME. hospital, hospitall; Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell, p. 81; hospital, Eng. Gilds, ed. T. Smith, p. 350, l. 25. = OF. hospital, 'an hospitall, a spittle'; Cot. = Late L. hospitāle, a large house, palace, which occurs A. D. 1243 (Brachet); a sing. formed from L. pl. hospitālia, apartments for strangers. = L. hospit-, stem of hospes; see Host (1). Der. hospitall-er, ME. hospitaller, Chaucer, C. T. Persones Male, De luxuria (l. 891); hospitall-ly, ME. hospitall-ly, Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 96. Doublets, hospit, hospel, hospit.

HOST (1), one who entertains guests. (F. - L.) ME. host, hoste, Chaucer, C. T. 749 (A 747). = OF. hoste, 'an hoste, inn-keeper'; Cot. Cf. Port. hospede, a host, a guest. = L. hospitem, acc. of hospes, (1) a host, entertainer of guests, (2) a guest. β. The base hospit- is commonly taken to be short for hosti-pot-*, where hosti- is the decl. stem of hostis, a stranger, a guest, an enemy; see Host (2). Again, the stem -pot- is supposed to have meant 'lord,' being allied to L. pot-ens, powerful; cf. Skt. pati-, a master, governor, lord; see Possible. γ. Thus hospes = hospitollis*, guest-master, a master of a house who receives guests. Cf. Russ. gospod, the Lord, gospodare, governor, prince; from goste, a guest, and -pote = Skt. pati-, a lord, Brugmann, i. § 240. Der. host-ess, from OF. hostesse, 'an hostesse,' Cot.; also host-el, q. v., host-ler, q. v., hostel, q. v.; and from the same source, hospitall, q. v., hospice, q. v., hospitable, q. v.

HOST (2), an army. (F. - L.) The orig. sense is 'enemy' or 'foreigner.' ME. host, Chaucer, C. T. 1028 (A 1026); frequently spelt ost, Will. of Palerne, l. 1127, 1197, 3679; Cursor Mundi, 6160. = OF. host, 'an host, or army, a troop'; Cot. = L. hostem, acc. of hostis, a stranger, an enemy; hence, a hostile army, host. + Russ. gost, a guest, visitor, stranger, alien; AS. gæst; see Guest. Der. host-ile, Cor. iii. 3. 97, from F. hostile, which from L. hostilis; host-ile-ly; host-ile-ty, K. John, v. 2. 247, from F. hostilité, which from L. acc. hostilitatem. Doublets, gust.

HOST (3), the consecrated bread of the eucharist. (L.) 'In as many hostes as be consecrate;' J. Gardner, Of the Presence in the Sacrament, fol. 35 (R.). And in Holland's Plutarch, p. 1097 (R.). ME. oste, Rob. of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, l. 8849. Coined by dropping the final syllables of L. hostia, a victim in a sacrifice; afterwards applying the host to the host in the eucharist. β. The old form of hostia was fovia (Festus), and it signified 'that which is struck or slain.' = L. hostiis (old form fovis), to strike.

HOSTAGE, a person delivered to the enemy as a pledge for the performance of the conditions of a treaty. (F. - L.) In early use.

ME. hostage, Layamon, 4793, 8905 (later text only). = OF. hostage, 'an hostage, pawne, surety,' Cot.; mod. F. otage. Cf. Ital. ostaggio; OProv. ostage, Bartsch, Chrestomathie Prov. col. 173, l. 18. Perhaps from a Late L. obsiditium*, acc. of obsiditius*, not found, yet preserved also in Ital. statio, a hostage, and regularly formed from Late L. obsidatus, the condition of a hostage, hostage-ship. Obsidatus is formed by analogy with principitus from princip-, stem of princeps from L. obsid-, stem of obses, a hostage, one who remains behind with the enemy. = L. obsidere, to sit, stay, abide, remain. = L. ob, at, on, about; and sedere, to sit, cognate with E. sit. See Sit. ¶ Another explanation is from a Late L. form hospitāticum*, a receiving as a guest; from L. hospit-, for hospes, a host; see Host (1). So Korting. The words may have been confused.

HOSTEL, an inn. (F. - L.) Now commonly hotel, q. v. ME. hostel, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1307; Sir Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 805. = OF. hostel, an inn. Regularly contracted from Late L. hospitāle; see Hospital. Doublets, hotel, hospital, spital, Der. hostel-ry, ME. hostelrie, Chaucer, C. T. 23; hostler, q. v.

HOSTLER, OSTLER, a man who takes care of horses at an inn. (F. - L.) 'Hostler, the horse-groom, but properly the keeper of an hostelry;' Coles, ed. 1684. Orig. the inn-keeper himself, and so named from his hostel. ME. hostler, Chaucer, C. T. 241. = OF. hostelier, 'an inn-keeper'; Cot. = OF. hostel; see Hostel.

HOT, very warm, fiery, ardent. (E.) The vowel was formerly long. ME. hot, hoof, Chaucer, C. T. 687. 'Nether cold, nether hoof;' Wyclif, Rev. iii. 16. AS. hāt, hot; Grein, ii. 15. + Du. keet; Icel. heitr; Swed. het; Dan. høt; G. heiss, Olig. heiz. Teut. type haitoz*. The weak grade hit-* appears in Icel. hit, heat, G. hitze. Cf. also Goth. hais, a torch, heito, fever; Lithuan. kaitra, heat. Der. hot-bed; hot-blooded, Merry Wives, v. 5. 2; hot-headed; hot-house, Meas. ii. 1. 66; hot-ly, hot-spar. Also heat, q. v.

HOTCH-POT, HODGE-PODGE, a farrago, confused mass. (F. - Du.) Hodge-podge is a mere corruption; the old term is hotch-pot. The intermediate form hotch-potch is in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 336. 'A hotchpot, or mingle-mangle;' Minshcu. 'An hotchpotte, incision;' Jevins. 'A hotchpotte of many meates;' Palsgrave. ME. huchepot, Chaucer, Tale of Melibee, C. T. B 2447. = F. huchepot, 'a hotch-pot, or gallimaufrey, a confused mingle-mangle of divers things jumbled or put together;' Cot. Cf. F. koher, 'to shake, wag, jog, nob, nod'; i. e. MDu. hutsopot (Hexham); hutsopot, 'hodge-podge, beef or mutton cut into small pieces;' Sewel. So called from shaking or jumbling pieces of meat in a pot. = MDu. huts-, base of hutsen, to shake, jolt (Oudemans); and Du. pot, a pot. From hutsen was also formed the frequentative verb hutselen, 'to shake up and down, either in a tub, bowl, or basket;' Sewel. The verb hutsen was also spelt hutsen (Sewel), which comes still closer to the French; so also Fries. hutsen, hutsen, to shake up. Cf. WFlam. hutsen, to shake up (De Bo). See Hustle and Pot.

HOTEL, an inn, esp. of a large kind. (F. - L.) A modern word; borrowed from mod. F. hôtel = OF. hostel. See Hostel.

HOTENTOT, a native of the Cape of Good Hope. (Du.) The word is traced in Wedgwood, who shows that the Dutch gave the natives this name in ridicule of their peculiar speech, which sounded to them like stammering. He cites the word from Schouten (1653). En is Dutch for 'and'; hence hot en tot = 'hot' and 'tot'; where these words indicate stammering. Cf. hateren, to stammer, lateraen, a stammerer, in Hexham's Du. Dict., 1647; lateraen to tattle (Sewel); Pomeran. kulentut, a quack (a derivative name). See also Phil. Soc. Trans. 1866, p. 15.

HOUDAH, HOWDAH, a seat to be fixed upon an elephant's back. (Hind. - Arab.) Used in works of travel; and in The Surgeon's Daughter, c. xiv, by Sir W. Scott. = Hind. haudah (Forbes). = Arab. hawdaj, a litter carried by a camel, in which Arabian ladies travel; a seat to place on an elephant's back; Kich. Dict. p. 1694; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 709. (See Yule.)

HOUGH, HOCK, the joint in the hind-leg of a quadruped, between the knee and fetlock, corresponding to the ankle-joint in man; in man, the back part of the knee-joint. (E.) Now generally spelt hock; but formerly hough. 'Unto the camel's hough;' 2 Esdras, xv. 36 (A.V.). Cotgrave translates F. jarret by 'the hamme, or hough.' ME. houch, Wallace, ed. Jamieson, l. 322. The pl. hoses occurs in Sir Gawayn and the Grene Knight, l. 1357. AS. hōh, the heel; Grein, ii. 92. + Icel. hū-, in the comp. hūsin = hock-sinew. Teut. type hankoz*. The E. heel is related; see Heel. β. Hock is a later form; and may have arisen in the comp. 'hough-sinew,' spelt hōsinu in AS., and hōzene, hōzene in OFriesic. (AS. hōz = hōz). See G. hecke (in Kluge); and see Hox. Allied to L. coxa, the hip; Skt. kaksha-s, the arm-pit. Der. hough, verb, to cut the ham-string of a horse, Josh. xi. 6, 2 Sam. viii. 4; often altered to hox, sometimes spelt hoxer; see Shak. Wint. Ta. i. 2. 244; hoxe, Wyclif, Josh. xi. 6 (later version).

HOUND, a dog. (E.) ME. hound, hund; P. Plowman, B. v. 261; Havelok, 1994. AS. hund, Matt. vii. 6; Du. hond; Icel. hundr; Dan. and Swed. hund; G. hund; Goth. hunda. Teut. type hundaz*, m. Further allied to L. can-is, a dog, Gk. κυνος (genitive κυν-ός), Skt. gan, a dog; also Irish cu, Gael. cu, W. ci, a dog; Russ. suka, a bitch; Lith. szė (stem szun-), a dog. Brugmann, l. § 609. The final d may have been suggested by confusion with Teut. henthun-*, to catch. See Hunt. Der. hound, verb, in Otway, Caius Marius, Act iv. sc. 2 (R.); hound-fish, Chaucer, C. T. 9699 (F. 1825); hound's-tongue.

Also in Dr. Johnson's Irene, iv. 5. 10.—F. houei.—Pers. hūrī, a virgin of Paradise; hūrī, hūr, a virgin of Paradise, a black-eyed nymph; so called from their fine black eyes.—Arab. hūr, pl. of Arab. hawrā, fem. of ahwar, having fine black eyes; Rich. Arab. Dict. pp. 585, 33; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 206.—Arab. root hawira, to be black-eyed like a doe. (Devic.)

HOUSE, a dwelling-place; a family. (E.) ME. hous, Chaucer, C. T. 252. AS. hūs, Matt. xii. 25; +Du. hūs; Icel. hús; Dan. hus; Swed. hus; Goth. -hus, in the comp. gud-hus, a house of God; G. Haus, OHG. hūs. Teut. type hūsom*, n. β. Probably allied to Howd and Hide (1). From KEUDH*, to hide. Brugm. l. § 796. Der. house, verb, now 'to provide a house for,' as in Gower, C. A. iii. 18 (bk. vi. 408), but the ME. housen also meant 'to build a house,' as in Rob. of Glouc. p. 21, l. 13 (cf. housyn*, or putton yn a howse, domifero); howsyn*, or makyn howsyt, domifico; Prompt. Parv. p. 251; house-breaker, house-breaking; house-hold, ME. houshold, Chaucer, C. T. 5681 (199), so called because held together in one house; house-holder, ME. housholder, Chaucer, C. Lear, iii. 4. 26; house-maid, house-steward, house-warming, house-wife, spelt howsif, Ancrén Riwle, p. 416, also howsif or howsif, Wyclif, 3 Kings, xvii. 17, and frequently housewife, as in Shak. Cor. i. 3. 76, Romeo, iv. 2. 43; house-wife-ry, or how-wife-ry, Oth. ii. 1. 113, with which cf. howsifery, yconomaia; Prompt. Parv. See also Husband, Hussy, Hustings, Hoard.

HOUSEL, the eucharist or sacrament of the Lord's Supper. (E.) The orig. sense is 'sacrifice.' ME. housel, Rom. of the Rose, 6386; P. Plowman, C. xvii. 394. AS. hūsle (for hūsel*), the eucharist; Gicin, ii. 112; +Goth. hūsle, a sacrifice, Matt. ix. 13. The orig. sense was prob. 'holy rite.' Allied to Lith. szwenta, holy, consecrated; Zend spnān, holy. Brugmann, l. § 377. Der. housel, verb, ME. hoselen, houselen, P. Plowman, C. xvii. 3; unhousel d. Hamlet, i. 5. 76.

HOUSINGS, trappings of a horse. (F.—Arab.) Unconnected with house, but probably often supposed to be related to it; the old form was houss, the addition -ings being English. 'The cattle used for draught . . . are covered with houssings of linnen'; Evelyn, Diary, end of May, 1645. 'A velvet bed of state drawn by six horses, houss'd with the same'; Evelyn, Diary, Oct. 22, 1658. 'Spread on his back, the houss and trappings of a beast'; Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metam. h. xii. 582. 'Housers, the cloth which the king's horseguards wear behind the saddle'; Coles' Dict., ed. 1684. 'A house of a horse'; Cath. Angl. (1483).—OF. houce (Codefroy); F. house, 'a short mantle of course cloth (and all of a piece) worn in ill weather by country women about their head and shoulders; also a footcloth for a horse; also a coverlet'; Cot. Cf. Low L. hūsca, a long tunic; housta, a long tunic, coverlet for a horse, also spelt hūsia, housta. Ducange dates hūsia in A. D. 1326, and hūsia in A. D. 1259, so that the word is of some antiquity. The sense is clearly 'covering.' β. Perhaps from OHG. hulst, a cover (Schade). +Icel. hulstr, AS. heolstor, Goth. hulstir, a cover. From hul-, weak grade of Teut. helan-, to cover, hide; cf. AS. helan, to hide, OHG. and Du. hullen, to cover. γ. But Devic suggests as the origin Arab. hūsika, a covering, veil (McM. de la soc. de ling. de Paris; V. 37). Korting, § 4666. Cf. Arab. ghuskuw(s), a veil, covering; Rich. Dict. p. 1052. ¶ The W. hus, a covering, is borrowed from E. hous.

HOVEL, a small hut. (F.—Teut.) ME. hovell, hovil. 'Hoville, litylle howse, Teges'; Prompt. Parv. p. 250. Hovyl for swyne, or ozer bestes; ibid. Perhaps from an AF. hovuel*; cf. OF. huvel, a penthouse (Codefroy), a double diminutive. Apparently (like OF. huvel, a cap, helmet, from OF. huve, a cap, covering for the head) from AS. hūfe, a hood; cf. OHG. hūba (G. haube), a hood; MDu. huuwe, a tilt of a cart, a coil (Hexham); Norw. huva, Icel. hūfa, a hood. Note prov. L. huvel, huvel, a finger-stall; from AS. hūfe. See Elve.

HOVER, to fluctuate, hang about, move to and fro. (E.) In Macb. i. 1. 12. 'Hover, to stay, wait for. "Will you hover till I come!"' E. D. S. Gloss. B. 22, p. 96. A frequentative, with suffix -er, of ME. housen (= housen), sometimes used in precisely the same sense, and once a common word. 'O night! alas! why nillow [wilt thou not] over us hove?' Chaucer, Troil. iii. 1427; also in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 83 (see the note); 'Where that she hoved and abode'; Gower, C. A. iii. 63; bk. vi. 1848; 'He hovede and abode'; Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 2825; 'He houede' = he waited, Rob. of Glouc. p. 172, l. 12. In the earliest examples, it had the sense of 'hover,' or 'be poised.' In the Bestiary, l. 69, it is said of the eagle that 'he hoved in the sunne,' he soars or is poised in the sunlight. The o in ME. housen was long (N. E. D.). The origin is unknown; but if the orig. idea was that of soaring or being lifted up, it may be related to hōg, the strong grade of AS. hebban, to heave. See Heave. ¶ The W. hōg, to hover, to fluctuate, to suspend, was borrowed from English.

HOW (1), in what way. (E.) ME. how, hou, hu; spelt hu, Ancrén Riwle, p. 182, l. 20; also how, id., p. 256, l. 10; also how, P. Plowman's Crede, l. 141. AS. hū; Grein, ii. 110. 4. OFries. hū, hū, how; Du. hoe; Goth. hwauna. β. The Goth. form shows that the word is closely related to the pronoun who, which is Goth. hwas, AS. hwa. Cf. Gk. hōs, how; and G. wie. See Who, Why. Der. how-be-it, Hen. V. i. 2. 91, Cor. i. 9. 70; how-ever, K. John, i. 173; how-so-ever, Hamlet, i. 5. 84.

HOW (2), a hill. (Scand.) Chiefly in place-names; as Silver How, near Grasmere. ME. how; Hampole's Psalter mentions 'houys . . . and hilles'; Ps. lxxi. 3.—Icel. haugr, a how, mound; Swed. hog, a heap, pile, mound; Dan. høj, a hill. Allied to E. high, Goth. hauks. Cf. Icel. hár, Swed. hög, Dan. høj, high; also Lithuan. kauskas, a hill. See High.

HOWDAH, the same as Houdah, q. v.

HOWITZER, a short light cannon. (G.—Bohemian.) Sometimes spelt howitz; a mod. word, in Todd's Johnson. Borrowed from G. haubitze, a howitzer; a word formerly spelt haufnitz, a Bohemian haufnice, orig. a sling for casting a stone; Jungmann, Bohem. Dict. i. 662. The F. obus, a bomb-shell, is from the same G. word.

HOWL, to yell, cry out. (E.) ME. houlen, Chaucer, C. T. 2819 (A. 2817); Gower, C. A. ii. 265. An imitative word; and prob. native; cf. MDu. huylen, to howl; Dan. hyle; Icel. hla; Swed. ylas; G. heulen. Similar forms are L. ululäre, to shriek, howl (whence OF. kuller); Gk. ὠάω, I bark (said of a dog), I howl or cry out (said of a man); ὠάω, a cry. ¶ As Schell remarks, the h in OF. kuller was due to German influence. Der. howl, sb.; cf. hurler, hurl, q. v. And see Owl.

HOX, to hamstring. (E.) ME. hoxe, Wyclif, Josh. xi. 6. To cut the hox or hamstring; this sb. occurs in Wyclif, 2 Sam. vii. 4; and is short for hoxen, husen, or hockshin, lit. 'hock-sinew.' AS. höksinn.—AS. höh, heel, also hock, hough; and sinn, a sinew. See Hough and Sinew.

HOY (1), a kind of sloop. (Du.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 64. 'Equypp't a hoye, and set her under sayle'; Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 136. 'An hoye of Dordrecht'; Faston Letters, iii. 388.—MDu. hoer (Verwijs), variant of MDu. heu, hande, 'a boat or a ship' (Hexham); a kind of flat-bottomed merchantman, a hoy; whence also MF. heü, explained by Cotgrave to mean 'a Dutch hoy.' Of uncertain origin.

HOY (2), interj. stop! (E.) A nautical term. 'When one ship hails another, the words are, What ship, hoy? that is, stop, and tell the name of your ship'; Pegge, Anecdotes of the English Language, p. 16 (Todd). Also an exclamation, sometimes of joy; ME. hoy, P. Plowman, C. ix. 123. Cf. Du. hui, hoy! come! well! Dan. hui, hallo! See Ho. Der. a-hoy, q. v.

HOYDEN, the same as Holden, q. v.

HUB, the projecting nave of a wheel; a mark at which quoits are cast; &c. (E.) The orig. sense is 'projection.' Hubs, naves of wheels; Marshall's Leicestershire and Warwickshire Words, ed. 1790 (E. D. S.). Also (in many dialects), the back of a grate, or the side-ledge of it; see N. E. D. The same word as hub; see Hob (1).

HUBBUB, a confused noise. (C.) Another spelling is whoobub, Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 629; Two Noble Kinsmen, ed. Skeat, ii. 5. 35. Spenser has 'shrieking hubbubs'; F. Q. iii. 10. 43; also 'a terrible yell and hubbub'; View of State of Ireland, p. 632 (Globe ed.). An imitative word; and perhaps suggested by Gael. ub interj. of aversion; Irish abu! a warcry. Hubbub was confused with E. hoop-hoop, and whoobub with E. whoop-hoop. See Hoop (2).

HUCKABACK, a sort of linen cloth. (Low G.) 'Hucknack, a sort of linen cloth that is woven so as to lie partly raised; 'Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731. First in 1690 (N. E. D.). The word bears so remarkable a resemblance to Low G. hukkebakk, G. huckback, pick-a-back, that it seems reasonable to suppose that it at first meant 'peddler's ware'; see Huckster. Cf. Pomeran. enen kukbak drigen, to carry one pick-a-back; Low G. hokbaken, to carry on the back (Lilbén). Weigand (i. 828) explains G. Huckepack as (1) a humped back for carrying a thing; (2) a burden borne on the back.

HUCKLE-BERRY, a berry of the Gaylussacia, a low berry-bearing shrub, common in N. America. (E.) In Hawthorne, Twicetold Tales, ed. 1851; i. xvi. 249: 'a lot of huckleberries.' The same as whortleberry, formerly hurtleberry. Spelt hurtleberries; Rabces Book, p. 123, l. 82. See Whortleberry.

HUCKLE-BONE, the hip-bone. (F.) 'The hip . . . wherein the joint doth move The thigh, 'tis called the huckle-bone;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, v. 297. 'Ache in the huckle-bones;' Sir T. Flyot, Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 6. Huckle is the dimin. of prov. Eng. huck, which is a mere variant of hock; thus huck-le = hock-le. See F. D. D. And see Hough. Dunbar has huckelans, hip-bones or hock-bones; Flying with Kennedie, 181. ¶ In dialects, the hock, orig. the heel, is confused with the ham and the hip.

HUCKSTER, a peddler, hawk, retailer of small articles. (O. Low G.) Properly a feminine form, the corresponding masc. form being hawker, as now spelt, though huckster answers better to hucker. We have the expression 'she hath holden huckery,' i. e. followed a huckster's trade; P. Plowman, B. v. 227. But the A.S. distinction in gender between the terminations -er and -ster was lost at an early period, so that the word was readily applied to men. 'Huckstare, huckstere, auxonator, auxoniatior, auxonarius. Huckstare of frute, colibista.' Prompt. Parv. p. 252. Huckstere, as a gloss to institor; Wright's Vocab. i. 123. 'For þatt tæc turnendenn Goddus his intill hucksterness boje' = for that they turned God's house into a huckster's booth; Ormulum, 15816, 7. β. An O. Low G. word, but it does not appear in A.S. The related words are Du. hucker, a retailer, hucken, to retail; also 'huckeren, to sell by retail; to huckster; huckelaar, a huckster, retailer;' Sewall's Du. Dict. Also Swed. hökare, a cheesemonger (Widgren); Dan. hökere, a chandler, huckster, hökere, the huckster's trade; hökerske, a 'huxteress' (this form is the Dan. equivalent of E. huckster); hökere, to huckster. γ. The word was imported, about A.D. 1200, probably from the Netherlands; the termination -ster being Dutch as well as English, as shown by Du. spin-ster, a spinster, &c. δ. The etymology is much disputed; but it is well illustrated by Hexham's MDu. Dict., which gives us hucken, to stoop or bow; een hucker, a stooper, bower, or bender; onder eenen swaeren last hucken, to bow under a heavy burden; een hucker, a huckster, or a mercer. Compare also the Icelandic hokra, to go bent, to crouch, creep, slink about, on which it is noted that 'in modern usage hokra means to live as a small farmer, whence hokr, in bü-hokr, small farming.' Vigfusson. Nothing could be more fitting than to describe the peddler of olden times as a croucher, creeper, or slinker about; his bent back being due to the bundle upon it. (See Sir W. Scott's description of Bryce Snailfoot in The Pirate.) ε. Cf. also MDu. huyken, hukén, Du. hukén, to stoop down, crouch (Oudemans); Icel. huka, to sit on one's hams, with its deriv. hokra; Low G. hukén, to crouch (Brem. Wört.); hoker, a huckster (Lilbén). So also G. hucke is properly the bent back, whence G. huckback, pick-a-back; G. hocken is to squat, also to carry on the back, and G. hücker means (1) a hump on the back, and (2) a huckster. See Hawker.

HUDDLE, to throw together confusedly, to crowd together. (F.) Used in late authors in the sense of performing a thing hastily; see examples in Todd; but it simply meant, originally, to hide in a heap, hence to crowd up, or to crowd; see Merch. of Ven. iv. 1. 28; Much Ado, ii. 1. 252. 'To huddle up together;' Minshew. Not found in early writers; but the equivalent form to huddle (the suffixes -er, -le being similarly used to express a frequentative) is represented by ME. hodren - hoderen (with one d). 'For scattered erthi Scottis, and hodred in per bottles' = for thy Scots are scattered, and huddled (dispersed) in their hills; Rob. Manning, tr. of Langtoft, ed. Ierne, p. 273. β. But again, this ME. hoderen also had the sense of 'cover'; as in 'hodur and happe' - cover and wrap up; Le Bone Florence, 112, in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. iii; and the true notion of huddle or hudder was to crowd together for protection or in a place of shelter, a notion still preserved when we talk of cattle being huddled together in rain. So also Low G. hudern, to huddle oneself up (Schambach), Kuthessen hultern, to cover up warm. γ. From Teut. base hud-*, weak grade allied to ME. huden, to hide, Ancrer Riwle, p. 174, more frequently written hiden, whence mod. E. hide; see Hide (1). Thus to huddle is to hide closely, to crowd together for protection, to crowd into a place of shelter. Cf. also the ME. sb. huddels (= A.S. hydels), a hiding-place; Ancrer Riwle, p. 146; Wyclif, Deut. xxvii. 15. δ. The notion of doing things hastily may have been due to the influence of Du. hoestelen, 'to do a thing unskillfully'; Hexham. This is allied to G. huelten, to bungle, of which the Alsatian form is huelten; cf. Swed. hulta, Dan. hulte, to bungle.

HUE (1), show, appearance, colour, tint. (E.) ME. hewe, often a dissyllabic word; Chaucer, C. T. 396 (A 594); but properly monosyllabic, and spelt heu, Havelok, 2918. AS. hiw, hiow, appearance, Grein, ii. 78. - Swed. hy, skin, complexion; Goth. hiwi, form, show, appearance, 2 Tim. iii. 5. Teut. type hiwjon*, n. Cf. Skt. chhavi, skin, complexion, beauty. Der. hue-d, ME. hewed, Chaucer, C. T. 11557 (F 1245); hue-less.

HUE (2), clamour, outcry. (F. - Teut.) Only in the phr. hue and cry, Merry Wives, iv. 5. 92; 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 556. See Hue and cry in Blount's Nomolexicon; he notes that 'hue is used alone, anno 4 Edw. I. stat. 2. In ancient records this is called hutesium et clamor;' for the latter phrase he cites a passage from the Close Rolls, 30 Hen. III. m. 5. ME. hue, a loud cry; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 872 (or 873). - OF. hue, a cry (Godefroy); huier, 'to hoot, . . . make hue and cry;' Cot. Cotgrave also gives hue, 'a shouting, . . . outcry, or hue and cry.' Of Teut. origin. - MllG. hū, interj.; hūzen, to hoot; MSwed. huta, to hoot; see Hoot.

HUFF, to puff, bluster, bully. (E.) 'A huff, a huffing or swaggering fellow. Huff, to puff or blow, to rant or vapour;' Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. 'And still you huff it;' Ben Jonson, Every Man, i. 2. 35. Hence huffer, a braggart; 'By such a bragadocio huffer;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 1034. The old sense was 'to blow' or 'puff up.' 'When as the said winde within the earth, able to huff up the ground, was not powerful enough to breake forth and make issue;' Holland's Pliny, b. ii. c. 85. β. Of imitative origin; we find huf, puf, and huf, puf in Reliq. Antiq. i. 240, to represent forcible blowing; cf. puff. Cf. Lowl. Sc. hauch, a forcible puff; hech, to breathe hard. See Puff, Whiff. Dor. huff, at draughts, simply means 'to blow'; it seems to have been customary to blow upon the piece removed; Jamieson gives 'blaw, to blow, also, to huff at draughts; 1 blaw, or blow you, 1 take (i. e. huff) this man.' (So also in Danish; blæse en brikke, to huff (lit. blow) a man at draughts.) Also huffer, in Hudibras, as above; huff-ish, huff-ish-ly, huff-ish-ness, huffy, huff-in-ness.

HUG, to embrace closely. (Scand.?) In Shak. Merch. of Ven. ii. 6. 16; Rich. III, i. 4. 252; &c. (Quite distinct from hug, to shrink, shudder; Palgrave has: '1 hugge, I shrink me in my bed. It is a good sporte to se this lytle boye hugge in his bedde for cold.') β. Of uncertain origin. Perhaps (but with a change of sense) from Icel. hugga, to soothe, to comfort; hugga barnið, to soothe a child; allied to huga, to mind; hugna, to please; cf. Swed. hugna, to delight, gratify; Dan. hue, to like. Kalkar has MDan. hugge, to console, to encourage. This is not far from the sense of hug, in Comus. 164: 'and hug him into snares,' i. e. entice, lure.

HUGE, very great, vast. (F.) ME. hugge, Chaucer, C. T. 2953 (A 2951); P. Plowman, B. xi. 242; Will. of Palerne, 2569. Oddly spelt hogge; 'an hogge geant;' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 31, l. 17. The etymology is much disguised by the loss of an initial a, mistaken for the E. indef. article; the right word is ahuge. (The same loss occurs in ME. arow, now always vow, though this is not quite a parallel case, since vow has a sense of its own.) - OF. ahuge, huge, vast; a 12th-century word. In the account of Goliath, in Les Livres des Rois, we find: 'E le fer de la lance sis ceuz, e la hanste fud grosse e ahuge cume le suble as teissures' = and the iron of his lance weighed six hundred (shekels), and the shaft (of it) was great and huge as a weaver's beam; Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, c. 45, l. 36. Also ahoge, ahoge (Godefroy). β. Of unknown origin; but perhaps connected with OHG. irhohen (E. erhoken), to exalt; and the OHG. hoh, Icel. hár, AS. hāh, high. Cf. Norw. hauga, to heap up; Icel. haugr, a hill, whence OF. hoge, hogue, a hill; Norm. dial. hugen, arrogant (Moisy). See How (2). Der. hugely; hugeness, Cymb. i. 4. 157.

HUGGER-MUGGER, secrecy. (E. and Scand.) In Hamlet, iv. 5. 84, in phr. in hugger-mugger. A reduplicated form; orig. hucker-mucker, as in More, Dialogue, ii. 52 b, iv. 121 b (N. E. D.). The F. prefix hucker is unmeaning, but rises to mucker, from ME. mukren, mokeren, to heap up, hoard, conceal, from Norw. mukka, a heap. See Muck.

HUGUENOT, a French protestant. (F. - G.) 'Huguenots, Calvinists, Reformists, French Protestants;' Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674. And in Minshew. - F. huguenot, s. pl. 'Huguenots, Calvinists, Reformists;' Col. As if from some person of the name of Huguenot. This name was in use as a Christian name two centuries before the time of the Reformation. 'Le 7 octobre, 1387, Pâcal Huguenot de Saint Julien en Limousin, docteur en decret;' Hist. Litt. de la France, t. xxiv. p. 307 (Litté). Huguenot is a dimin. of Hugues, Hugh. - MllG. Hūg, Ilugh. β. But this form was due to popular etymology; and was perverted from G. eidgenoss, a confederate, or from the equivalent Low G. form edgenoot (MDu. edgenoot in Hexham). Wedgwood cites the Swiss Romance forms ingenoot, higenoot, a protestant, also from G. Cf. Körtling, § 3215.

HULK, a heavy ship. (Late L.—Gk.) Sometimes applied to the body of a ship, by confusion with hull; but it is quite a different word, meaning a heavy ship of clumsy make; Shak. Troil. ii. 3. 277. The hulks were old ships used as prisons. ME. hulke. 'Hulke, shypp, hulcus,' Prompt. Parv. p. 252. 'Hulke, a shypp, heurque; Palgrave. 'Orque, a huk or huge ship;' Cot. Late AS. hulc; 'Liburna, huk'; Voc. 181. 28. —Late L. hulka, a heavy merchant-ship, a word used by Walsingham; see quotation in Way's note to Prompt. Parv.; also spelt hulcus, as quoted above. Also spelt (more correctly) holcus; Ducange.—Gk. ὄλκω, a ship which is towed, a ship of burden, merchantman.—Gk. ὄλκω, to draw, drag; whence also ὄλκω, a dragging, ὄλκω, a furrow, a machine for dragging ships on land; from the base olk-*. Allied to L. olcus, a furrow; AS. ulh, a plough. Brugmann, i. § 645. Der. hulk-ing, hulk-y, i.e. bulky or unwieldy. ☞ Not the same word as ME. hulke, a hovel, Wyclif. Isaiah, i. 8; which is from AS. hulc, a hut; Wright's Vocab. i. 58.

HULL (1), the husk or outer shell of grain or of nuts. (E.) ME. hule, hole, hool. 'Houle, hole, holl, or huske, Siliqua;' Prompt. Parv. p. 242. 'Hull of a beane or pesc, escosse. Hull or barcke of a tree, escorce;' Palgrave; and see Way's note in Prompt. Parv. Peese hole (or peese hule) = pea-shell; P. Plowman, B. vii. 194, in two MSS.; see the footnote. AS. hul, a husk; see index to Napier's glosses. Allied to G. hülse, a husk. From Teut. hul-, weak grade of helen-, to hide, to cover, as in AS. helan. Lit. 'covering.' See Hall. Allied words are OSaxon bihullan, to cover, Icelandic, 1406 (Cotton MS.); Du. hullen, to put a cap on, mask, disguise; Goth. hulan, to hide, cover; G. ver-hüllen, to wrap up; Icel. hylja, to hide, cover; Swed. hulja, to cover, veil; Dan. hülle, to wrap. Der. see housings.

HULL (2), the body of a ship. (F.) Not in very early use. First in 1571. 'She never saw above one voyage, Luce, And, credit me, after another, her hull will serve again;' Beaumont and Fletcher. Wit Without Money, i. 2. 17. The hull is, literally, the 'shell' of the ship, being the same word with the above; see Hull (1). β. But it is probable that its use with respect to a ship was due to some confusion with ME. hull, Du. hol, the hold of a ship; see Hold (2). Cf. 'Houle (hulle) of a shypp, Carina;' Prompt. Parv. Der. hull, verb, to float about, as a ship does when the sails are taken down, Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 217; Rich. III. iv. 4. 438; Hen. VIII. ii. 4. 109. So in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674, we find: 'Hull, the body of a ship, without rigging. Hulling is when a ship at sea takes in all her sails in a calm.'

HUM (1), to make a low buzzing or droning sound. (E.) ME. hummen; Chaucer, Troilus, ii. 1199; Palladius on Husbandry, ed. Lodge, vii. 124. Of imitative origin.—G. hummen, to hum. Cf. also Du. hummen, to hum; the frequentative form; and Hem (2). Also MSwed. hum, a rumour (Jhre). Der. hum (2), q. v.; hum-bug, q. v.; hum-drum, q. v.; humble-bee, q. v.; also humming-bird, Pope's Dunciad, iv. 446, and in Evelyn's Diary, July 11, 1654; called a hum-bird. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vi. c. 8. § 10.

HUM (2), to trick, to cajole. (E.) A particular use of the word above. In Shak. hum not only means to utter a low sound, as in Temp. ii. 1. 317, but also to utter a sound expressive of indignation, as in 'turns me his back And hums,' Mach. iii. 6. 42; 'to bite his lip and hum At good Cominius,' Cor. v. 1. 49. See Richardson and Todd, where it further appears that applause was formerly expressed by humming, and that to hum was to applaud; from applause to flattery, and then to cajolery, is not a long step. See the passage in Ben Jonson, The Alchemist, Act i. sc. 1, where Subtle directs his dupe to 'cry hum Thrice, and then buzz as often,' showing that the word was used in a jesting sense. β. Wedgwood well points out a similar usage in Port. zumbir, to buzz, to hum, zombar, to joke, to jest; to which add Span. zumbiar, to hum, resound, joke, jest, make one's self merry, zumbon, waggish. Der. hum, sb. a hoax (Todd); hum-bug, q. v. Cf. humk! interj., Beaum. and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, i. 2.

HUMAN, pertaining to mankind. (F.—L.) Formerly humaine, but now conforming to the L. spelling. 'All humaine thought,' Spenser, F. Q. vi. 3. 51. 'I murthere not of the inhumanities that the human people committeth;' Golden Booke, lilt. 11, § 2.—MF. humain, 'gentle, . . . humane, manly;' Cot.—L. hūmānus, human; perhaps for hūmānus* (Iréal); allied to L. hom-o, a man. See Homage. Der. human-ly, human-ise, human-is-at-ion, human-ist, human-kind; also human-ity, ME. humaneitee, Chaucer, C. T. 7968 (E. 92), from OF. humaneit, which is from L. acc. hūmānitatem, nom. hūmānitas; hence humanit-ar-i-an. And see Humane. ☞ The accent distinguishes human, of French origin, from humane, taken directly from Latin.

HUMANE, gentle, kind. (L.) In Shak., humane (so spelt) does duty both for human and humane, the accent being always on the former syllable; see Schmidt, Shak. Lexicon. Hence it has the sense of 'kind'; Temp. i. 2. 346. We have now differentiated the words, keeping the accent on the latter syllable in humane, to make it more like the L. hūmānus. We may therefore consider this as the L. form. Both L. hūmānus and F. humain have the double sense (1) human, and (2) kind. See Human. Der. humane-ly, humane-ness.

HUMBLE, lowly, meek, modest. (F.—L.) ME. humble, Chaucer, C. T. 8700 (E 824). Spelt umble in O. Kentish Sermons, in An O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 30.—OF. (and F.) humble, 'humble;' Cot. (With excrement b).—L. humilis, acc. of humilis, humble; lit. near the ground.—L. humus, the ground, humus, on the ground; Cf. Gk. χαμα, on the ground; Russ. zemlia, earth, land. Brugmann, i. § 604. Der. humbl-y, humble-ness, formerly humblisse, Chaucer, C. T. 1783 (A 1781). Also, from l. humilis, humili-ty, q. v., humili-ate, q. v. Also, from L. humus, ex-hume, q. v. And see Chameleon.

HUMBLE-BEE, a humming bee. (E.) To humble is to hum; or more literally, to hum often, as it is the frequentative form, standing for humu-le; the b being excrement. 'To humble like a bee;' Minshew. ME. humblen, for hummeten. 'Or elles lyk the last humblings after the clappe of a thundringe;' Chaucer, H. o. of Fame, 1039. Hence humbl-bee or humbl-ee; Reliquie Antiquæ, ed. Wright and Halliwell, i. 81. 'Ilic tabanus, a humbl-ee;' Wright's Vocab. i. 255 (Voc. 767. 20).—Du. hummen, to hum, a frequentative form; hummel, a humble-bee, a drone, G. hummel, a humble-bee; hummen, to hum; Swed. humla, a humble-bee. See Hum (1).

HUMBLE-PIE; see under Umbles.

HUMBUG, a hoax, a piece of trickery, an imposition under fair pretences. (E.) 'Humbug, a false alarm, a bugbear;' Dean Milles MS. (written about 1760), cited in Halliwell. The word occurs in a long passage in The Student, vol. ii. p. 47, ed. 1751, cited in Todd. An alleged earlier trace of the word is on the title-page of an old jest-book, viz. 'The Universal Jester, or a pocket companion for the wits; being a choice collection of merry conceits, drolleries, . . . bon-mots, and humbugs;' by Ferdinand Killigrew, London, said to be about 1735-40; but it is no older than 1754 (N. E. D.). See the Slang Dictionary, which contains a good article on this word. It is probably a compound of hum, to cajole, to hoax, and the old word bug, a spectre, bugbear, ghost; the orig. sense being 'sham bugbear' or 'false alarm,' as given by Dean Milles. [The N. E. D. makes hum, v., to cajole, a shortened form of humbug, but it is of the same date at least; and see Hum (1).] See Hum (2) and Bug. Der. humbug, verb, as in 'humbugged, egad!' Smollett, Peregrine Pickle, ch. 85 (1751); humbug, sb., improperly used for humbugger.

HUMDRUM, dull, droning. (E.) Used as an adv., with the sense of 'idly' or 'listlessly' in Butler. 'Shall we, quoth she, stand still hum-drum?' Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3. l. 112. But it is properly an adj., signifying monotonous, droning, tedious, as in 'an old humdrum fellow;' Addison, Whig Examiner (1710), No. 3 (Todd); and is thus found as early as 1553. The sb. humdrum, a dull fellow, is in Ben Jonson, Every Man, i. 1. Merely formed, as a reduplicated word, from hum, a humming noise, and drum, a droning sound, made to rhyme with hum. See Hum (1).

HUMERAL, belonging to the shoulder. (L.) 'Humeral muscle, the muscle that moves the arm at the upper end;' Kersey, ed. 1715.—Late L. humeralis, belonging to the shoulder; cf. l. humérale, a cape for the shoulders.—l. humerus, better umerus, the shoulder. +Gk. ὤμος, the shoulder; Goth. ansa, the shoulder; Skt. amśa-s, the shoulder. Brugmann, i. § 163.

HUMID, moist. (F.—L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 151; and in Cotgrave.—F. humide, 'humid, moist;' Cot.—L. humidus, better umidus, moist.—L. hūmīre, better umīre, to be moist; allied to uēns, moist, uēdus, uēus, moist.—Gk. ὕγρ-ος, moist; Icel. vokr, moist. Brugmann, i. § 658. 667. Der. humid-ness, humid-ity, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 43; and see Humour.

HUMILIATE, to make humble. (L.) A late word, really suggested by the sb. humiliation, used in Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale (l. 480). The verb is formed from l. humiliāre, pp. of humiliāre, to humble.—L. humilis, decl. stem of humilis, humble. See Humble. Der. humiliat-ion (formed by analogy with other words in -ation) from l. acc. humiliātiōnem, nom. humiliatio.

HUMILITY, humbleness, meekness. (F.—L.) ME. humilitee, Chaucer, C. T. 13405 (B 1665).—OF. humiliteit, later humilité.—L. acc. humiliātem from nom. humiliās, humility.—L. humilis, decl. stem of humilis, humble. See Humble.

HUMOUR, moisture, temperament, disposition of mind, caprice. (F.—L.) See Trench, Select Glossary, and Study of Words. 'Ile knew the cause of every malady, And wher engendred, and of what humour; Chaucer, C. T. 423 (A 431). [The four humours, according to Galen, caused the four temperaments of mind, viz. choleric, melancholy, phlegmatic, and sanguine.]—OF. humor (Littre), later humour, 'humour, moisture'; Cot. = L. humorem, acc. of humor, better umor, moisture. —L. humere, better umere, to be moist. See Humid. Der. humour, verb; humor-ous, humor-ous-ly, humor-ous-ness, humor-less, humor-ist; from the same source, humectant, moistening (rare).

HUMMOCK, HOMMOCK, a mound, hillock, mass. (E.) 'Common among our voyagers, Rich.; who refers to Anson, Voyage round the World, b. ii. c. 9; Cook, Second Voyage, b. iii. c. 4. 'Round hoommocks or hillocks;' R. Eden, ed. Arber, p. 381 (1555). It appears to be related to hump and hunch. Cf. Effries. hummel, variant of humpel, humpel, a hillock; Du. komp, a hump, hunch; 'een komp kaas, a lurch [i.e. hunch] of cheese;' Sewel. 'Hompelig, rugged, craggy;' id. So too Low G. kumpel, a little heap or mound; Bremen Wörterb. ii. 669. Hummock is formed with dimin. -ock, as in hill-ock; whilst the Effries. hummel is formed with the dimin. -el. See Hump, Hunch.

HUMP, a lump, bunch, esp. on the back. (E.) 'Hump, a hunch, or lump, Westmoreland;' Halliwell. Of O. Low G. origin, and may be claimed as E., though not in early use. 'Only a natural hump' [on his back]; Addison, Spectator, no. 558. 'The poor hump-backed gentleman;' id. no. 559. + Du. komp, a hump, lump; cf. Low G. kumpel, a small heap, Bremen Wörterbuch, ii. 669; Dan. kumpel, a hummock; Norw. kump, a knoll, a hillock; Swed. dial. kump, a clot or piece of earth, &c.; Low G. kumpe, kumpe, a hunch of bread (Berghaus). Cf. also Skt. kulja-s, hump-backed. Der. kump-backed; kummi-ock, q.v.; kunch, q.v.

HUNCH, a hump, lump, a round or ill-shaped mass. (E.) A variant of hump. Hunch-backed occurs in the later quarto ed. of Shakspeare, Rich. III. iv. 4. 8; (Schmidt). 'They crooked mind within hunch'd out thy back;' Dryden, qn. in Todd (no reference); it occurs in Cædipus, l. 6, by Dryden and Lee (N. E. D.). A palatalised form of prov. L. hunk, a lump; which agrees with Wflem. kunke, as in kunke brood, a hunch of bread (De Vo). And see Frauck, s.v. hunk. Der. kunch, vb., kunch-backed.

HUNDRED, ten times ten. (E.) ME. hundred, Chaucer, C. T. 2155 (A 2153); also hundreth, Frickie of Conscience, 4524. AS. hundred, Grein, ii. 111. A compound word. = AS. hund, a hundred, Grein, ii. 111; and -red, with the sense of 'reckoning' or rate, to denote the rate of counting; cf. Icel. hund-ræð, which orig. meant 100; and G. hundert. This suffix is allied to Goth. rahtjo, number (L. ratio); cf. Goth. garahjan, to reckon, number, Matt. x. 30; and see Bate (v). Thus the word grew up by the unnecessary addition of -red (denoting the rate of counting) to the old word hund, used by itself in earlier times. β. Dismissing the suffix, we have the cognate OHG. hundert (also once used alone), Goth. hund; cf. also W. cant, Gæll. ciad, Irish cead, L. centum, Gk. ἑκατόν, Lith. szimtas, Russ. sto, Pers. sad, Skt. satam, all meaning a hundred. γ. All from an Idg. type h₂ontm̥* (prob. a doctored form of deh₂ontm̥*), a decad; and allied to Goth. taihund-hund, a hundred, which Brugmann explains as deh₂ontm̥ deh₂as (a decad of decads). See Brugmann, i. § 431, ii. § 179. And see Ten. ¶ The ME. hundreth is a Scand. form; from the Icel. hundræð. Der. hundred-th, hundred-fold, hundred-weight, often written cut, where c = L. centum, and wt = Eng. weight.

HUNGER, desire of food. (E.) ME. hungre, Chaucer, C. T. 14738 (B 3618). AS. hungor, Grein, ii. 111. + Icel. hungr; Swed. and Dan. hungor; Du. honger; G. hunger; Goth. hākrus, hunger; whence huggrjan (= hungerire), to hunger. Teut. types hungerus*, hunkruz*, m. Allied to Lith. kanka, suffering. Brugm. i. § 639. Der. hunger, verb = AS. hungran (with vowel-change of u to y); hungry = AS. hungrig (Grein); hungri-ly; hunger-hitten, Job, xviii. 12.

HUNT, to chase wild animals. (E.) ME. hunte, honten, Chaucer, C. T. 1640. AS. huntian; see Ælfric's Colloquy, in Voc. p. 92. Properly 'to capture'; a secondary verb related to hentan, to seize, also a weak verb; Grein, ii. 34. β. We also find Goth. hunts, captivity, Eph. iv. 8; formed from the weak grade (hunts) of the verb hentan (pt. t. hants), to seize, capture, only used in the comp. fra-hintan, with pp. fra-hintans, a captive, Luke, iv. 19. It would hence appear that hunt is a variant of hant, though the variation is not easy to explain. 'On an apparent pre-Teutonic change of nt to nd in these and some other words, see Prof. Napier in Mod. Quart. Lang. & Lit., July, 1898, p. 130; cf. Brugmann, i. § 701.—N. E. D. Der. hunt, sb.; hunt-er, Chaucer, C. T. 1638, later form of AS. hunta, a hunter, in Ælfric's Colloquy; hunt-er-ess, with F. suffix -ess, As You Like It, iii. 2. 4; hunt-ing, sb., hunt-ing-bow, hunt-ing-seat; hunt-s-man (= hunt's man), Mid. Nt. Dr. iv. 1. 143; hunts-man-ship; hunts-up (= the hunt is up, i.e. beginning), Rom. iii. 5. 34, replaced by the hunt is up, Tit. Andronic. ii. 2. 1.

HURDLE, a frame of twigs interlaced or twisted together, a frame of wooden bars. (E.) ME. hurdel; pl. hurdeles, K. Alisaundre, 6104. AS. hyrdel; (cleta, cratis, hyrdel); 'crates, i.e. flecia, hyrdel;' Wright's Vocab. i. 26. col. 2, 34. col. 1 (Voc. 126. 16; 140. 23). Also OMcE. hyrdil, Voc. 16. 7. A dimin. from a Teut. base hurd-*; see the cognate words. + Du. horde, a hurdle; Icel. hurð; G. Hürde, MHG. huri; Goth. haurda, a door, i.e. one made of wicker-work, Matt. vi. 6. Further allied to L. crātis, a hurdle, Gk. αράπλος, a (woven) basket, from αρά + κρά, to weave; whence also Skt. hṛt, to spin, krāt, to connect together. Cf. also Skt. kata-s, a mat. Brugmann, §§ 529, 633; also Stokes-Fick, p. 80, where we find Irish cérille, glossed by L. 'glomus.' Der. hurdle, verb, pp. hurded, Milton, P. l. iv. 186. Doublet, crate, q.v.

HURDY-GURDY, a kind of violin, but played by turning a wheel. (E.) 'Hum! plays, I see, upon the hurdy-gurdy;' O'Hara's play of Midas, Act I (1764). Suggested by Lowl. Sc. hurdy-gurdy, a confused noise; cf. also hurdum-durdum, with the same sense. Note also: 'Som vesp̄ strange wiafferynge, chibryng, harynges and garrynges, i.e. some people use a strange chattering, clattering, snarling and growling; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, li. 159. Cf. Lowland Sc. hur, to snarl; gurr, to snarl, growl, purr; Jamieson. 'R is the dog's letter, and *hur*eth in the sound;' Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar. The word seems to have been fashioned on the model of hurdy-burdy.

HURL, to throw rapidly and forcibly, to push forcibly, drive. (Scand.) 'And hurlest [Tyrrhitt has hurtil] al from est till occident' = and whirled all from east to west; Chaucer, C. T. Group B, 297 = l. 4717. 'Into which the flood was hurled;' Wyclif, Luke, vi. 49, in six MSS.; but seventeen MSS. have hurtil. So again, in Luke, vi. 48, most MSS. have hurtil, but eight have hurid. In the Ancræn Riwle, p. 166, we find 'mid a lute hurunge' = with a slight collision; where another reading is hurilunge. β. It is plain that hurl was often confused with hurle, both being used in the sense of to push violently, jostle, strike with a forcible collision. For those who wish to make the comparison, further references are: (1) for hurle: Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 21; Poems and Lives of Saints, ed. Furnivall, xxiii. 28; Will. of Palerne, 1243; Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 140; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, II. 44, 25, 276, 413, 874, 1204, 1211; Destruction of Troy, 126; Robt. of Glouc. p. 48; l. 9974; Fabyan's Chron., an. 1380-1 (R); Spenser, F. Q. i. 5. 2, &c.; (2) for hurtil: Wyclif, Jerem. xlviii. 12; Prompt. Parv. p. 250; Will. of Palerne, 5013; Frickie of Conscience, 1787; Chaucer, Legend of Good Women; Cleopatra, 59; &c. β. Nevertheless, they seem to have no etymological connexion. Hurl is not found in AS., nor earlier than 1225; so that it is prol. of Scand. origin. Explained by Swed. dial. hurra, to whirl, to whirl round; whence hurrel, a whirl, hurrel-sound, a whirlwind. So also Dan. hurra, to buzz; whence hurle, to whirl (Larsen); Norw. hurra, to whirl, hum; hurle, to buzz; cf. Icel. hurra, a noise. And cf. Effries. hurrel, a gust of wind; hurrale, to blow in gusts; hurral-wind, a whirlwind. We likewise find E. hurleblast, a hurricane, hurlepool, a whirlpool; hurlewind, a whirlwind. See Hurry. And compare Whirl, of which hurl is perhaps a 'weak-grade' form. Der. hurle-er.

HURLY-BURLY, a tumult. (F. and E.) In Mach. i. 1. 3; as adj., 1 Hen. IV. v. 1. 78. Spelt hurly-burly, in Bale's Kynges Johan, p. 63 (before 1560). A duplicated word, the second syllable being an echo of the first, to give more fulness. 'The simple form hurly is the original; see K. John, iii. 4. 169; 2 Hen. IV. iii. 1. 25. — OF. hurlee, a howling, great noise, orig. fem. pp. of hurle, to howl, to yell;' Cot. Cf. Ital. urlare, to howl, yell. Both these forms are corrupt, and contain ad. inserted r. The OF. form was orig. huller, to howl, also in Cot.; cf. Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 354. l. 24; and the current Ital. form is urlare, to shriek, also to howl or yell as a wolf (Florio). — L. urlāre, to howl; urla, an owl. ¶ The MF. hurleburle, a heedless, hasty person, used by Rabelais, does not seem to be immediately connected. But we may note M^lan. kulder bulder, noise, racket (Kalkar); Swed. kuller om buller, pell-mell. The mod. E. hullabaloo seems to be a corruption.

HURRAH, an exclamation of joy. (G.) Spelt whurra in Addison, The Drummer (near the end). From G. hurra, MHG. hurra. Of imitative origin; see Hurl. The older word is Huzzah, q.v.

HURRICANE, a whirlwind, violent storm of wind. (Span. — Caribbean.) Formerly hurricane. 'The dreadful spind, Which shymen do the hurricane call;' Shakspeare, Troilus, v. 2. 172. = Span. huracan, a hurricane; spelt huracan in Pinela's Caribbean huracan, as written by Littre, who refers to Oviedo, Hist. des Indes. 'Great tempestes which they caule huracanes or hauracanes;' Eden, ed. Arber, p. 216. See also Washington Irving's Life of Columbus, b. viii. c. 9 (Trench); Rich. quotes from Dampier's Voyages, v. ii.

pt. ii. c. 6, that hurricanes are 'violent storms, raging chiefly among the Caribbee islands.' Hence also Port. furacão, a hurricane.

HURRY, to hasten, urge on. (Scand.) Quite different from hurry, with which Richardson confuses it. In Shak. Romeo, v. i. 65; Temp. i. 2. 131. Extended by the addition of y from an older form hur, just as scurry is from skirr. It is probably the same word with the rare ME. horien, to hurry. 'And by the hondes hym hent and horyed hym withinne'—and they [the angels] caught him [Lot] by the hand, and hurried him within; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, i. 883.—MSwed. hurra, to swing or whirl round (Ihre); Swed. dial. hurra, to whirl round, to whiz; Swed. dial. hur, great haste, hurry (Rietz); Dan. hurra, to buzz, to hum; Icel. hur, a noise. β . Of imitative origin, and a weaker form of the more expressive and fuller form whir; see Whir, Whiz. Ben Jonson says of the letter R that it is 'the dog's letter, and *kurrr*eth in the sound.' Der. hurry, sb.

HURST, a wood. (E.) In Drayton's Polyolbion, s. 2, l. 187: 'that, from each rising hurst.' ME. hurst (Stratmann). Very common in place-names in Kent, e.g. Pens-hurst. AS. hyrst, i.e. Hurst in Kent; Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 65.—MHG. hurst, a shrub, thicket; Low G. horst; EFries. horst; MDu. horst, horst, the wood of osiers or withes; β . Hexham. Perhaps allied to Hurdle.

HURT, to strike or dash against, to injure, harm. (F.) In early use. ME. hurten, hurten, used in both senses (1) to dash against, push; and (2) to injure. Ex. (1) 'And he him *hurte*th [pusheth] with his hors adoun, Chaucer, C. T. 2618 (Six-text, A 2616), according to 4 MSS.; 'heo hurten heora hafden'—they dashed their heads together, Layamon, 1878. (2) 'That no man hurte other—that none injure other; P. Plowman, B. x. 366. In the Ancien Riwle, it has both senses; see the glossary.—OF. hurter, later hurter, 'to knock, push, jur, jolt, strike, dash, or hit violently against'; Cot. 'Se hurter à une pierre, to stumble at a stone,' id. β . Hardly of Celtic origin; and not from W. kyrdnu, to ram, push, impel, butt, make an assault, kyrdnu, a push, thrust, butt; see Thurneysen, p. 81. We find also OProv. urtar, hurtar (Gloss. to Bartsch, Chrest. Provençale), Ital. urtare, to knock, hit, dash against; perhaps from a late L. type urtare*, as if from urtum*, undused supine of urgere, to urge, to press on. See Körtling, § 9924. α . MDu. hurten, and Low G. hurten, to push, are from F. Der. hurt, sb., Ancien Riwle, p. 112, Chaucer, C. T. 10785 (F 471); hurt-ful, hurt-ful-ly, hurt-ful-ness; hurt-less, hurt-less-ly, hurt-less-ness.

HURTLE, to come into collision with, to dash against, to rattle. (F.; with E. suffix.) Nearly obsolete, but used in Gray's Fatal Sisters, st. i.; imitated from Shak. Jul. Cæsar, ii. 2. 22. ME. hurten, to jostle against, dash against, push; see references under Hurt. To these add: 'And he him *hurte*th with his hors adoun; Chaucer, C. T. 2618 (Six-text, A 2616), in the Ellesmere MS., where most other MSS. have *hurte*th. β . In fact, hurt-le is merely the frequentative of hurt in the sense 'to dash.' And this hurt is the ME. hurten, to dash, also to dash one's foot against a stone, to stumble. 'If any man shal wandre in the day he *hurtle*th not,' i.e. stumbles not; Wyclif, John, xi. 9. Du Wes has MF. hurtele, 'to hurtle together; perhaps from E.; see Palsgrave, p. 948, col. 2. See further under Hurt.

HURTLEBERRY, a bilberry. (E.) Iakluyt has hurtliberies, Voy. i. 477. Also called huckleberries, hurts, horts, hearts, hurtleberries; E. Plant-names (F. D. S.). Spelt hurtes, A. Boorde, Dyetary, ed. Furnivall, p. 267. AS. heorðberge, a berry of the buckthorn; AS. Leechdoms, iii. 331; but cf. Voc. 33. 12, 203, 22, 409. 13, 443. 28. From AS. heorot, a hart; and berge, berie, a berry. See Hart and Berry.

HUSBAND, the master of a house, the male head of a household, a married man. (Scand.) The old sense is 'master of a house.' ME. husbonde, husbonde. 'The husbonde... warneð his hus þus'—the master of the house guardeth his house thus; OFng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 247. 'Till a vast husbandis hous'—to an empty [waste] house of a farmer; Barbour's Bruce, vii. 151. AS. hūsbanda; 'æt hira hūsbandum'—from their fellow-dwellers in the same house; Exod. iii. 22. Not a true AS. word, but borrowed from Scandinavian.—Icel. hūsbandi, the master or 'goodman' of a house; a contracted form from hūsbandi.—Icel. hūs, a house; and bandi, dwelling, inhabiting, pres. part. of búa, to abide, dwell. See Boor, Busk. Der. husband-man, ME. husbonden-man, a householder, Wyclif, Matt. xx. 1; husband-ry, ME. husbonderye, P. Plowman, B. i. 57; spelt husbondrye, Chaucer, C. T. 9172 (E 1296).

HUSE, to enjoin silence. (E.) Chiefly used in the imp. mood and in the pp. ME. husen, husen; 'and huske was at the place,' Chaucer, C. T. 2983, ed. Tyrwhitt; spelt hus, hust in Six-text, A 2981. 'Tho weren the cruel clariouns ful wiht [Camb. MS. hus] and full stille'; Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. met. 5, l. 16 (or 25). 'After iangling wordes cometh "huissht" i pees, and be stille'; Test. of Love, bk. i. ch. 5, l. 90. β . The word is purely imitative, from the use of the word hush or husht to signify silence (husht being afterwards looked upon as a pp.); and it is seen that whist is but another expression of the same kind. See Whist. Cf. Low G. huse bussse, an expression used in singing children to sleep; Bremen Wörterb. ii. 678; Hamburg hüssen, to hush to sleep (Richey). So also G. husch, hush! quick! Pomeran. husch, Dan. hys, hush! also Swed. hysa, Dan. huse, MDan. hüsse, to hush. And see Hist. Der. hush-money, Guardian, no. 26, April 10, 1713. α . In the form husht, the t was at first an integral part of the word, just as in whist. 'I huste, I styll,' Palsgrave; 'to huste, silere; β . Leviuis.

HUSK, the dry covering of some fruits, &c. (E.) ME. huske. 'Huske of frute or ojer lyke; Prompt. Parv. p. 254. HUSKY, hoarse, as applied to the voice. (E.) A peculiar use of husky, i.e. full of husks (N. E. D.). 'Husky, or ful of huskes, siliquibus;' Hulot (1552). And see the other examples. But perhaps influenced by prov. E. hask, dry, parching, tart, hoarse (E. D. D.); husk, hoarse, dry, also hoarseness (id.). Der. husk-i-ness.

HUSSAR, a cavalry soldier. (G.—Hungarian.—Servian.—Gk.—L.) 'Hussars, Husares, Hungarian horsemen;' Coles' Dict. ed. 1684. 'After the manner of the Hussars;' Spectator, no. 576. HUSSIE, a case containing thread, needles, and other articles for sewing. (E.) 'Hussie, that is, house-wife; a roll of flannel with a pin-cushion attached, used for the purpose of holding pins, needles, and thread;' Peacock, Gloss. of words used in Manley and Corringham, co. Lincoln. Spelt husswife in Garrick, Miss in her Teens, Act 2, sc. 1 (1747). 'The sense is 'housewife's companion.' [It is remarkably like Icel. húvi, a case; but this is accidental.] From House and Wife. The ME. word was nedyl-hous, i.e. needle-house; Voc. 659. 37.

HUSSY, a pert girl. (E.) 'The young hussys;' Spectator, no. 242. Hussy is a corruption of hussive; cf. 'Doth Fortune play the hussive with me now?' Hen. V., v. 1. 85. And again, hussive stands for house-wife—woman who minds a house; from house and wife in the general sense of woman; cf. 'the good housewife Fortune,' As You Like It, i. 2. 33; 'Let housewives make a skillett of my helm; 'Oth. i. 3. 273. Cf. ME. hossyf, mater familias; Voc. 794. 9. See House and Wife. And see Hussie.

HUSTINGS, a platform used by candidates for election to parliament. (Scand.) The modern use is incorrect; it means rather a 'council,' or assembly for the choice of such a candidate; and it should rather be used in the singular husting. Minshew has hustings, and refers to 11 Hen. VII. cap. 21. ME. husting, a council; 'hulden muelch husting'—they held a great council; Layamon, 2324. AS. hūsting, a council (of Danes); A. S. Cf. Swed. ting, a thing, an assize; hålla ting, to hold assizes; Dan. ting, a thing, court, assize. β . The Icel. hús is cognate with E. house; and þing with E. thing. See House and Thing.

HUSTLE, to push about, jostle in a crowd. (Du.) It should have been hustle, but the change to hustle was inevitable, to make it easier of pronunciation. In Johnson's Dict., but scarce in literature. First in 1684.—Du. hustelen, to shake up and down, either in a tub, bowl, or basket; onder malkanderen hustelen, to huddle together [lit. to hustle one another]; Sewel. From Teut. hud-, weak grade of heud-, to hide. See Hide (1), Hod.

IMBECILE, feeble. (F. - L.) 'We in a manner were got out of God's possession; were, in respect to Him, become imbecile and lost;' Barrow, Sermons, vol. ii. ser. 23 (R.) [Formerly a rare word as an adj.; but the verb to imbecill (accented on the penultimate) was rather common; see note below.] Imbecility is in Shak. Troil. i. 3. 114. = MF. imbecille, 'weak, feeble;' Cot. = L. imbecillus, acc. of imbecillus, feeble. Root unknown. Der. imbecil-i-ty. The examples in R. show that the verb to imbecill or imbecil, to weaken, enfeeble, was once tolerably well known. It also meant 'to diminish or 'subtract from,' and was repeatedly confused with the verb to embezzle, to purloin. An example from Udal, on the Revelation of St. John, c. 16, shows this sense. It runs as follows: 'The second plague of the second angel is the second judgement of God against the regiment of Rome, and this is imbecityng and diminishing of their power and domynion, many landes and people fallynge from them.' The quotations (in R.) from Drant's tr. of Horace, b. i. sat. 6 and sat. 5, introduce the lines: 'So tyrannous a monarchie imbecityng freedom, than [then]; and: 'And so imbecill all their strength that they are taught to me.' These lines completely establish the accentuation of this verb, and further illustrate its sense. See Embezzle. The old word bezzle, to squander, is, however, the real original of im-bezzle; from OF. besiller, to destroy, waste.

IMBED, to lay, as in a bed. (E.; with F. prefix.) In Todd's Johnson. From Im- (2) and Bed. For in-bed or em-bed.

Q. i. 7. 47. 'With moist embrace;' Lydgate, Stans Puer, l. 38.—OF. embruer; Cot. gives ' embruer, to imbrue or bedab himself with.' Variant of OF. embruever, embruever, to moisten; allied to Milt. imbruever, which Torriano gives as equivalent to imbuire, 'to sink into, to moist or wet, to embrace;' Florio. Cf. mod. Ital. imbuiere, to imbibe. β. The OF. embruever is formed, like mod. F. abruever, from a causal verb bruever, to give to drink, turned into bruever in the 16th century, and thence into bruer. See abruever in Brachet. γ. This causal verb (as if l. imbuer) is founded on OF. beurre (F. boire), to drink; from l. bibere, to drink. δ. Hence imbrue is the causal of imbibere, and signifies 'to make to imbibe,' to soak, drench. See Imbibe. ¶ Probably it has often been confounded with imbue (below). Unconnected with l. breu, with which it is sometimes supposed to be allied.

IMBUE, to cause to drink, tinge deeply. (L.) 'With noysome rage imbeu'd;' Spenser, Ruines of Rome, st. 24, l. 6. Cf. Milton, P. L. viii. 216.—L. imbuiere, to cause to drink in.—L. im-, for in, in; and buere, a causal form, apparently allied to l. bibere, to drink. Cf. Der. indecorous-ly, used by Burke (R.); directly from L. indecorus, with -ous for -us; hence indecorous-ly.

INDEED, in fact, in truth. (L.) ME. in dede, in reality, according to the facts. 'And how that at this proces fil in dede' — and how all this series of events happened in reality; Chaucer, C. T. 14327 (B. 3517). We find nearly the modern usage in the following. 'Made her owne weapon do her finger blede, To fele if pricking were so good in dede'; Sir T. Wyatt, Of his Love that pricked her finger with a needle. From in, prep.; and dede, dat. case of dede. See In and Deed.

L. ii. 408; and in Minshew. — F. indefatigable, 'indefatigable'; Cot. — L. indefatigabilis, not to be wearied out. — L. in, negative prefix; and defatigare, to weary out, from de, down, extremely, and fatigare, to weary. INDELIBLE, not to be blotted out. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave. Misspelt for indeleble. Owing to the lack of E. words ending in -ble, it has been made to end in -ible, by analogy with terr-ible, horr-ible, and the like. The correct spelling indeleble often occurs (see Rich. and Todd) and is given in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Might fix any character indeleble of disgrace upon you'; Bacon, Letters, ed. 1657, p. 13 (Todd). — MF. indeleble, 'indeleble'; Cot. — L. indelēbilis, indeleble. — L. in, not; and delēbilis, destructible, from delēre, to destroy. INDEMNIFY, to make good for damage done. (F.—L.) 'I believe the states must at last engage to the merchants here that they will indemnify them from all that shall fall out on this occasion'; Sir W. Temple, to Lord Arlington (R.). Cf. MF. indemnifier, 'to indemnize, or indemnify'; Cot. [A clumsy and ignorantly formed compound, made as if from an OF. indemnifier or Late L. indemnificare, neither of which is used; the true words being OF. indemniser and Late L. indemnistrare.] — L. indemnī, decl. stem of indemniss, unharmed; and F. suffix -fier = L. -ficare, forms due to L. facere, to make; see Fact. β. INDEMONSTRABLE, not demonstrable. (L.) 'Undiscernable, and most commonly indemonstrable'; Hp. Taylor, Liberty of Prophesying, s. 2. — L. indēmōnstrābilis, not to be shown. — L. in, not; and dēmōnstrābilis, demonstrable, from dēmōnstrāre, to show. See In- (3) and Demonstrate.

INDENT (1), to notch, cut into points like teeth. (Law L.) A law term. In making duplicates of deeds, it was usual to cut or indent the edges exactly alike so that they would tally with each other upon comparison. The deeds with edges so cut were called indentures, and the verb to indent came also to mean to execute a deed or make a compact. See indentura in Ducange. 'Shall we buy treason, and indent with fears, When they have lost and forfeited themselves?'; i Hen. IV. i. 3. 87. It was also used as a term in heraldry, as in the following. 'His baner, . . . the which was goulles, . . . bordred sylver indented'; Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 60 (R.). Hence used in a general sense. 'With indented glides'; As You Like It, iv. 3. 113. — Law L. indenture, to notch or cut into teeth; whence also MF. endenter (Cotgrave). — L. in, in, into; and dent, stem of dens, a tooth, cognate with F. Tooth, q. v. INDEPENDENT, not dependent. (L.) The Independents formed a sect famous in history. 'Robert Brown preached these views [i.e. such views as they held] in 1585. . . A church was formed in London in 1593, when there were 20,000 independents. . . Cromwell, himself an Independent, obtained them toleration'; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. From In- (3) and Dependent; see Depend. Der. independent-ly, independence, independency.

INDESCRIBABLE, not to be described. (L.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. From In- (3) and Describable; see Describe.

INDESTRUCTIBLE, not to be destroyed. (L.) 'Primitive and indestructible bodies'; Boyle, Works, vol. i. p. 538 (R.). From In- (3) and Destructible; see Destruct. Der. indestructibility, indestructible-ness, indestructibility-ty.

[The L. pl. is indices; the F. pl. is index.] — L. index (stem indic-), a discoverer, informer, index, indicator; allied to indicare, to point out. See Indicate. Der. index, verb (modern), index-learn, Pope, Dunciad, ii. 279.

Dict.*, p. xxxi; indicative-ly; also index, q. v.

INDICT, to accuse. (L.; rather F.—L.) The spelling is Latin; but the pronunciation is invariably indite [i. e. rhyming with bite], showing that it is really French. See further under Indite. Shak. has indict (old editions indite) in Hamlet ii. 2. 464; Oth. iii. 4. 154. Der. indict-able; indict-ment, Wint. Ta. iii. 2. 11; and see Indiction.

In memory of the great victory obtained by Constantine over Maxentius, 8 Cal. Oct. 312, the council of Nice ordained that the accounts of years should be no longer kept by the Olympiads, but by the Indiction, which has its epocha 1 Jan. 313. Errors*, b. vi. c. 10. § 7.—L. indigenus, native; by change of -us to -ous, as in very numerous instances.—L. indi-, for indu, Old L. extension from the prep. in (cf. Gk. ἐνδω, within); and gen-, as in gen-i-tus, born, pp. of gignere, to beget, formed from GEN, to beget. See Genus.

Both L. and Gk. words appear to be from EGE, to be in want; Pick. i. 482. Der. indigent-ly, indigence.

INDIGESTED, not digested, undigested. (L.) Indigested in the sense of 'undigested' is now commonly so written, as if to distinguish it from undigested, applied to food; but the words had once the same sense. 'Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump;' 2 Hen. VI. v. 1. 157. The shorter form indigest also occurs; 'monsters and things indigest.' *Shak. INDIGO, a blue dye obtained from a certain plant. (F.—Span.—L.—Gk.—Pers.—Skt.) Most of it comes from India, whence the name. The mod. name indigo is French, a word borrowed from Spanish. Holland uses the Span. form. 'There cometh from India . . . store enough not only of indico;' tr. of Pliny, b. xxxv. c. 7.—F. indigo.—Span. indico, indigo; lit. 'Indian.'—L. Indicum, indigo; neut. of Indicus, Indian.—Gk. ἰνδικόν, indigo; neut. of ἰνδικός, Indian.—Pers. Hind, Indian; Rich. Dict. p. 1691. Bartsch, Chrest. Française.—Late L. inditāre, to accuse; frequentative of L. dicere, to proclaim, enjoin, impose.—L. in, upon; and dicere, to say; see Diction. It would seem that the senses of the related words indicare, to point out, and dictare, to dictate, have influenced the sense of indite. ¶ The spelling indict is reserved for the sense 'to accuse.' Der. indit-er, inditment. Doublet, indict, q. v.

INDIVIDUAL, separate, pertaining to one only. (L.) 'If it were not for two things that are constant . . . no individual would last one moment.' Bacon, Essay 58, Of Vicissitude. Only indolence is given in Coles and Blount, and occurs in Holland's Plutarch, p. 480 (R.). Indolence and indolent both occur in the Spectator, no. 100; the former is from F. indolence. Indolency is Englished from L. indolentia, freedom from pain; hence, ease.—L. in, neg. prefix; and dolent, stem of dolens, pres. part. of dolere, to grieve. INDUE (1), to invest or clothe with, supply with. (L.) 'Infinite shapes of creatures there are bred . . . Some fit for reasonable sowles' indue; Spenser, F. Q. iii. 6. 35. 'Indue'd with robes of various hue'; Dryden, tr. of Ovid's Metam. b. xi. l. 264; where the Lat. has 'induitur uelamina mille colorum', Metam. xi. 589.—L. induere, to put into, put on, clothe with. And see Higden's Polychronicon, iii. 453, where induegence occurs in the 15th cent. translation, and Higden has induit. β. Connected with inducere, clothes, ex-usue, spoils; the prefix is ind- rather than in-, there being no connexion with Gk. ἐνδύω, ēndýōw, to put on. See Exuvius. Der. indue-ment (rare). And see below.

INDUE (2), a corruption of Endue, to endow, q. v. (F.—L.) This word is distinct from the above, but some of our best writers seem to have confused them. For instances, see Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 105, Oth. iii. 4. 146, &c.; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2. 6. See Todd's Johnson. The mistake chiefly arises in the phrase 'indued with,' miswritten for 'endued with,' in the sense of 'endowed with'; see Shak. Two Gent. v. 4. 153, Com. Errors, ii. 1. 22. Dryden uses 'indued with' correctly, as in the instance cited under Indue (1).

INDULGENCE, permission, licence, gratification. (F.—L.) ME. indulgence, P. plowman, B. vil. 193; Chaucer, C. T. 5666 (D 84).—F. indulgence, 'indulgence'; Cot.—L. indulgentia, indulgence, gentleness.—L. indulgent, stem of pres. part. of indulgere, to be courteous to, indulge. β. Origin doubtful; it is not even certain whether the prefix is in- or ind-. Bréal explains indulgentia as from indu-licentia*; but Pretellius connects it with Gk. ἐνδύω, continuous, Goth. tulgus, steadfast, and E. long; see Long (2). Der. indulgent, Ant. and Cleop. i. 4. 16, from F. indulgent, 'indulgent'; Cot. Hence the (later) verb indulge, Dryden, tr. of Persius, Sat. v. 74, answering to L. indulgere.

INDURATE, to harden. (L.) Indurated occurs four times, and induration twice, in Harnes, Works, p. 282. Properly a pp., as in Tyndal, Works, p. 28, col. 1; 'for their harts were indurate'; cf. Caxton, Golden Legend, Moses, § 10.—L. induratus, pp. of indurare, to harden. See Endure. Der. indurat-ion, MF. induracioun, Chaucer, C. T., G 85.

INGLE (2), a darling, paramour. (Du. or Fries. - L. - Gk.) See Nares. Spelt engle; Ben Jonson, Poetaster, A. i. (Ovid sen.). = MDu. ingel, engel, an angel; Koolman notes FFries. engel, an angel, as being commonly used as a term of endearment and as a female name; cf. Low G. min engel, the usual term of endearment between a married couple (Berghaus); whence E. my ningle (Nares). = L. angelus. = Gk. ἄγγελος; see Angel.

INGLORIOUS, not glorious. (F. - L.) In Shak. K. John, v. 1. 65. = F. inglorius, 'inglorious'; Cot. = Late L. inglorius, formed from L. inglorius, inglorious. See In- (3) and Glory. Der. inglorious-ly, -ness. ¶ Perhaps borrowed directly from L. inglorius, like arduous from L. arduus, &c.

INGOT, a mass of metal poured into a mould, a mass of unwrought metal. (E.) See my note to Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 2. 17. ME. ingot, Chaucer, C. T. 16677, 16691, 16696, 16701 (G 200-33); where it means 'a mould in which metal is cast'; see the passages. But the true sense is that which is still preserved, viz. 'that which is poured in,' a mass of metal. From AS. in, in; and goten, poured, pp. of geotan, to pour, shed water, fuse metals; Grein, i. 594. Cf. Du. ingieten, Swed. ingjuta, to pour in. β. The AS. geotan is cognate with Du. gieten, G. giessen, Ice. gjóta (pp. gaitan), Dan. gjøde, Swed. gjuta (pp. guten), Goth. gjutan, to pour, shed, fuse; all from √GHEUD, to pour, seen also in L. fundere (pt. t. fudi, pp. fusus); which is an extension of √GHEU, to pour. See Fuse.

Chyle. See A. From the E. ingot is derived the F. lingot, an ingot, which stands for lingot, by that incorporation of the article which is not uncommon in French; cf. lendemain (= le en demain), loriot (from L. aurulentus), luette (from L. uua), lierre (from L. hedera). And again, from F. lingot (found in 1405) was formed the Low Lat. lingotus, which is not an early word, but assigned by Ducange to A. D. 1440. This Low Lat. word has been by some fancifully derived from L. lingua, the tongue; owing to a supposed resemblance of a mass of molten metal to the shape of the tongue; much as the countryman described the size of a stone as being 'as big as a lump of chalk.' B. Scheler hesitates to accept the derivation here given, from the notion that the AS. verb geotan soon became obsolete. This is quite a mistake, as it is still extant; see 'Vote, to pour,' in Halliwell, and cf. Cleveland yetling, a small iron pan; and more E. dialect words from the same source might be adduced. The ME. verb yeten was long in use also; see examples in Stratmann, s. v. yeten, 3rd ed., p. 262. 'I lyes mase [mace] he toke in his honde tho', 'That was made of yeten bras,' i. e. brass formed in a mould; Rich. Coeur de Lion, ed. Weber, 370. 'The lazar tok forth his coupe [cup] of gold; Bothe were yeten in o mold,' i. e. both the lazar's cup and another were cast in one mould; Amis and Amiloun, ed. Weber, 202. 'Mawmez ingot of golde' = 'idols cast out of gold'; Juliana, ed. Cockayne, p. 38, l. 13. C. Moreover, there was a derivative sb. gote, a channel; see Prompt. Parv., p. 205, and note; it occurs in the statutes 33 Hen. VIII. c. 33, 2 and 3 Edw. VI. c. 30; still in use in the forms gote, gout, got, in various parts of England; cf. Du. goot, a gutter; Low G. güte, gote, a can for pouring out, the beak of such a can; güte, a pouring out; see Bremen Wörterb. ii. 502. D. And note particularly that the whole word ingot has its parallel in the cognate (yet independent) G. einguss, 'infusion, insillation, pouring in, potion, drink (given to horses); as a technical term, jet, ingot'; Fliegel's G. Diet. Cf. also Swed. ingöte, the neck of a mould for casting metals (Öman); Low G. ingöte = G. einguss (Berghaus). The objection that the ME. pp. was usually yeten rather than goten, is not fatal; cf. E. give with ME. yeven, yiven.

INGRAFT, ENGRAFT, to graft upon. (F. - L. - Gk.) See Engraffed and Engraft in Schmidt, Shak. Lexicon. Spelt ingraft, Milton, P. l. xi. 35. Coined from In- (1) or In- (2) and Graft, q. v.

Language*, ed. Smith, p. 55, on the signification of to dye in grain, or of a fast colour. And see Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 255. Hamlet iii. 4. 90; Milton, 11 Pens. 33. Comus, 750. = F. en graine, in grain; Cot. gives 'graine, the seed of herbs, also grain wherewith cloth is dyed in grain, scarlet die, scarlet in graine.' β. The F. en-l. in, in; the F. graine is from Late L. grāna, the dye produced from cochineal, which appears also in Spain and Ital. grana, grain, seed, cochineal. So named from the resemblance of the dried cochineal to fine grain or seed; from L. grānum, a grain; see Grain.

INTRUST, to give in trust, commit to one's care. (Scand.; with E. prefix.) Sometimes entrust, but intrust is much better, as being purer English; the latter part of the word being of Scand. (not F.) origin. In Dryden, Character of a Good Parson, l. 57. Compounded of In and Trust.

INTUITION, a looking into, ready power of perception. (F.—L.) Used by Bp. Taylor in the sense of 'looking upon'; Great Exemplar, pt. i. s. 36; and Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 2 (R.). [Intuitus is in Cotgrave, and in Milton, P. L. v. 488.] = MF. (and F.) intuitus (Hitzfeld). [Imitated from F. inondation.] = L. inundationem, acc. of inundatio, an overflowing; cf. inundatus, pp. of inundare, to overflow, spread over in waves. — L. in, upon, over; and unda, a wave. See Undulate.

Der. inundate, vb., really suggested by the sb., and of later date.

INURE, to habituate, accustom. (F.—L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 160. Also enure, as in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 2. 29; v. 9. 39; vi. 8. 14; and Sonnet 14. l. 7. 'A fayre company, and well enured to the warre'; Caxton, Four Sons of Aymon, ch. viii. p. 187. = OF. enurer, to work; whence pp. enouré û, employed in. — L. inoperare, to effect; from in, in, and operare, to work, from opera, work. See Operate.

β. The word may have also been influenced by the phrase in (F. en) ure, i. e. in operation, in work, in employment; which was formerly common. Thus, in Ferrex and Porrex, Act iv. sc. 2, we have: 'And wisdom willed me without protract [delay] In speedie wise to put the same in ure,' i. e. in operation, not in use; see the passage in Morley's Library of Eng. Literature, Plays, p. 59, col. 1. And again, 'I wish that it should streight be put in ure'; id. Act v. sc. 1.

γ. Hence was also formed the verb ure, used in the same sense as inure. 'Ned, thou must begin Now to forget thy study and thy books, And ure thy shoulders to an armour's weight'; Edw. III, Act i. sc. 1. l. 159 (in the Leopold Shakspeare, p. 1038).

δ. The etymology of ure is from the OF. cuire, œuvre, œuvre, œure, work, action, operation. [Mr. Wedgwood well remarks upon the similar sound-changes by which the F. man-œuvre has become the E. man-ure.] Der. inure-ment (rare). ¶ The word ure here treated of is quite distinct from ME. ure, fate, destiny, luck, as used in Harboure's Bruce, i. 312, il. 434, &c.; see glossary to my edition. In this case, ure is the OF. eur, aur (mod. F. eur in bonheur), from L. augurium; see Augur.

URN, to put into a sepulchral urn. (F.—L.; or L.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 4. (1). See In (1) and Urn.

See Wade. Der. invad-er; invas-ion, K. John, iv. 2. 173 = i. invasion, 'an invasion' (Cot.), from L. invasiōem, acc. of invasio; cf. pp. invasus; also invas-ive, K. John, v. 1. 69.

'carried in.' — L. invecus, carried inwards, pp. of invehere (below).

INVEIGH, to attack with words, rail. (L.) In Shak. Lucrece, 1254. The close connexion of inveigh with the sb. inveective at once points out the etymology. In this word, the L. h is expressed by the guttural gh, just as the AS. h was replaced by the same combination; see Mätzner, Eng. Gram. i. 149. Cf. Span. invehir, to inveigh. — L. invehere (pp. invecus), to carry into or to, to introduce, attack, inveigh against. — L. in, into; and vehere, to carry; see Vehicle. 'Invoice, is a particular of the value, custom, and charges of any goods sent by a merchant in another man's ship, and consigned to a factor or correspondent in another country.' See Notes on E. Etym., p. 337. ¶ Spelt ipecacuanha in Historia Naturalis Brazilie, 1648; p. 17.

IRIS, a rainbow. (L.—Gk.) In Shak. All's Well, i. 3. 158. — L. iris, a rainbow. — Gk. ἴρις, Iris, the messenger of the gods; ἴρις, a rainbow (Homer). Root uncertain. Der. irid-esc-ent, a coined word, as if from pres. part. of a L. verb irid-esc-ere, to become like a rainbow, formed with inceptive suffix -esc- from irid-, stem of iris (gen. iridis); hence iridescence; also iridi-um (from the decl. stem iridi-). Iris, a flower, is the same word; and see orice.

IRK, to weary, distress. (E.) Now used impersonally, as in Shak. As You Like It, ii. 1. 22. A. Formerly used personally. ME. irken, (1) to make tired, (2) to become tired. Of these, the transitive (orig.) sense does not often appear, though preserved in the mod. phrase 'it irks me,' and in the word irksome = tiring. Irkesom, fastidious; Irkesomness, fastidious; Irky, fastidious, accidior; Prompt. Parv. The intrans. sense is common. 'To preche also how myxt not yke' = you must not grow weary of preaching; Myrc, Instructions for Parish Priests, 526. Irked shrank back, drew back; Gawan and Grene Knight, 1573. 'Swa jat na man mocht irk withalle' = so that none may grow tired withal; Fricke of Conscience, 8918. 'Men schuld yrke to telle them alle.' Rob. of Brunne, Chron. (Rolls Series), l. 11122. B. We also find ME. irk = tired, oppressed. 'Owe frendis of us wille sone be irke' = our friends will soon be tired of us; Sir Isumbras, 118. 'Syr Arther was irke', i. e. tired; Anturs of Arthur, st. vi. 'Thof he was irk [tired];' Cursor Mundi, 6425. Hence for-irked, for for-irked, very weary; Gen. and Exodus, 3658. Palsgrave has: 'I waxe yrke, I me ennuye.' C. The verb irken, to be tired, is from the adj. irk, tired, weary, sluggish; apparently a back-formation from the AS. irgþ (which came to be pronounced as irkþ; cf. length, strength) with the meaning 'sluggishness'; see irgþ in Toller. And irgþ, irgþ was formed (with suffix þ) from AS. earg, inert, sluggish, weak, timid; cognate with Lowl. scarg irgþ, timid, Icel. arg, Du. erg, G. arg, cowardly. Cf. G. es irgert much, it irks me. See Phil. Soc. Trans. 1903, p. 151. Der. irk-some, irk-some-ness, in the Prompt. Parv., as above.

And it is suggested that the Teut. forms were borrowed from Celtic. Cf. also Goth. az, L. as, brass; Skt. ayas, iron. Der. iron-bound, -clad, founder, foundry, -grey, -handed, -hearted, the bladder of the sturgeon (Acipenser sturio).—MDu. huys, a sturgeon; blaes, a bladder (Kilian).—G. hausenblas, isinglass; from hausen, a kind of sturgeon (answering to MDu. huysen); and blas (= Du. bla), a bladder, from blasen, to blow, allied to Blaas.

ISLAM, the religious system of Mohammed. (Arab.) 'The revolt of Islam'; Shelley.—Arab. islām, lit. 'submission', or 'resignation'.—Arab. root salam, he was resigned; whence also salaam, Moslem, Muslman.

ISLAND, an isle, land surrounded by water. (E.) The s is ignorantly inserted, owing to confusion with isle, a word of F. origin; see below. In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 11, the word is spelt island in the Globe edition, but iland in the passage as quoted in Richardson. ME. iland, ilond, yland, yland; spelt yland in Octovian Imperator, l. 539 (Weber's Met. Romances, iii. 179); ilond, Layamon, l. 1133 (later text). AS. igland, Grein, ii. 136. β. The AS. ig-land is compounded of ig, an island, and land, land; prob. by association with ea-land, an island, from ea, water. Grein (ii. 136) gives ieg, ieg as equivalent forms, with references; the word is also written eg in Mercian (id. l. 233); and in Eng. local names appears as -ea or -ey, as in Batters-ey, Aldern-ey, Angles-ey. γ. Cognate words are: Du. eiland, an island, formerly written eyland (Sewel); Icel. eyland; Swed. eiland, used as a proper name for an island in the Baltic Sea; G. eiland.

8. Dropping the syllable -land, we also find AS. ig, ieg, Mercian eg (as above); Icel. ey, an island; Dan. and Swed. ö, an island; also G. aue, a meadow near water. All from Teut. agwiz*, fem. of agwiz*, adj. belonging to water; an adj. formed from Teut. akwa*, water, represented by AS. æa, OHG. aka, Goth. akwa, a stream, cognate with L. acqua, water. See AQUATIC. Thus the AS. æa signifies 'water'; whence ieg, ig, 'a place near water', lit. 'aqueous'; and ig-land, an island. Der. island-er, Temp. ii. 2. 37.

ISLE, an island. (F.—L.) Quite distinct from the F. island, in which the s was ignorantly inserted. It is singular that, in the word isle, the s was formerly dropped, thus tending still further to confound the two words. ME. ile, yle; Rob. of Glouc., p. 1. l. 3; Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], xxviii. 1.—OF. ille, ile; MF. isle, 'an isle'; Cot. 2; mod. F. île, L. insula, an island. See INSULAR. Der. is-let, in Drayton's Polyolbon, s. 24, note, from MF. islette, 'a little island' (Cot.), a dimin. form. And see ISOLET.

ISOCHRONOUS, performed in equal times. (Gk.) In Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706 (s. v. Isocronus). Imitated from Gk. isochronos, consisting of an equal number of times (a grammatical term).—Gk. isos, for isos, equal; and chronos, time, whence also E. CHRONICLE. β. The Gk. isos or isos is perhaps allied to Gk. ebros, form; Brugmann, i. 8. 345 (c). Cf. Skt. is-kr, adv., equally. Der. isochron-ism.

ISOLATE, to insulate, place in a detached situation. (Ital.—L.) The word occurs in the Preface to Warburton's Divine Grace, but was censured in 1800 as being a novel and unnecessary word (Todd). And see note in Trench, Eng. Past and Present. Todd remarks, further, that isolated was properly a term in architecture, signifying detached. It was thus at first a translation of Ital. isolato, detached, separate, formed as an adj. (with pp. form) from isola, an island.—L. insula, an island; also, a detached house or pile of buildings, whence insulatus, insulated, answering to Ital. isolato. See INSULAR. ¶ The F. isolé is likewise borrowed from the Ital. isolato; the E. word was not taken from F., but directly from the Italian. Der. isolate-ion. Doublet, insulate.

ISOCELES, having two sides equal, as a triangle. (L.—Gk.) In Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706.—L. isocēlēs.—Gk. isocēlēs, with equal legs or sides.—Gk. isos, for isos, equal (see ISOCHRONOUS); and celēs, a leg, which see in PRELITIZ.

ISOTHERMAL, having an equal degree of heat. (Gk.) Modern.—Gk. isos, for isos, equal; and therm, heat; with adj. suffix -al. See ISOCHRONOUS, THERMOMETER.

ISSUE, that which proceeds from something, progeny, produce, result. (F.—L.) ME. issue. 'To me and to myn issue'; P. Plowman, C. xix. 259. 'An issue large'; Chaucer, Troil. v. 205.—OF. issuē, 'the issue, end, success, event'; Cot. A fem. form of issu, 'issued, flown, sprung, proceeded from'; pp. of issir, 'to issue, to go, or depart out'; id.—L. exire, to go out; from ex, out, and ire, to go; see EXIT. The F. pp. issu answers to Folk-l. exūtus*, for L. exitus. Der. issue, verb, borrowed from the sb.; 'we issued out' is in Surrey's tr. of Virgil, where the L. text has 'inuat ire'; Æneid, ii. 27; ME. issuen, Rich. Coer de Lion, 4432. [The ME. Northern verb was isch, common in Harbours' Bruce, and borrowed from the F. vb. issir.] Also issu-er, issue-less, Wint. Ta. v. 1. 174.

ISTHMIUM, a neck of land connecting a peninsula with the mainland. (L.—Gk.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; spelt istmus in Cotgrave, to translate MF. isthme.—L. isthmus.—Gk. isthmós, a narrow passage, neck of land; allied to thūa, a step; from ēi*, to go.

IT, the neuter of the third personal pronoun. (E.) Formerly also hit, P. Plowman, A. i. 85, C. ii. 83; but it in the same, B. i. 86.

AS. hit, neuter of hē; see HE.—Icel. hit, neut. of hin; Du. het, neut. of hij; Goth. hitā. 6. The gen. case its was just coming into use in Shakespeare's time, and occurs in Temp. i. 2. 95, &c., but the usual form in Shak. is his, as in AS. We also find it in Shak. (with the sense of its) in the first folio, in 13 passages, Temp. ii. 1. 163, &c. See the articles in The Bible Wordbook and in Schmidt's Shak. Lexicon. Its does not once occur in the Bible, ed. 1611, which has it where mod. editions have its in Levit. xxv. 5; but first appears in Florio's Ital. Dict. (1598), s. v. Spontaneamente. The use of hit for his (= its) occurs early, viz. in the Anturs of Arthur, st. viii. l. 11, and in Allit. Poems, B. 264. The AS. neuter form is hit, nom.; hit, gen.; hit, dat.; hit, acc. Der. it-self; see SELF.

ITALICOS, the name given to letters printed thus—in sloping type. (L.) So called because invented by Aldo Manuzio (Aldus Manutius), of Venice, about A. D. 1500. Aldo was born in 1449, and died in 1515. Letters printed in this type were called by the Italians corsivi (cursive, or running hand), but were known to other nations as Italics; see Engl. Cyclop. s. v. Manuzio.—L. Italicos, Italian.—L. Italia, Italy (Gk. Italia). The initial I is long. Der. italic-ise.

ITCH, to have an irritating sensation in the skin. (E.) Like if (= ME. yif, 3if—AS. gif) this word has lost an initial ME. y or 3—AS. g. ME. iken, icken, 3icken, 3iken; see Prompt. Parv. pp. 259, 538. The pp. occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 3684, where the Text (A 3682) has the various spellings icched, yched, and 3ekid. AS. giccan, for gyccan*, to itch; in AS. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, vol. iii. p. 50, l. 13; whence AS. gykha, an itching, in Ælfric's Hom. i. 86.—Du. juken, to itch; whence juiking, jeukie (= AS. gykha), an itching; G. jucken, to itch; OHG. juechan. Teut. type jukjan* or jukhan*. Der. itch, sb., itchy.

ITEM, a separate article or particular. (L.) The mod. use of item as a sb. is due to the old use of it in enumerating particulars. Properly, it is an adv. meaning 'also' or 'likewise'; as in Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5. 265: 'as, item, two lips, indifferent red; item, two grey eyes'; &c.—L. item, in like manner, likewise, also; closely related to ita, so; cf. is, he. Cf. Skt. itām, thus; itāh, thus; iti, thus.

ITERATE, to repeat often. (L.) Bacon has iterations and iterate in Essay 25 (Of Dispatch). Shak. has iteration, Oth. v. 2. 150 (folio ed.); iteration, 1 Hen. IV. i. 2. 101.—L. iterātus, pp. of iterare, to repeat.—L. iterum, again; a comparative adverbial form (with suffix -ter) from the pronom. base I of the third person; see ITEM. Cf. Skt. itara (s), other. Der. iteration, iterate.

ITINERANT, travelling. (L.) 'And glad to turn itinerant'; Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. l. 92.—L. itinerant, stem of pres. pt. of the verb itinerari, to travel.—L. itiner, stem of iter, a journey.—L. it-um, supine of ire, to go.—it, to go; cf. Skt. it, to go. Der. itinerant-ly, itinerancy, itineracy. Also itinerary (Levins), from L. itinerarium, an account of a journey, neut. of itinerarius, belonging to a journey, from the base itiner—with suffix -arius.

IVORY, a hard white substance chiefly obtained from the tusks of elephants. (F.—L.) ME. iuorie, iuorie (in v for v), Chaucer, C. T. 7323 (D 1741). Also spelt euory, Trevisa, i. 79.—AF. iuorie, Charlemagne, ed. Michel, l. 353; OF. iuorie, ivory, a 13th-century form, cited by Littré; later ivoire, 'ivory'; Cot. [Cf. Prov. euori, Bartsch, Chrestomathie Provençale, p. 20, whence perhaps the MF. form euory. Also Ital. avorio, avolio.]—L. eborus, adj. made of ivory.—L. ebor, stem of ebur, sb. ivory. β. Supposed by some to be connected with Skt. ihara, an elephant. Der. ivory, adj., ivory-black, ivory-unt.

IVY, the name of a creeping evergreen. (E.) 'He moot go pypen in an ivy-leaf'; Chaucer, C. T. 1840 (A 1838). AS. ifig, ivy; see Gloss. to AS. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, also ifega, an old form in the Corpus glossary, l. 718. [The AS. f between two vowels was sounded as v, and the change of AS. -ig to E. -y is regular, as in AS. stān-ig, F. ston-y;—OHG. ebakevi, ivy (cited by Kluge); G. epheu. β. The AS. ifig seems to be a compound word. The syllable if is equivalent to Du. ei—in ei-loef, ivy (lit. ivy-leaf); and to OHG. eba(k) in ebakevi; but the orig. sense is unknown. Der. ivy-mantled, ivy-ed.

IWIS, certainly. (E.) ME. ywis, ywis; Chaucer, C. T. 3277, 3705. Common in Shak., as in Merch. Ven. ii. 9. 68, Tam. Shrew, i. 1. 62, Rich. III. i. 3. 102. AS. gewis, adj. certain; gewislic, adv. certainly; Grein, i. 43.—Du. gewis, adj. and adv., certain, certainly; G. gewis, certainly. Cf. Icel. wis, certain, sure. β. All from Teut. wisaz*, for witaz* (Idg. uit-dō*), pp. from the base wis—in Teut. uit-en*, to know. See WIT (1). From WEID*, to know. 6. It is to be particularly noted that the ME. prefix i- (= AS. e-) was often written apart from the rest of the word, and with a capital letter. Hence, by the mistake of editors, it is sometimes printed i wis, and explained to mean 'I know.' Hence, further, the imaginary verb wis, to know, has found its way into many dictionaries.

IZARD, a kind of antelope. (F.) Modern.—F. isard; perhaps of Iberian origin (Hatzfeld).

IZZARD, the letter Z. (F.—Gk.) Written ezod in 1597 (N. F. D.); izzard in Goldsmith, She Stoops to Conquer, A. iv. F. ezed, a F. name for the letter (see my Notes on E. Etym., p. 140); Prov. izédo, izéto (Mistral).—Gk. ζῆτα, the name of the 6th letter of the Gk. alphabet.

J

JABBER, to chatter, talk indistinctly. (F. I) Formerly jaber or jable. 'Whosoever the Jewes would jaber or tangle agayn;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 605 c. 'To iabli, multum loqui;' Levins, ed. 1570. M.E. jabern, to chatter; see under Tatern in Prompt. Parv. And cf. gibber, Hamlet, I. i. 116. Jabber, Jabber are imitative words, similar to gabber, gabble, which are from the base gab, seen in Icel. gabbia, to mock, scoff. More immediately, they may be referred to OF. jaber, given by Godefroy as a variant of gabier, to mock. Cf. also MF. javioier, to gabble, prate, or prattle; Cot. Of imitative origin. See Gabble; and cf. Du. gabberen, 'to jabber' (Sewell). Der. jabber-er.

JABIRU, a large wading bird of tropical America. (Brazil.) From the Tupi-Guarani (Brazilian) jabiru; see Hist. Nat. Brasilicæ, 1678, ii. 200.

JACAMAR, a bird of the family Galbulidæ. (F.—Brazil.) F. jacamar (with e as a), Brisson. —Tupi-Guarani (Brazilian) jacamar-ciri; Hist. Nat. Brasilicæ, 1678, ii. 202; Newton, Hist. Birds.

JACANA, a gallinular aquatic bird. (Brazil.) From Tupi-Guarani (Brazilian) jacana; written jacana (for jacana); see Newton, Hist. Birds, and Hist. Nat. Brasilicæ, 1678, ii. 190.

JACINTH, a precious stone. (F.—L.—Gk.). In the Bible, Rev. ix. 17; xxi. 20. 'In Rev. ix. 17, the hyacinthine, or dark purple, colour is referred to, and not the stone; as in Sidney's Arcadia (B. i. p. 59, l. 28), where mention is made of "Queen Helen, whose Jacynth hairs curled by nature," &c.' Bible Wordbook, ed. 1866. [But I should explain "jacynth hairs" like "hyacinthine locks" in Milton, P. L. iv. 301, to moved from "hair curling like the hyacinth," without reference to colour.] M.E. jacynth, Wyclif, 2 Chron. ii. 7 (earlier version), jacynth (later version). Gower has jacynthes; C. A. lii. 112; bk. vii. 842. —OF. jacynth, 'the precious stone called a jacinth'; Cot. —Late L. jacintus, hiacinthus, for hyacinthus, a jacinth, Rev. xxi. 20 (Vulg. Gk.). —Gk. ῥαβδωβ; Rev. xxi. 20. See Hyacinth. ¶ This jacynth is for hyacinth, like Jerome for Hierome or Hieronimus, and Jerusalem for Hierusalem.

JACK (1), a snuicy fellow, sailor. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.). The phrase 'thou Sire John' is in Chaucer, C. T. 14816 (B 4000); on which Tyrwhitt remarks: 'I know not how it has happened, that in the principal modern languages, John, or its equivalent, is a name of contempt, or at least of slight. So the Italians use Gianni, from whence Zani; the Spaniards Juan, as bobo Juan, a foolish John; the French Jean, with various additions; and in English, when we call a man a John, we do not mean it as a title of honour. Chaucer, in l. 3708, uses Jacks fool, as the Spaniards do bobo Juan; and I suppose jack-ass has the same etymology.' 'Go forth the window, Jacks fool, she said;' Chaucer, C. T. 3708. This M.E. Jacks has been supposed to have been borrowed from the F. Jaguet; but it is hard to believe that this common French name should have been regarded as an equivalent to the E. common name John, since it really answers to Jacob. Indeed, a strong case has been made out by Mr. E. B. Nicholson (in his Pedigree of Jack, 1892) for regarding it as short for Jacken (found in 1327) which is a variant of Yankin. See further dimin. of John, and so used by Chaucer, C. T. 1172. See further under Zany. B. It is difficult to tell to what extent the various senses of the word jack depend upon the name above. a. It is, however, clearly to be traced in the phrase Jack o' the clock, Rich. II. v. 6, where it means a figure which, in old clocks, used to strike upon the bell. β. In a similar way, it was used to name various implements which supplied the place of a boy or attendant, as in boob-jack and in the jack which turns a spit in a kitchen. γ. Similarly, it denoted the key of a virginal; Shak. Sonnet 128. δ. Hence perhaps also a familiar name for the small bowl aimed at in the game of bowls; Shak. Cymb. ii. 1. 2. ε. And for a small pike (fish), as distinct from a full-grown one; and in many other instances (see N. F. D.). Der. Jack-o'-lent = Jack of Lent, a puppet thrown at in Lent, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 27; Jack-a-lantern = Jack o' lantern, also called Jack-with-the-lantern, an ignis fatuus (see Todd's Johnson); Jack-pudding, Milton, Defence of the People of England, c. 1 (K.), compounded of Jack and pudding, just as a buffalo is called in French jean-pottage (John-pottage) and in German Hans-wurst (Jack-sausage); Jack-an-apes (for which see below); Jack-by-the-hedge, 'an herb that grows by the hedge-side,' Kersey, ed. 1715, l. c. Silymbrium Alliaria, see Lyte, Tr. of Dodoens, bk. v. c. 72; jack-ass; jack-daw, jack-daw, as it is not a corruption of chough-daw, as it has been desperately guessed to be; cf. MF. jaquette, 'a proper name for a woman, a pinnat, or megapty' [magpie], Cot. Also jack-screw, a screw for raising heavy weights, &c.

JACKANAPES, a tame ape, a man who displays tricks like an ape; used as a term of contempt. Tyndall has Jack an apes (Jacks a napes in ed. 1528); Works, 1573, p. 132, col. 1, l. 11. 'He grynnes and he gupis As it were jack nups;' Skelton, Why Come ye nat to Courte, l. 651. History shows that the orig. form was Jack Napes, and it is first known as a nick-name of Wm. de la Pole, duke of Suffolk (murdered in 1450), whose badge was an ape's clog and chain, such as was usually attached to a tame ape. It is possible that, at the same time, there was a covert meaning in Napes (which also then meant Naples), because he advocated the king's marriage with Margaret, daughter of René, titular king of Jerusalem, Sicily, and Naples, which made him unpopular.

JACK (2), a coat of mail, a military coat worn over the coat of mail. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.). 'Jacks of defence, ink of fence, garment, Balthus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 256, and note, showing that the word was in use as early as 1375. 'Jacke, harness, inque, inque;' Palsgrave.—OF. Jaque, 'James also a jack, or coat of mail, and thence, a Jack for the body of an Irish grey-hound . . . put on him when he is to coap' [with wild boar]; Cot. Cf. Ital. giaco, a coat-of-mail, Span. jaco, a soldier's jacket; also Du. jak, G. jacks, Swed. jacks, a jacket, jerkin. β. Of obscure origin. Most likely Ducange is right in assigning the origin of it to the Jacquerie, or revolt of the peasantry nicknamed Jacques Bonhomme, A. D. 1358. That is, it is from the OF. name Jacques.—L. Jacibus.—Gk. ῥαβδωβ.—Heb. ῥαβδωβ, Jacob, lit. 'one who seizes by the heel'—Heb. root ῥαβδωβ, to seize by the heel, to supplant. ¶ In some instances, jack (1) and jack (2) were doubtless confused; as, e.g., in black-jack. Der. Jack-et, q. v.; also jack-hoots, boots worn as armour for the legs, in the Synclitus, no. 435; black-jack (Nares, s. v. jack).

JACKAL, a kind of wild animal. (Turk.—Pers.). In Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 82, l. 327; Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 115. Spelt Jacal in Sandys, Trav. p. 205.—Turk. çakâl.—Pers. shaghâi; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 383. Cf. Skt. çrghûla-s, a jackal, a fox.

JACKET, a short coat. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.). 'In a blew jacket'—Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, l. 205. Palsgrave has Jacket.—OF. jaquette, 'a jacket, or short and sleeveless country-coat;' Cot. Dimin. of OF. jaque, 'a jack, or coat of mail;' Cot. See Jaok (2). Der. jack-et.

JACOBIN, a friar of the order of St. Dominic. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.). 'Now frere menour, now Jacobyen;' Kom. of the Rose, l. 633.—F. jacobin, 'a Jacobin' Cot.—Low L. Jacobinus, adj. formed from Jacobus, see Jaok (2). B. Hence one of a faction in the French revolution, so called from the Jacobin club, which first met in the hall of the Jacobin friars in Paris, Oct. 1789; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates. C. Also the name of a hooded (friar-like) pigeon; F. jacobin, fem. of jacobin. Der. Jacobin-ic-âl, Jacobin-ism.

JACOBITE, an adherent of James II. (L.—Gk.—Heb.). Formed with suffix -ite (= L. -ita), from Jacobus, James. See Jaok (2). Der. Jacobit-ism.

JACONET, a cotton fabric. (Hind.—Skt.). At first imported from India; spelt Jaconot in 1769. 'Corrupted from Urdu [Hind.] Jagannâth, from Jagannâth (Juggernaut) or Jagannâthpûr in Cuttack, where it was originally manufactured;' N. E. D. See Juggernaut. (Hind. pâr = a town.)

JADE (1), a sorry nag, an old woman. (Scand. I) M.E. jade (MS. Inde), Chaucer, C. T. 14818 (B 4002). Also found as jad, jad (E. D. D.). 'Cf unknown origin; unless it can be a variant of Lowl. Sc. jad, yad, yace, which seems probable; see E. D. D. If so, it is from Icel. jalda, a mare; cf. prov. Swed. jâlða, a mare (Kietz). Der. jade, vb. to tire, spurn, Antony, iii. 1. 34.

JADE (2), a hard dark green stone. (F.—Span.—L.). In Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. Cf. F. jade, Span. jade, jade. Florio's Ital. Dict. gives the form iada. The jade brought from America by the Spaniards was called pietra de iada, because it was believed to cure pain in the side (see Pineda, s. v. pietra); for a similar reason it was called nephritis (from Gk. νεφρός, kidney). Hence F. jade is from Span. iada, also ijar, the flank; cf. Port. ilhad, ilhargu, the flank, side.—L. ilia, pl., the flanks. Körtzing, § 4708.

JAG, a notch, a pointed shred. (F. I) 'Jagge, or dagge of a garment;' Prompt. Parv. p. 255. 'I jagge or cutte a garment;' Jagge, a cutting; Palsgrave. Cf. iaggen, to pierce, strike through; Morle Arthur, 2087. Apparently coined as a parallel form to dog i and as dag may have been (in some of its senses) suggested by F. dagus, a dagger (see Morre Arthur, 2102), so jag may have been suggested by an OF. jagaye*, variant of zagaye or archegaye, an assagai (Cot., Godefroy). Godefroy and Cotgrave quote the dimin. form jagayette; and archigaye occurs in Froissart; see Assagai. Der. jagg-ed, spelt iagde in Gascoigne, Steel Glas, 1161; whence to-iagde, Skelton, Elinour Rummyng, l. 124; jagg-edness, jagg-y.

JAGGERY, a coarse brown sugar. (Port. - Canarese - Skt.) Spelt gagara, Hlaknyit, Voy., ii. pt. 1, 252; -Port. jagara, jagra - Canarese sharkara (H. H. Wilson), -Skt. garbhā. See SUGAR. JAGUAR, a S. American beast of prey. (Brazilian.) In a translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1794. The word is Brazilian; see Buffon, Quadruped. t. iii. pp. 289, 293 (Littré). 'Jagua in the Guarani [Brazilian] language is the common name for tigers and dogs. The generic name for tigers in the Guarani language is Jaguaré.' Clavigero, Hist. of Mexico, tr. by Cullen, ii. 318 (ed. 1787). Cavalcanti gives Brazil, yiuara, a dog, yiuara-eti, yiuara-eti, a jaguar; Granada, in his Vocab. Kiploteense, gives 'jaguar, tigre.' See my Notes on F. Etym., p. 338.

JAIL, another spelling of GAOL, q.v. (F. - L.).

JALAP, the root of a Mexican plant. (Mexican.) 'Jalap, the root of a kind of Indian night-shade.' Phillips Dict., ed. 1706. And in Coles, ed. 1684. Named from Jalapa or Xalapa, in Mexico. From Aztec Xalapan, lit. 'sand by the water'; from xal(it), sand, (at)it, water, and pan, on, near; where -li, -tl are suppressed in composition. See my Notes on F. Etym., p. 332.

JALOUSIE, a blind made with slats sloping upward from without. (F. - L. - Gk.) First in 1824. - F. jalousie, 'jealousie'; also a lattice window, or grate to look through; Cot. So called because it prevents strangers from seeing in. - F. jalous, jealous; see JEALOUS.

JAM (1), to press, squeeze tight. (F.) 'Jam, to squeeze.' Halliwell. 'Jammed in between the rocks;' Swinburne, Travels through Spain (1779), let. 3, p. 8. 'Jam, to render firm by treading, as cattle do land they are foddered on;' Marshall's Rural Economy of Norfolk (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 3). The same word as cham, or champ. 'I chamme a thynng small bytwene my tethe, or champe.' Palgrave. 'Champ [with excesses] p[er] to tread heavily, Warwickshire; to bite or chew, Suffolk;' Halliwell. Whence also: 'Champ, hard, firm, Sussex; id.; i.e. cham or jammed down, as if by being trodden on; and see E. D. D. See CHAMP, which is of imitative origin. ¶ For the common and regular change from ch to j, see JAW, JOWL.

JAM (2), a conserve of fruit boiled with sugar. (F.) In Johnson's Dict.; and in Ashe (1775). Apparently from JAM (1). The following quotation suggests that it may mean a soft substance, resembling what has been chewed. 'And if we have anye stronger meate, it must be chammed afore by the nurse, and so putte into the babe's mouth;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 241 h. See CHAMP.

JAMB, the side-post of a door. (F. - L.). 'Jam of the door, the side-post. This word is also used in the South, where they say the jam of the chimney;' Ray, Collection of North-Country Words, 1691. Spelt jaumbe in Cotgrave. 'Yea, the jambes, posts, principals, and standards, all of the same mettall;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiii. c. 3, § 7. And in Baret (1580). - F. jambe, 'the leg or shank, ... the jumble or side-post of a door;' Cot. Cf. Ital. gamba, Span. gamba, the leg; Port. gambas, pl. the legs. - Late L. gamba, a hoof; Vegetius, i. 56, near the end; 3. 20. From an older form camba, which appears in the book of Cerne (see GAMBOL), and in O. Spanish (Dier, whom see). Closely allied to O. Celtic kambos*, crooked (Stokes-Pick); so that the word was orig. used of the bent leg or the knee. Cf. W. cann, crooked. And see HAM. Der. giamb-enx, leggings, graves, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6, 29; jambeaux, Chaucer, C. T., B. 2065; pl. from an AF. ianbel*; from OF. jambe.

JANE, a twilled cotton cloth; see JEAN.

JANGLE, to sound discordantly, to quarrel. (F. - Scand.) 'A jangling of the bells;' Shak. Per. ii. 1. 45. Hence jangle - to make discordant; 'like sweet bells jangled;' Hamlet, iii. 1. 166. ME. janglen, to quarrel, talk loudly. 'To jangle and to jape;' P. Plowman, B. ii. 94. Spelt gangle, Alisaunder, ed. Weber, 7413. - OF. jangler, 'to jangle, prattle, talk saucily or scurvily;' Cot. β. OF. Scand. origin. - Swed. dial. and Norw. jangla, to quarrel; cf. Du. jangelen, to importune (Sewel), a frequentative form (with suffix -el) from Du. jancken, to howl, yelp as a dog (Sewel). Cf. Low G. jancken, to yelp as a dog; Bremen Wörterb., ii. 636; also Westphal. jänglen, to play out of tune. Of imitative origin; cf. L. gannire, to yelp as a dog, talk loudly. Der. jangl-er, jangl-ing; see JINGLE.

JANIZARY, JANISSARY, a soldier of the old Turkish footguard. (F. - Ital. - Turkish.) Bacon speaks of 'the Janizaries' in Essay 19, Of Empire, near the end. There is an earlier reference to them in Sir T. More, Works, p. 279 f. 'Janissaries, an order of infantry in the Turkish army: originally, young prisoners trained to arms; were first organised by Orcan, about 1330, and remodelled by his son Amurath I. 1360. . . . A firman was issued on 17 June, 1826, abolishing the Janizaries;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. And see Gibbon, Roman Empire, c. 64. - MF. Janissaries, 'the Janizaries;' Cot. - M. Ital. ianizzeri; 'the Turkes gard;' Florio. Of Turkish origin; the word means 'new soldiery' from Turk. yeni, new, and cheri, soldiery (Devic). The f represents saghir noon, a nasal letter peculiar to Turkish. And cheri is from Pers. charik, auxiliary forces (Zenker); see Rich. Dict., p. 537.

JANUARY, the first month of the year. (L.) ME. January (MS. January), Chaucer, C. T. 9267 (E 1393). Englished from L. Januarius, January, named from the god Janus. Janus (for Diūnus*) is allied to Diāna (Brial).

JAPAN, a name given to certain kinds of varnished work. (Japan.) Properly 'Japan work,' where Japan is used adjectivally. Named from the country; see Yule. Pope playfully alludes to 'shining altars of Japan;' Rape of the Lock, iii. 107. Der. Hence japan, verb, to varnish like Japan work, to polish; japann-er, a polisher of shoes, shoe-black, Pope, Imit. of Horace, Epist. i. 1. 156.

JAPE, to jest, mock, befool. (F. - Scand.) Obsolete. In Chaucer, C. T. 1731; P. Plowman, B. i. 67. Apparently suggested by OF. japer (Hatzfeld), F. japper, to bark as a dog, to yap, of imitative origin; but in sense answering rather to OF. jaber (Godefroy), variant of gaber, 'to mock, flout, gull, cheat,' Cot.; which has just the same sense as jape. Rouquert has gap=gab, mockery. - Ital. gabbia, to mock; gabb, mockery. Pavesi gives Lyons dial. japia, foolish stories. See Gabbie, Jauber.

JAR (1), to make a discordant noise, creak, clash, quarrel. (E.) 'All out of ioynt ye iar;' Skelton, Duke of Albany, l. 378. And see Shak. Tem. Shrew, iii. 1. 39, 47; v. 2. 1. Jar stands for an older form char, only found in the prov. E. char, to chide, and in the derivative charken, to creak like a cart or barrow (Prompt. Parv.), also to creak like a door (Gower, C. A. ii. 102); cf. also AS. ceorrian, ceorian, to murmur, MDu. karren, kerren, 'to creak [creak] like a cart,' Hefham; OIIG. kerran, to give a loud harsh sound; cf. JARGON and GARULOUS. Der. jar, sb., spelt jarre, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 3. 23.

JAR (2), an earthen pot. (F. - Span. - Arab.) 'A great jar;' Ben Jonson, tr. of Horace's Art of Poetry; l. 28. And in Cotgrave. The Latinized form jarros occurs in The Earl of Derby's Expeditions (Camden Soc.), p. 228. l. 18. - OF. jare, 'a jarre,' Cot.; mod. F. jarre. [Cf. Span. jarra, a jug, picher; Ital. giarra, giarra, 'a iarre;' Florio.] - Span. jarra, jarro, a jar (Pineda); jarro (Minsheu). - Arab. jarrab, a jar (Devic); cf. Pers. jarrak, a little cruise, or jar; Rich. Dict. p. 504, col. 2. Probably borrowed by the Spanish from the Arabs.

JARGON, a confused talk. (F. - L.) ME. jargon, jergon, chattering. 'And ful of jargon;' very talkative; Chaucer, C. T. 9722 (E 1848). Particularly used of the chattering of birds; Gower, C. A. ii. 264; bk. v. 4103; Rom. of the Rose, 716. - F. jargon, 'gibberish, fustian language,' Cot.; jargonner, 'to speak fustian, jangle, chatter, id.' The word is old, and appears also as OF. gergon, gargon (Godefroy). Cf. Span. gerigonza, jargon; gerigonzar, to speak a jargon; Ital. gergo, jargon. β. All perhaps from an imitative base garg- (cf. garg-le, gurg-le), prob. allied to L. garrire; see JAR (1). This extended form GARG!, answering to a Teut. base KARK, is exactly represented in English by MF. charken, to creak as a cart, and the AS. ceorrian, to gnash the teeth (Alfred's Homilies, i. 132). An attenuated form of charken is the ME. chirken, to chirp, to make a harsh noise. 'Al ful of chirking [-jargon] was that sory p[er]le;' Chaucer, C. T. 2006 (A 2004).

JARGONELLE, a variety of pear. (F. - Ital. - Arab. - Pers.) In Johnson's Dict. - F. jargonelle, a variety of pear, very stony or gritty (Littré). Formed (according to Littré) as a dimin. from F. jargon, a yellow diamond, a small stone. - Ital. giargone, a sort of yellow diamond; E. zircon. - Arab. zargūn. - Pers. zargūn, gold-coloured, from zar, gold, and gūn, colour; see Devic, Supp. to Littré, and Yule.

JASEY, JAZY, a wig made of worsted or tow. (Jersey.) 'The old gentleman in the flaxen jazy;' Scott, Redgauntlet, ch. xxi [not xx]. For Jersey, because made of Jersey yarn; see Forby, Vocab. of E. Anglia. See Jersey.

JASMINE, JESSAMINE, a genus of plants. (F. - Pers.) Spelt jasmine, jessamine, jessamine, jesse, in Cotgrave. Milton has jessamine, P. L. iv. 698; Lycidas, 143. The spelling jasmine agrees with MF. jasmine; Cot. Jessamine, jessamine answer to the Ital. forms gesmino, gelsamino. The Span. form is jazmin. All are from Pers. yāsmīn, jasmine; of which another form is yāsmīn, jessamine; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1703; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 715.

JASPER, a precious stone. (F.—L.—Gk.—Arab.) ME. Iaspere, Iaspere. 'What is better than gold: Iaspere!' Chaucer, C. T., Tale of Melibeus, B 2297. Also spelt Iaspis, Gower, C. A. iii. 112; bk. vii. 841.—OF. jaspere (see Littre), an occasional spelling of OF. and F. jaspé, 'a jasper stone;' Cot. [Thus the r is an addition, and no real part of the word.]—L. iaspides, acc. of iaspis, a jasper.—Gk. iaspis.—Arab. yashb, yashf, also spelt yashb, jasper; whence Pers. yashf, yashf, jasper; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1707; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 719. Cf. Heb. yashpheh, a jasper.

JAUNDICE, a disease caused by bile. (F.—L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 1. 85. The d is purely excrement, as commonly in F. words after n; cf. sound from F. son. ME. Jaunys, Pricke of Conscience, l. 700; spelt jaundys, Trivisa, ii. 113; further corrupted to jaundres, in a 15th-cent. tr. of Higden, on the same page as the last reference.—OF. (and F.) jaunisse, so spelt in the 13th cent. (Littre); but Cot. gives it as jaunisse, 'the jaundices.' Formed with suffix -isse (= L. -itia) from F. jaune, yellow; because the disease is characterized by yellowness of the skin and eyes. The oldest spelling of jaune is jalne (Littre).—L. galbinus, also galbinius, greenish yellow.—L. galbus, yellow. The likeness of L. galbus to G. gelb is so close as to suggest that it is of Teutonic origin; the true L. form being helius. See Yellow. Der. jaundice-d.

JAUNT, a tiring ramble, an excursion. (F.) It would seem from the exx. in Shak. that jaunt and jaunce are equivalent terms. Jaunt is a wild and fatiguing ramble, Romeo, ii. 5. 26; where another reading is jauncer; cf. geances, fatiguing journeys, in Ben Jonson, A Tale of a Tub, A. ii. (Hills). It also means to ramble, rove, ii. 5. 53, where another reading for jaunting is jaunting. Again, Shak. has: 'Spurred, galled, and tired by jaunting Bolingbroke,' i.e. hard-riding Bolingbroke. This jaunce is from ME. jauncer, of which Cotgrave says: 'Jauncer un cheval, to stirre a horse in the stable till he sweat with-all, or as our jaunt;' an old word.' Not found in OF. Cf. E. dial. jankit, jaded; Swed. dial. jank, useless trouble, slow motion (Kietz); Norw. jaunka, to stagger. Der. jaunt, vb., to ramble. (I suggest that jaunt arose from jaunts, a corrupt form of jaunce, taken as a plural form.)

JAUNTY, JANTY, genteel, stylish, fantastical. (F.—L.) 'We owe most of our jaunty fashions now in vogue to some alert beau among them' [the French]; Guardian, no. 149; dated 1713. As if formed with suffix -y from the verb jaunt, to ramble idly about; but formerly jaunt or jaunte, also jaunter, variants of gentel, and used in the same sense. See therefore Genteel. β. Exx.: 'This jaunte sleightness to the French we owe;' T. Shadwell, Timon, p. 71 (1688). 'A jauntly [genteel] part of the town;' Spectator, no. 503. 'Turn you about on your heel with a jauntie air;' Farquhar, The Inconstant, Act. i. Cf. also 'Sae jimpy lae'd her gently waist;' Burns, Bonnie Ann. Der. jaunt-i-ness, Spectator, no. 530.

JAVELIN, a kind of spear or dart. (F.—C.) Used in the sense of hoar-spear, Shak., Venus, 616. 'Javelyn, a spear, iauelut;' Palsgrave.—MF. javelin, m., javeline, f., 'a javeling, a weapon of a size between the pike and partizan;' Cot. Cf. MF. javelot, 'a gleave, dart, or small javelin;' Cot. Also Span. javalina, Ital. giavellotto, a javelin. β. Perhaps of Celtic origin. The Breton gavlin and gavloid are merely borrowed from the French; but the origin is shown by the Irish gabhlá, a spear, lance; gabhlach, forked, divided, peaked, pointed; gabhlán, a branch, a fork of a tree; gabhlóg, any forked piece of timber; gabhal, (Irish gabul, a fork. Cf. Gael. gabhal, a fork; gabhlach, forked, pronged; gabhlóg, a small fork, two-pronged instrument; gabhlán, a prong, small fork, weeding-hook. Also W. gylf, a fork; gafuch, a fork, a dart. See Gaff. γ. Hence may also be explained the ME. gavelok, a javelin, dart, in King Alisaunder, l. 1620; AS. gafeluc, Voc. 143. 6; also MIG. gabilit, a javelin (from F.). See Thurneysen, p. 63; Machain, s. v. gabhal.

JAW, part of the mouth. (F.—L.) ME. jowe; 'Jowe or chekebone, Mandibula;' Prompt. Parv. 'jit drow [drew] I him out of le Jowes, scilicet faucibus, of hem pat gapeden;' Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4. l. 70. 'Pe ouer tawe' = the upper jaw, Trivisa, iii. 109; with various readings, jowe, genoue.—AF. jowe, glossed 'cheek;' W. de Libbesworth, in Wright's Voc. i. p. 145; Norm. dial. joe, Gurnsey jaw (Moisy); F. jowe, the cheek; OF. Joe (with o for later ou), Chanson de Roland, l. 3921; corresponding to Ital. gola, 'a cheek, a jaw' (Florio), Prov. gauta; which Diez derives from Late L. gawata, L. gabata, a kind of platter, a bowl; from the rounding of the jaw. Körting, § 4103. Cf. Palsgrave has chawebone; this alteration to chaw is later, and due to association with the verb to chew. Somewhat similar is the MDu. kousen, the cavity of the mouth, from MDu. kousen (Du. kausen), to chew; Kilian. Der. jaw-bone, Bible, 1551, Julg. xv. 15; jaw-teeth; jaw-fallen, Fuller, Worthies, Essex (R.); lantern-jaw-ed.

JAY, a bird with gay plumage. (F.—OHG.) ME. jay, Jay; Chaucer, C. T. 644; King Alisaunder, l. 142.—MF. jay (older spellings gay, gai), a jay; Cot. Mod. F. geai; Gascon gai; Norm. dial. gai. So also Span. gajo, a jay, gaya, a magpie. β. Hardly from OHG. gāhi (MHG. gache, G. jäh), adj., quick, lively (Kluge). But rather allied to gay, OF. gai; and to be derived from OHG. wīhi, fine, beautiful. Körting, § 1718.

JEALOUS, suspicious of rivalry, tender of honour. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. jalous, Chaucer, C. T. 1331 (A 1329). Earlier gelus, Ancren Riwle, p. 90, where it occurs to translate L. zelotes.—OF. jalous, later jaloux, 'jealous;' Cot. Cf. Ital. geloso, Span. zeloso, jealous.—Late L. zelōsus, full of zeal; related to L. zelōtes, one who is jealous. —L. zelus, zeal.—Gk. ζῆλος, zeal; see Zeal. Der. jealous-ly; jealous-y, ME. jalousye, Chaucer, C. T. 12300 (C 366), from F. jalousie; also jalousie, q. v. Doublet, jealous.

JEAN, JANE, a twilled cotton cloth. (F.—Ital.) 'Gene fustian;' in 1589; H. Hall, Society in Eliz. Age, p. 210. Cf. ME. Gene, Genoa; spelt Geane in The Paston Letters, ii. 293.—MF. Genes, Genoa.—Ital. Genova, Genoa; whence it was brought.

JEER, to mock, scoff. (F.—L.?) In Shak. Com. Errors, ii. 2. 22. 'He saw her toy, and gibe, and gear;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 21. 'There you named the famous jeer. That ever jeered in Rome or Athens;' Beaumont and Fletcher, Nice Valour, v. 1 (Soug). It seems to have been regarded as a foreign word; see Ben Jonson, Staple of News, iv. 1. 5: 'Let's jeer a little. Jeer? what's that? Expect, sir, i.e. wait a bit, and you will find out. Not found before 1553. β. The origin of the word is doubtful. If it were a slang term, it might be a corruption of Du. scheren, scheren. From the Du. gek, a fool, and scheren, to shear, was formed the phrase den gek scheeren (lit. to shear the fool), to mock, jeer, make a fool of one. Soon these words were run together, and the word gekscheren was used in the sense of jeering. See Sewel's Du. Dict., which gives the above forms, as well as the sb. gekscheren, 'a jeering, fooling, jesting: Ik lant my niet gekscheren, I will not be trifled with.' This is still preserved in mod. Du. gekscheren, to jest, banter, and in the phrase het is geen gekscheren, it is no laughing matter. The phrase was also used as scheren den gek, to play the fool; whence simply scheren, 'to gibe, or to jest' (Hexham). γ. But it accords better with phonetic laws to derive it from OF. (or AF.) giere, an occasional variant of OF. chiere, whence E. cheer. Godefroy has: 'S'aucuns hons te fait d'amere giere,' if any man makes you bitter cheer (jeers at you). Again, in his Supplement: 'Mas faites balle, giere, ioie, solas, et ris, but dance, make cheer and joy, and pleasure, and laughter. From the phr. faire male chere, to make ill cheer, to frown upon. See Cheer. Cf. My Note: Phil. Soc. Trans., 1902. Der. jeer, sb., Oth. iv. 1. 83.

JEHOVAH, the chief Hebrew name of the Deity. (Heb.) In Exod. vi. 3.—Heb. yahowāh, or more correctly yahwē (not pronounced); see article on Jehovah in the Concise Dict. of the Bible.

JEJUNE, hungry, meagre, empty. (L.) 'We discourse jejunely, and falsely, and unprofitably;' Bp. Taylor, pref. to Great Exemplar.—L. ieiūnus, fasting, hungry, dry, barren, trifling, poor. Of uncertain origin. Der. jejune-ly, jejune-ness.

JELLY, anything gelatinous, the juice of fruit boiled with sugar. (F.—L.) In Hamlet, i. 2. 205. ME. Jely; Lydgate, Hors, Shepe, and Goos; l. 70. Hence geli-toth; Earl of Derby's Expeditions (Camd. Soc.), p. 234. Sometimes spelt gelly.—F. gelée, 'a frost, also gelly;' Cot. Properly the fem. form of gelf, frozen, pp. of geler, 'to freeze, to thicken or congeal with cold;' Cot.—L. gelāre, to congeal.—L. gelu, frost. See Gelatine, Gelid, Congeal. Der. jelly-fish.

JEMADAR, a native officer in a sepoy regiment. (Hind.—Arab. and Pers.) See Yule.—Hind. jamā dār, a jemadar. Arab. jamā dār, a body of men (from Arab. root jamā'a, he collected); and Pers. dār, a holder, master. See N. E. D.; and Rich. Dict., pp. 518, 646.

JENNET, GENNET, a small Spanish horse. (F.—Span.—Arab.) Jennets; Shak. Oth. i. 1. 113. 'A breeding jennet;' Shak. Venus, 260. 'We have xx. thousand of other mounted on gennettes;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 236. 'Jennettes of Spayne;' Squyry of Lowe Degre, l. 749.—MF. genette, 'a genet, or Spanish horse;' Cot.—Span. ginele, a nag; but the orig. sense was a horse-soldier, esp. a light-armed horse-soldier. Minshew (1623) has: 'ginele, a light horseman that rideth a la ginele'; also 'evagalar a la ginele, to ride with the legs crossed up in short stirrups, with a target and a ginnel lance.' Of Moorish origin. The word is traced by Dozy (Glos. p. 276) to Arab. zenāta, a tribe of Barbary celebrated for its cavalry; see Devic, Suppl. to Littre.

JENNETING, an early apple. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.) 'In July come . . . plumes in fruit, jenniting, quaddins;' Bacon, Essay 46, Of Gardens. 'Contrarivise, pomgranet-trees, fig-trees, and apple-trees, lue a very short time; and of these, the hastic kind or jenniting, continue nothing so large as those that bear and ripen later;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xvi. c. 44. So called because they were ripe about St. John's day (June 24) in France and Italy; but in England sometimes later. See Hogg's Fruit Annual, pp. 361, 522. Cf. per- Jonettes [Jeannot pears] in P. Plowman, C. xiii. 221, and the note. Sometimes spelt geniton (N. E. D.). = F. Jeannot, Jeannet; from Jeau, John. Cotgrave has: 'Pomme de S. Jean, or Hasivel, a soon ripe apple called the St. John's apple.' Cf. G. Johannisappel, 'John apple, geniting'; Flügel. See Jack (1). ¶ Commonly said to be a corruption of June-eating apples!

JEOPARDY, hazard, peril, danger. (F.—L.) ME. jupartie, later jeopardy or jeopardy. 'Hath lost his own good thurgh jupartie'; Chaucer, C. T. 16211 (G 743). The various readings in this line are Iupartie, Iopardy, Iopardye, and Iopardye. Spelt Iupartie, Chaucer, Triluis, ii. 465. The original sense was a game in which the chances are even, a game of hazard, hence hazard or chance; as in: 'To putte that sikernes in jupartie = to put in hazard that which is secure; Triluis, iv. 1512. = OF. jeu parti, lit. a divided game. 'A jeu parti is properly a game, in which the chances are exactly even. See Froissart, v. i. c. 234; 'Ils n'estoient pas à jeu parti contre les François (= for they were unequal in numbers to the French) (Johnes' translation)'; and vol. ii. c. 9, si nous les voyons à jeu parti. From hence it signifies anything uncertain or hazardous. In the old French poetry, the discussion of a problem, where much might be said on both sides, was called a jeu parti. See Poésies du Roy de Navarre, chanson xviii. — Tyrrwhitt's note to Chaucer, C. T. 16211. — Late L. iocus partitus, an alternative, a phrase used when a choice was given, of choosing one side or the other; see Ducange. = L. iocus, a joke, jest, sport, play, game; and partitus, divided, pp. of partiri, to part, from parti, stem of pars, a part. See Joke and Part. Der. jeopard, to hazard (coined by dropping -y), Judges, v. 18, ME. Iupartien, Chaucer, Triluis, iv. 1566; jeopardie, vb.; also jeopard-ous, spelt jeopardous in Hall's Chron. Hen. VIII, an. 25, § 10; jeopardously. ¶ Observe the AF. diphthong eo, representing the F. eu.

JERBOA, a small rodent quadruped. (Arabic.) Mentioned in an E. translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792. The animal takes its name from the strong muscles in its hind legs. = Arab. yarbū, '(1) the flesh of the back or loins, an oblique descending muscle; (2) the jerboa, an animal much resembling the dormouse, which makes prodigious bounds by means of its long hind legs; see Nat. Hist. of Aleppo, by Russell'; Rich. Pers. Diet. p. 1705, col. 2.

JERRED, JERID, a wooden javelin, used in a game. (Arab.) 'The hurl'd on high jerred.' Byron, Giaour, ix. = Arab. jarid, a palm-branch stripped of its leaves, a lance. Rich. Diet., p. 505.

JERK, to give a sudden movement, throw with a quick action. (E.) Cotgrave has: 'Pouetter, to scourge, lash, yerke, or jerke.' In Shak. as a sb., J. L. L. iv. 2. 129. 'A yerke, verb.' Levens, ed. 1570. 'With that which yerks [lashes] the hams of every jade'; pp. Hall, Satires, b. iii. sat. 5, l. 26. Lowland Sc. yerke, to beat, strike smartly; a smart blow. 'To yerke or gerke'; Minshew, ed. 1627. 'A girke or yerke of a rod or whip'; Minshew's Span. Diet. (E. index). Halliwell also gives: 'Girk, a rod; also, to beat. β. Another form is jerit. Cotgrave has: 'Attainte, a reach, hit, blow, stroke, . . . a gentle nip, quip, or jerit, a sleight gird, or taxation'. γ. Moreover, the words jerit and gird were regarded as equivalent; thus Sherwood has, in his index to Cotgrave: 'A jerit or gird, Attainte'. The words jerke, yerke, and gird are probably all connected, and all had once the same meaning, viz. to strike, esp. with a whip or rod. δ. The only one of these three forms found in ME. is girden, girden, to strike; see girden in Strattmann. See Gird (2). ¶ It may be added that the usual meaning of yerke in old authors is to whip, to lash; as partly shown above. Der. yerke, sb.

JERKED BEEF, dried beef. (Peruvian.) The beef thus called is cut into thin slices and dried in the sun to preserve it. The process is explained in Capt. Basil Hall's Extracts from a Journal written on the coasts of Chili, Peru, and Mexico, vol. i. c. 4. The name is a singular corruption of charqui, the S. American name for it, which is a Peruvian word. 'The male deer and some of the coarser kind of the Peruvian sheep were slaughtered; . . . and their flesh, cut into thin slices, was distributed among the people, who converted it into charqui, the dried meat of the country'; Prescott, Conquest of Peru, c. v. β. An earlier form is jerkin beef. 'Their fish and flesh they boyle . . . or broyle . . . or else . . . putting it on a spit, they turne first the one side, then the other, till it be as drie as their ierkin beefe in the West Indies'; Capt. J. Smith, Works, ed. Arber, p. 63. = Peruv. charqui, to make jerked (or hung) beef. Cf. Peruv. charqui, sb., a slice of flesh or hung beef or dried beef. Still common in the form charqui, sb., dried flesh, unsalted, in long strips; Granada, Vocabulario Rioplatense. See my Notes on Eng. Etym., p. 343.

JURKIN, a jacket, short coat. (Low G.) 'With Dutchkin doublets, and with Irkens iaggde'; Gascoigne, Steel Glass, l. 1161 (in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skent). Similar forms are Westphal. jürken, a kind of overcoat; EFries. jurken, a child's frock. The origin is unknown; but perhaps it is from some name. Thus under EFries. Djurs, Koolman notes that EFries. Djurko, Djurko is their form of

Du. Dirk (G. Dirtrich, Theodoric), whence also the surnames Djurken and Jurken. Jurkin may represent Djurken, whilst the forms jürken (above) may come from jurken; so also may the late Du. jurk, a frock (Sewel). β. I prefer the solution suggested by Berg-haus; that Low G. Juri is a pet name for George, and that it also takes the dimin. form Jürken, and in Hamburg Jürken; cf. OF. Georget, a sort of casaque (Godfrey). And cf. E. Jacket (Athenaeum Jan. 10, 1903); Phil. Soc. Trans., 1903, p. 153.

JERSEY, fine wool, a woollen jacket. (Jersey.) 'Jersey, the finest wooll taken from other sorts of wooll, by combing it'; Kersey, ed. 1715. Lit. 'Jersey wool', and named from Jersey, one of the Channel Islands. On the termination -ey, meaning 'island', see Island. Of Scand. origin.

JERUSALEM ARTICHOKE, a kind of sunflower. (Ital.—L.) 'There is a soup called Palestine soup. It is made, I believe, of artichokes called Jerusalem artichokes, but the Jerusalem artichoke is so called from a mere misunderstanding. The artichoke, being a kind of sun-flower, was called in Italian girasole, from the Latin gyrus, circle, and sol, sun. Hence Jerusalem artichokes and Palestine soups! Max Müller, Lect. on Language, 8th ed. ii. 404. — Ital. girasole, a sun-flower. — Ital. girare, to turn; and sole, sun. — L. gyrāre, to turn round, from gyrus = Gk. γῦρος, a circle; and solēn, acc. of sol, sun. See Gyro and Solar.

JESSAMINE, the same as Jasmine, q. v.

JESSES, straps of leather or silk, with which hawks were tied by the legs. (F.—L.) In Shak. Oth. iii. 3. 261. 'That like an hawk, which feeling herself freed From bels and jesses which did let her flight'; Spenser, F. Q. vi. 4. 19. 'Jesses for a hawk, get'; Palgrave. ME. ges, both s. and pl. 'Me ofhast thane uogel be the ges', one restrains the bird by the jess; Aenbite of Inwyt, p. 254. 'Gesse made of leder' [leather]; Book of St. Albans, fol. b. 5, back. = OF. ges, gies, nom., get, giel, acc.; pl. ges, gies (Godefroy, s. v. giel); MF. jeets, pl. 'Gect, a cast or throw, as at dice; les jeets d'un oiseau, a hawk's jesses'; Cot. So called from their use in letting the hawk fly. = L. iactus, noni., a cast, throw (acc. iactum). = L. iactus, pp. of iacere, to throw. Cf. also OF. jeter, MF. jeter, 'to cast, hurl'; id. = L. iactare, to hurl, throw, frequentative of iacere, to throw. See Jet (1).

JEST, a joke, fun. (F.—L.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 241. Orig. a story, tale. ME. geste, a story, a form of composition in which tales were recited. 'Lat see wher [whether] thou canst tellen aught in geste'; Chaucer, C. T. 13861 (B 212). 'I cannot geste' = I cannot tell tales like a gestour, or professed tale-teller; id. 17354 (I 43). Geste = a tale, a saying; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 277. = OF. geste, an exploit, a history of exploits, romance, tale; chansons d'geste, heroic poems; see Burguy. = L. gesta, used for res gesta, a deed, exploit, lit. 'a thing performed'; or from L. gesta, neut. pl. = L. gestus, pp. of gerere, to carry on, do, perform. See Gesture. Der. jest, vb., jesting-ly; also jest-er = ME. gestour, a reciter of tales, as in: 'And gestours for to tellen tales', Chaucer, C. T. 13775 (B 2036). From L. gerere are also formed gest-ure, gest-i-cu-late, con-gest-ion, di-gest, in-di-gest-ion, sug-gest, re-gist-er; also bell-ger-ent, con-ger-ies, ex-ger-ate.

JESUIT, one of the Society of Jesus. (F.—Span.—L.—Gk.—Heb.) In Cotgrave. The order was founded in 1534 by Ignatius Loyola; see Haydn, Dict. of Dates. = MF. Jesuite, 'a Jesuite'; Cot. = Span. Jesuita (the order being of Spanish foundation). Formed with suffix -ita = L. ita as in L. erem-ita. (Gk. -ιτης as in ἐπιτιτης, a hermit from L. hēsā, for hēsū, q. v. Der. jessuit-ic, jessuit-ical, jessuit-ic-al-ly, jessuit-ism; all words with a sinister meaning, craft being commonly attributed to the Jesuits.

JESUS, the Saviour of mankind. (L.—Gk.—Heb.) In Wyclif's Bible. = L. Iesus (Vulgate). = Gk. Ἰησοῦς. = Heb. Yeshūa (Jeshua, Nehem. vii. 17, a later form of Joshua); contracted form of Yehōshūa (Jehoshua, Numb. xiii. 16), signifying 'Jehovah is salvation' or 'Saviour'. = Heb. root yāsha, to be large; in the Hiphil conjugation, to save. Der. Jeshū, q. v. Doublets, Jeshua, Jeshua, Jeshua. In ME. commonly written in a contracted form (Ihs), which by editors is often printed Jhesus. This is really an error, the h standing for the Gk. H (long ē), so that 'Ihs' = Iesus. So also 'Ihu' = Iesu. In Gk. capitals, it is ΙΗC, where H = long ē and C = s, being a form of the Gk. sigma; the mark above signifying that the form is contracted. In later times ΙΗC became ΙΗΣ. Lastly (the h being misunderstood) the ingenious fiction arose that IHS meant Iesus Hominum Salvator = Jesus Saviour of Mankind. The mark, being then unmeaning, was turned into a little cross, as on modern altarcloths.

JET (1), to throw out, fling about, spout. (F.—L.) In Tudor-English it commonly means to fling about the body, to strut about, to stalk about proudly. 'How he jets under his advanced plumes'; Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 36. 'Thou must ye stately goe, jetting up and downe';

Ralph Roister Doister, A. iii. sc. 3. l. 121 (In Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat). ME. gaiten, istien; see Prompt. Parv. pp. 192, 258, and Way's notes; also Hoccleve, De Regimine Principum, 428. 'I istie, I make a countenance with my legges, in me laggies; I istie with faycon and countenance to sette forthe my selfe, is bragges,' Palgrave. —OF. jeter, also getter, 'to cast, hurl, throw, fling, dart or send out violently, put or push forth.' Cot. —L. istare, to fling, frequent of istare, to throw; whence istare est, to boast. Der. jet, sb., ME. gei, in early use in the sense of 'fashion'; cf. Get, or manner of costume, Modus, consuetudo, Prompt. Parv. 'al of the newe Jet' —all in the new fashion, Chaucer, C. T. 684 (A 682); 'this answers to OF. jet or get (mod. F. jet), which Cot. explains by 'a cast or throw, as at dice.' [The mod. sense of jet is a spout of water, as in Pope, Dunciad, ii. 177.] Hence also jettmen, Spectator, no. 412, for Ital. getto, a jet, by confusion with F. jet d'eau = a spout of water, a fountain (where F. eau = L. aqua, water). Also jet-sam, q. v., jett-er, q. v. From L. iacere (pp. actus) are numerous derivatives; as, object, ad-ject, con-ject, de-ject, e-ject, in-ject, inter-ject, ob-ject, re-ject, sub-ject; also ad-jacent, circum-jacent, sub-jacent, e-jaculate; also amicus (1), agitation, gist, juist, juices.

JET (2), a black mine or jet, used for ornaments. (F. —L. —Gk.). His billie was blak, and as the jet it shoon; Chaucer, C. T. 14867 (B 4051). —OF. juist (Hartfeld, s. v. juist), juist (Godefroy); ME. jet, juet; Cot. —L. gagula, acc. of gagula, jet (whence the forms gagel, juet, jet in successive order of development); see Trevisa, ii. 17, where the L. has gagula. Trevisa has gagula, and the later E. version has istie. Described in Pliny, xxv. 19. —(Gk. γερύρας, jet; so called from γέρων, a town in Lydia, in the S. of Asia Minor. Der. jet-black; jett-vr, Chyman, tr. of Homer, II. ii. 629; jett-i-ness.

JETSAM, JETSON, JETTISON, things thrown overboard from a ship. (F. —L.). 'Jeton is a thing cast out of the ship, being in danger of wreck, and beaten to the shore by the waters, or cast on the shore by mariners; Coke, vol. vi. fol. 106. a.' Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674 (s. v. jetsam); jetson, in Minshew. —AF. getson, Black Book of the Admiralty, l. 96, 170; OF. getson (Godefroy). —L. iaculationem, acc., a casting; —L. istare, to cast out. Cf. F. faire le jet, to throw the lading of a ship overboard; Cot. See JET (1).

JETTY, a projection, a kind of pier. (F. —L. —Lit. 'thrown out.' ME. gettey; Lydgate, Troy-book, fol. N. i. back, col. 2, l. 2 (bk. ii. c. 2). The same as JUTTY, q. v. —OF. gette, ME. jette, 'a cast, hurl, throw, fling, also a jetty or jutting; also, the bank of a ditch, or the earth cast out when it is made'; Cot. Properly the fem. of the pp. of OF. geter, F. jeter, to throw. See JET (1).

JEW, a Hebrew. (F. —L. —Gk. —Heb.). ME. iewes, pl. Jews; Chaucer, C. T. 12409 (C 475); earlier giwes, Giuws, Ancrén Riwle, p. 106. —AF. ieu, ieu, a Jew; F. juif; Cotgrave. —Late L. Judeum, acc. of Judeus. —Gk. Ιουδαίος, an inhabitant of Judaea. —Gk. Ιουδαίος, Judaea. —Heb. Yehudah, Judah, son of Jacob; lit. 'celebrated' or 'illustrious'. —Heb. root yadah, to throw; in the Hithpael conjugation, to praise, celebrate. Der. jew-ess (with F. suffix); jew-isk; jew-ry, ME. Jewerie, Chaucer, C. T. 13419 (B 1679), earlier Jiuerie, Ancrén Riwle, p. 394, signifying 'a Jew's district, from OF. Juierie (Littre) —mod. F. Juiverie. Also jew-karp, Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 665, l. 21, sometimes called jew-trump, as in Beaumont and Fletcher, Humorous Lieutenant, A. v. sc. 2. l. 10; a name given in derision, prob. with reference to the harp of David.

JEWELL, a precious stone, valuable ornament. (F. —L.) ME. iouel, Ayenbite of Inwynt, p. 112, l. 6; iuel, id. p. 77, l. 1. —AF. iuel, iouel; OF. juel, juel, jewel (Godefroy); later jouel, 'a jewel'; Cot. Origin disputed; either (1) from Late L. iocula, usually in pl. iocula, jewels (lit. trinkets), from L. iocari, to play (OF. joer, jouer). —L. iocus, play; see JOKE. Or (2) a dimin. (with suffix -el) of OF. and F. joie, joy, pleasure; so that the sense is 'a little joy'; i. e. a toy, trinket. Cf. Span. joya, a jewel, trinket, dimin. of joya, a jewel, present (answering in form to F. joie, though not used in same sense). Also Ital. gioiello, in jewel, dimin. of gioia, (1) joy, (2) a jewel. See further under JOY. The use of Span. joya and Ital. gioia in the sense of 'jewel' supports the latter etymology; hence some think that the word was misunderstood in the middle ages, so that 'jewel' was translated into Late L. in the form joelle, preserving the sense of 'toy', but missing the etymology, which was thought to be from L. iocus instead of from gnodium, the sense of the two words being not very different. See Toynbee, §§ 75, 143; Körtting, §§ 4188, 5182. Der. jewell-er, with which cf. MF. joyallier, 'a jeweller'; Cot.; jewellery or jewel-ry, with which cf. MF. joyaulerie, 'jewelling, the trade or mystery of jewelling', Cot.

JIB (1), the foremost sail of a ship. (Du.). 'Jib, the foremost sail of a ship,' Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. First, spelt gibb, in 1661. Perhaps so called because really shifted from side to side; the sb. being derived from the verb. See JIB (2). Der. jib-boom (Ash).

JIB (2), to shift a sail from side to side. (Du.). 'Jib, to shift the boom-sail from one side of the mast to the other;' Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. 'To jib round the sail;' Cook, Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 3 (R.). Also spelt jibe. 'Jibbing, shifting the boom-sail from one side of the mast to the other (Falconer)'; id. Also spelt gybe. 'Gybing, the act of shifting the boom-sail, &c.; id.; cf. Dan. gybbe, 'to gybe, a naut. term'; Ferrall (from E. or Du.). —Du. gijpen (of sails), to turn suddenly; Calisch. Sewel gives 'Gyben, 't overlaan den zeylen (the overturning of a sail) a sail's being turned over by an eddy wind.' Cf. Jutland gippe, to shift the sails; Swed. dial. gippe, verb, used of a sudden movement or jerk; thus, if a man stands on the lower end of a slanting plank, and a sudden weight falls on the upper end and tips it up, he is gippad, i. e. jerked up; Reitz. Cf. Swed. guppe, to move up and down, to rock. And see GIBBET.

JIB (3), to move restively, as a horse. (F. —Scand.). 'Jib, said of a draught-horse that goes backwards instead of forwards;' Halliwell. A very early use of a compound from this verb occurs in ME. regibben, to kick. 'Hit regibbith anon, ase ut kelf and idel' — it kicks back again, like a fat and idle calf; Ancrén Riwle, p. 128. Cf. 'Wynsyng of an horse, regibment;' Palgrave. —OF. giber, 'se débattre des pieds et des mains, agiter, lutter', i. e. to struggle with the hands and feet, Roquefort; giber, to shake (Godefroy). Whence OF. regiber (Roquefort), mod. F. regimber, to kick; accounting for the ME. regibben. Cf. also OF. giper, to kick (as a horse); Godefroy; Burgundy gipai, to gambol (Mignard). β. OF. Scand. origin; cf. Swed. dial. gippa, to jerk. See JIB (2).

JIBBAH, the same as Jubbah. (Arab.) See JUPON.

JIBE, the same as Gibe, q. v. (Scand.).

JIG, a lively tune or dance. (F. —MHG.). As sb. in Shak. Much Ado, ii. 1. 77; Hamlet, ii. 2. 522. As vb. Hamlet, iii. 1. 150. —OF. gige, gigue, a sort of wind instrument, a kind of dance (Roquefort); but it was rather a stringed instrument, as noted by Littre and Burguy; which may be verified by consulting Dante's use of the Ital. giga in Paradiso, iv. 118. Cf. Norm. dial. giguer, to dance (Moisy); Span. giga, a jig, lively tune or dance; Port. giga, a jig; Ital. giga, 'a fiddle, a croud, a kit, a violin' (Florio). —MHG. gige, mod. G. grige, a fiddle. Der. jig, verb, jig-maker, Hamlet, iii. 2. 131. Doublet, gig, q. v.

JILT, a flirt, inconstant woman. (L.). 'Where dilatory fortune plays the jilt;' Otway, The Orphan, i. 1. 66. 'And who is jilted for another's sake;' Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 530. A contraction of jillett. 'A jillett brak his heart at last'; Burns, On a Scotch Bard, Gone to the W. Indies, st. 6. A diminutive (with suffix -el) of jill, a personal name, but used in the same sense as jilt or flirt. Hence the compounds flirt-gill, Romeo, ii. 4. 162; and Jill-Gillian, Beaumont and Fletcher, The Chances, iii. 1. (Landlady). Cf. 'Bagasse, a baggage, queance, jill, punke, flirt'; Cot. Gill is short for Gillian, i. e. Juliana; and see GILL (4). See Gillott, Gillett, in Bardsley, Dict. of Surnames. Der. jilt, verb.

JINGLE, to make a clinking sound. (F.) ME. gingelen, ginglen; Chaucer, C. T. 170. A frequentative verb from the base jing, by-form of prov. E. chink, to chink, to jingle, allied to and probably the same word as chink, a word of imitative origin; see CHINK (2). A fuller form appears in jangle; hence Palgrave has gyngle-geangle; see JANGLE. Der. jingle, sb.

JINN, a demon. (Arab.) Formed from the Arab. pl. jinnat (f), demons; so that the form is properly a plural. The Arab. sing. is jinni, jinniy, which is Englished as jinn or (more frequently) as genie (as if connected with L. genius).

JINRIKSHA, a light two-wheeled vehicle drawn by one or more men. (Japan.) See Jennyrickshaw in Yule. —Japan. jinnriksha; from jinn, a man; riki, strength; and sha, a car. 'A car drawn by strength of man.'

JOB (1), to peck with the beak, as a bird. (F. ?) Bequade, a peck, job, or bob with a beak; Cot. 'Jobbny wythe the bylle' — to job with the beak; Prompt. Parv. Prob. of imitative origin; cf. chap, dab, bob. Cf. Irish and Gael. gab, the beak or bill of a bird.

JOB (2), a small piece of work. (F. —C. ?) In Pope, Epilogue to Satires, l. 104; id. 40; Donne versified, Sat. iv. 142. He also has the verb; 'And judges job.' Moral Essays, to Bathurst, 147. Spelt jobb in Kersey, ed. 1715. First in 1627. It seems to be equivalent to gab. 'Gab, a portion, a lump; hence the phrase, to work by the gab;' Halliwell. Dimin. forms are seen in: 'Gobbet, a morsel, a bit; a large block of stone is still called a gobbet by workmen;' Halliwell. 'Gobbet, gobbet, a small load, generally of hay or straw, Oxfordshire'; id. And see E. D. D. β. In earlier authors, only a gobbet is found; ME. guber, Chaucer, C. T. 698. —OF. gab, lit. a mouthful. 'L'avalla tout de gab, at one gulp, or as one gobbet, he swallowed it;' Cot. Cf. gobber, 'to ravine, devour, swallow great morsels, let down whole gobbets'; Cot. OF. Celtic origin; cf. Gael. and Irish gab, the bill or beak of a bird, also, ludicrously, the mouth. See Gobbet, and Job (1). Der. job, verb; jobb-er, jobb-ry.

JOCKEY, a man who rides a race-horse. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.) As jockins use; Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. ii. l. 6 from end. 'Whose jockey-rider is all spurs'; id. pt. iii. c. ii. last line. A Northern E. pronunciation of Jackey, dimin. of Jack as a personal name; see Jack (1). A name given to the lads who act as grooms and riders. Jocky, for Jack, occurs in Skelton, Works, ed. 1795, l. 185, l. 91. Der. jockey, verb; jockeyism, jockeyship.

JOCOSE, merry. (L.) Jocose is in Kersey, ed. 1715. Jocosity, in Mount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. iocuosus, sportive.—L. iocus, a joke, sport. See Joke. Der. joculosity, joculosity.

JOCUND, merry, pleasant. (F.—L.) ME. inconde, Jocunde; Chaucer, C. T. 16604 (G 596).—OF. jocund, pleasant, agreeable (Godefroy); Roquefort gives the derived adj. jocondeux, and the derived sb. jocundité.—L. iucundus, pleasant, agreeable; from L. iuvare (pt. t. iuvare), to help, aid; so that the orig. sense was 'helpful'. See Adjutant. Der. jocundly, jocundly.

JOG, to push slightly, jolt. (E.?) Prob. imitative. Cf. Kentish jokt, to jolt, shake; E. D. D. Cooper's Thesaurus (1565) has: 'Suenito, To shake a thynge, to jogge vp.' Not found earlier. De Ho gives the W Flem. djokken, to jolt, to jog, as equivalent to F. choquer, to knock; cf. also Low G. jukeln, jukkern, to jog up, to ride badly (Berghaus); Norw. and Swed. dial. jukka, to jog up and down in riding. Cf. also E. shog, as used in Hen. V. ii. 1. 47. And see Shook. Der. Hence jog as a neuter verb, to move by jolts, ride roughly, trot, Wint. Ta. iv. c. 132, Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 213; jog-trot; joggle, frequentative form.

JOHN DORY, the name of a fish. (F.—L.) John Dory is the vulgar name of the fish also called dory. It occurs in Todd's Johnson, spelt John Dory, dory, and doree. 1. Dory or doree is merely borrowed from the F. dorée, the vulgar F. name of the fish, signifying 'golden' or 'gilded', from its yellow colour. Dorée is the fem. of the pp. of the verb dorer, to gild.—L. deaurare, to gild, lit. 'cover with gold'.—L. de, prep. of, with; and aurum, gold. See Aureate. 2. The prefix John is nothing but the ordinary name; cf. jack-ox. It is usually explained as a corruption of F. jaune, yellow; but there is no reason why Englishmen should have prefixed this F. epithet, nor why Frenchmen should use such a tautological expression as jaune dorée. This suggested corruption is not a 'well-known fact', but given as a mere guess in Todd's Johnson. 3. In fact, the prefixing of the name John was due to the popularity of an extremely well-known ballad, entitled John Dory, pr. in 1609; see Ritson's Anc. Songs. It is alluded to in Beaumont and Fletcher, The Chances, A. iii. sc. 2. See Nares.

ME. gieste, gieste, gyester, balke, Trabes; Prompt. Parv. p. 196. 'The gistes'; Wright's Vocab. i. 170 (Walter de Bibbesworth). 'Gyst that gothe over the florthe, soline, giste'; Palsgrave.—OF. giste, 'a bed, couch, lodging, place to lie on' (Cot.); also a joist, as in Palsgrave; mod. F. giste. So called because these timbers form a support for the floor to lie on.—OF. geir, to lie, lie on. See Gist, which is related. Der. joint, verb.

JOKE, a jest, something mirthful. (L.) 'Joking decides great things'; Milton, tr. of Horace (in Minor Poems).—L. iocus, 'a joke, jest'. Cf. OF. joquer; in Ducange, s. v. locare. Brugmann, i. § 302.

Der. joke, vb.; and see joc-ose, joc-ul-ar. The Du. jok, a joke, is merely borrowed (like the E. word) from Latin.

JOLLE, another form of Jowl, q. v. (E.)

JOLLY, merry, plump. (F.—Scand. or L.) ME. Joly, joly, joli, Chaucer, C. T. 3263. It also has jolly, id. 4368 (A 4370); jollinesse, id. 10603 (F 289); jollite, id. 10592 (F 278). The older form is jolly or jolly; King Alisaunder, l. 155.—OF. jolly, later jolly, 'jolly, gay, trim, fine, gallant, neat'; Cot. β. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'festive';—Icel. jól, Yule, a great feast in the heathen time; see jól in Icel. Dict. See Yule. γ. But this solution is by no means certain. Perhaps from Late L. gaudivus, joyful; from gaudium, joy, gaudere, to rejoice (P. Meyer). Der. jolly-ly, jolly-ly, jolly-ness.

JOLLY-BOAT, a small boat belonging to a ship. (Scand.) In Todd's Johnson. Apparently, the element jolly is the adj. above, but this may have been substituted for Dan. jolle, a yawl, jolly-boat; Swed. jolle, a yawl; cf. Du. jol, a yawl, skiff. See Yawl. Boat is then a needless addition, due to the corruption into the E. adj. jolly. β. Perhaps suggested by jolyant, which seems to have been a sort of boat. 'Grete boat and jolyant'; Naval Accs. of Hen. VII (1896), p. 181. And this is (doubtfully) derived from Port. galeota, a galliot; see Galleat in Yule; and see Galliot.

JOLT, to shake violently, to jerk. (E.) Formerly also joult. Cotgrave explains F. hauride as 'a shock, knock, jur [jar], jolt, push'; and heurtier as 'to knock, push, jur, jolt, strike'. Also found in the comp. jolt-head, a thick-headed fellow, Two Gent. iii. 1. 290; Tam. Shrew, iv. 1. 169. 'Tote de beef, a jolt-head, jober-noll, toger-head, one whose wit is as little as his head is great'; Cot.

In North's Plutarch, p. 133 (R.), or p. 158, ed. 1631, we find some verses containing the word jolt-head, as well as the expression 'this heavy jolting pate', said of Jupiter, when regarded as a stupid tyrant. β. The frequent association of jolt with head or pate suggests a connexion with jolt or jout in the sense of 'head'. 'Head, or heed, julle, Caput'; Prompt. Parv. 'Halle of a fyshe, thorse'; Palsgrave. 'They they jollide [beat on the head] Jewes thorowe'; MS. Calig. A. ii. f. 117; cited in Halliwell. 'They may joll hurns [knock heads] together'; As You Like It, i. 3. 59. 'How the knave jolls it [viz. a skull] to the ground'; Hamlet, v. 1. 84. 'I jolle one aboute the cares, Je soufflette'; Palsgrave. Cf. prov. E. jow, jout, to knock (the head); jollcock, to jolt. We may also compare prov. E. jok, to jerk, spelt jolt in Palsgrave. γ. It may be added that jolt seems to have acquired a frequentative sense, 'to knock often', and was soon used generally of various kinds of jerky knocks. 'He whipp'd his horses, the coach jolted again'; Rambler, no. 34 (R.). See further under Jowl. Der. jolt, sb.

JONQUIL, a kind of narcissus. (F.—Span.—L.) In Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. Accented jonquil, Thomson's Seasons, Spring, 548. —Mod. F. jonquille, a jonquil. So named from its rush-like leaves; whence it is sometimes called Narcissus juncifolius.—Span. jonquillo, jonquil.—Span. juncal, a rush.—L. iuncus, a rush. See Junket. ¶ So also Ital. giunchiglia, a jonquil; from giuncu, a rush.

JORDAN, a pot, chamber-pot. (L.—Gk.—Heb.?) ME. Jordan, Chaucer, C. T. 12239 (C 305); see Tyrwhitt's note. Also Jurdon, Jordeyne; see Prompt. Parv., and Way's note; p. 267. Halliwell explains it as 'a kind of pot or vessel formerly used by physicians and alchemists. It was very much in the form of a soda-water bottle, only the neck was larger, not much smaller than the body of the vessel; &c.'—Late L. iurdanus; as in Prompt. Parv. β. Origin uncertain; but it may very well have been named from the river Jordan (L. Iordanus, Gk. Ἰορδάνης, Heb. Yarden, i. e. flowing down). 'We must remember this was the time of the Crusades. It was the custom of all pilgrims who visited the Holy Land to bring back a bottle of water from the Jordan for baptismal purposes. . . . It was thus that Jordan as a surname has arisen. I need not remind students of early records how common is Jordan as a Christian name, such cognomens as 'Jordan de Abington' or 'Jordan le Clerc' being of the most familiar occurrence'; Bardsley, Our English Surnames, p. 53. 'Thus Jordan may be short for 'Jordan-bottle'. Halliwell further explains how the later sense (as in Shakespeare) came about; the bottle being, in course of time, occasionally used for baser purposes. ¶ Not from Dan. or Swed. jord, earth; the adj. from which is jordisk, and means 'terrestrial'.

JOSS, a Chinese figure of a deity. (Port.—L.) 'Critic in jars and josses'; Epilogue to A Jealous Wife, by Colman (1761). Not Chinese; but a corruption of Port. deus, God. Cognate with Span. deu, OF. deus,—L. Deus, God; nom. case. See Deity.

JOSTLE, JUSTLE, to strike or push against. (F.—L.; with E. suffix.) [Not in P. Plowman, as said in R.] 'Thou justled none too nigh'; Roister Doister, iii. 3. 129 (in Spec. of Eng., ed. Skeat). Formed, with E. frequentative suffix -le, from jost or jout; see Joust.

JOT, a tittle. (L.—Gk.—Heb.) In Spenser, Sonnet 57. Spelt in Udal, Prol. to Ephesians, and Phae's Virgill, Æn. b. xi; see Richardson. Englished from L. iōta, Matt. v. 18 (Vulgate).—Gk. iōra, the name of the Gk. letter ι—Heb. yōd (y), the smallest letter of the Heb. alphabet. β. Hence also Du. jot, Span. and Ital. jota, a jot, little. See the Bible Word-book. Der. jot, verb, in the phr. 'to jot down'—to make a brief note of. ¶ Not the same word as prov. E. jot, to jolt, jog, nudge; which appears as jotte in Palsgrave.

JOURNAL, a day-book, daily newspaper, magazine. (F.—L.) Journall, a boke, journall; Palsgrave. Properly an adj., signifying 'daily.' 'His journall greeting.' Meas. for Meas. iv. 3. 92. 'Their journall labours;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 11. 31.—F. journal, adj., 'journall, daily;' Cot.—L. diurnalis, daily; from dies, a day. See DIURNAL, DIARY. Der. journal-ism, journal-ist, journal-istic. And see journey, ad-journ. Doublet, diurnal.

JOURNEY, a day's travel, travel, tour. (F.—L.) ME. Journee, Journee. It means 'a day's travel' in Chaucer, C. T. 2740 (A 2738). Spelt journee, Ancien Riwle, p. 352, l. 29.—F. journee, 'a day, or whole day; also . . . a daies worke or labour; a daies journey, or travell;' Cot. β. F. journee answers to Span. jornada, Ital. giornata, Late L. jurnata, a day's work; all formed with the fem. ending of a pp. as if from a verb journāre*, from the stem jorn- (<diurn-), which appears in Late L. jurn-āle (= E. journal).—L. diurn-us, daily. See JOURNAL. Der. journey, verb, Rich. III. ii. 2. 146; journeyman, Rich. II. i. 3. 274.

JOUST, JUST, to tilt, encounter on horseback. (F.—L.) ME. Iusten, Iousten; Chaucer, C. T. 96; P. Plowman, B. xvii. 82.—OF. jouster, 'to just, tilt, or tourney;' Cot. (mod. F. jouter). [Cf. Ital. giustare, Span. justar, to tilt.] β. The orig. sense is merely 'to meet' or 'to approach,' a sense better preserved in OF. adjuuster, to set near, to annex; (not E. adjust). [The hostile sense was easily added as in other cases; cf. E. to meet (often in a hostile sense), to encounter, and ME. assembler, to fight, contend, so common in Barbour's Bruce. So also F. rencontre.]—Late L. iustāre, to approach, cause to approach, join; see Ducange.—L. iustāre, near, close, hard by; whence OF. jouste, 'near to, hard by;' Cot. γ. The form iustāre—iug-is-iū, fem. abl. of the superl. form of adj. iug-is, continual; from base iug- of iungere, to join.—√VEUG; to join; see JOIN. Brugmann, i. § 760 (1), note 1. Der. joust, sb., ME. Iuste, Iouste, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 74. Also just-le, q.v.

JOVIAL, mirthful. (F.—L.) In the old astrology, Jupiter was 'the joyfulest star, and of the happiest augury of all;' Trench, Study of Words. 'The heavens, always jovial,' i.e. propitious, kindly; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 12. 51.—OF. jovial, 'jovial, sanguine, born under the planet Jupiter;' Cot.—L. Jovialis, pertaining to Jupiter.—L. Jovis, for OLat. Jovis, Jove, only used in later Lat. in the form Iu-piter (= Jove-father), Jupiter. β. Again Jovis stands for an older Dionis (cf. Oscan dat. Diuu-ei), allied to dies, day, and to deus, God, cf. Gk. Διός, gen. case of Zeús. See DEITY, TUESDAY. Brugmann, i. § 55 120, 223. Cf. Skt. div, to shine, whence deva, a deity, daiwa, divine; also Skt. dyau, inflectional base of *Dyau*s. See Max Müller, Lect. on Lang. vol. ii. Der. jovial-ly, jovial-ness, jovial-ty.

JOWL, JOLE, the jaw or cheek. (F.) 'Cheek by jowl;' Mids. Nt. Dream, iii. 2. 338. β. A corruption of chowl; cf. cheek and chowl, and cheek for chowl in E. D. D. [We also find chowl in a somewhat different sense. 'The chawle or crop adhering unto the lower side of the bill [of the pelican], and so descending by the throat; a bag or sachel very observable;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. v. c. 1. § 5. 'His chyn with a choll loll'de' = his chin wagg'd with the hanging flesh beneath it; Piers Ploughman's Crede, l. 224 (in Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat).] γ. There is also a form kawl*, meaning (apparently) 'jaw.' [Bothe his chawl [jowl] and his chynne.] Ali-saunders, fragment A, ed. Skeat, 1119 (in App. to Wm. of Palerne). This chawl is a corruption of an older form chawel = chavel. Thus in the Cursor Mundi, l. 7510, when David describes how he slew the lion and the bear, he says: 'I seok þam be þerdes sua þat I þair chaffes rane in twa' = I shook them by the beads so that I rest their chaps in twain; where other MSS. read chawelis, chawlis, and chawdes. So also: 'Chawylbone, or chawl-bone or chawle-bone, Mandibula.' Prompt. Parv. p. 70; and see Way's note, who cites: 'A chawle, a chawylle, a chekebone, maxilla,' and: 'Brancus, a gole, or a chawle.' And again: 'And þat deor to-dede his chaffes [later text, chawles] = and the beast opened (?) his jaws; Layamon, 6507.—AS. ceafst, the jaw; pl. ceafstas, jaws, chaps; Grein, i. 157. 'David . . . his ceafstas to-ter' = David tares asunder the chaps (of the bear); Ælfric on the Old Test.; Liber Regum. O.Sax. kafstun, pl. the jaws. Allied to Icel. kjafir, the mouth, jaw, esp. of a beast; for kjaftr*-; cf. Swed. kjift, jaw, Dan. kjæft. The l in AS. ceafst is a mere suffix, and the word must have originated from a Teutonic base kaf-*. See CHAFER. δ. But the connexion of chowl with chawl is doubtful, and the word cannot be said to be satisfactorily solved; see N. E. D.

¶ The change from ch to j is well illustrated by the Norfolk jug-by-jole = cheek by jowl = Ayrshire cheek for chow, cheek by chowl; see E. D. D.

JOY, gladness, happiness. (F.—L.) ME. Joye, joye (disyllable), Chaucer, C. T. 1873 (A 1871); earlier, in Ancien Riwle, p. 218.—OF. joye, joie, 'joy, mirth;' Cot. Cf. Ital. gioia, joy; Gascon goy.—L. neut. pl. gaudia, which was turned into a fem. sing. as in other cases (see ANTIPHON); from sing. gaudium, joy.—L. gaudire, to rejoice. See GAUD. Der. joy, verb, 2 Cor. vii. 13 (A. V.); joy-ful, ME. joisful, Gower, C. A. i. 191, bk. ii. 931; joy-ful-ly, joy-ful-ness; joy-less, joy-less-ly, joy-less-ness; joy-ous, ME. joy-ous, Shoreham's Poems, ed. Wright, p. 120, l. 14; joy-ous-ly, joy-ous-ness.

JUBBAH, a kind of tunic. (Arab.) See JUPON.

JUBILATION, a shouting for joy. (L.) In Cotgrave; ME. Iubilatioun, Wyclif, Ps. cl. 5.—F. jubilation, 'a jubilation, exultation;' Cot.—L. iubilatiōem, acc. of iubilatio, a shouting for joy; cf. L. iubilatus, pp. of iubilare, to shout for joy.—L. iubilum, a shout of joy. β. There is nothing to connect this with the following word; the resemblance is accidental. Nevertheless, the words were confused at an early date. Der. jubil-ant, from pres. pt. of iubilare.

JUBILEE, a season of great joy. (F.—L.—Heb.) ME. Jubile, Chaucer, C. T. 7444 (D 1862).—OF. jubilé, 'a jubilee, a year of releasing, liberty, rejoicing;' Cot.—L. iubilaeus, the jubilee, Levit. xxv. 11; masc. of adj. iubilaeus, belonging to the jubilee; Levit. xxv. 28. An alteration of *L. iubilaeus (due to the influence of L. iubilum, a shout of triumph), which is the true rendering of Late Gk. ἰωβηλαῖος, adj. formed from ἰωβηλαῖος, jubilee (Josephus, Antiq. iii. 12. 3).—Heb. yobel, a blast of a trumpet, a shout of joy; orig. a blast on a ram's horn. Distinct from the word above.

JUDGE, an arbitrator, one who decides a cause. (F.—L.) ME. Juge, uge, Chaucer, C. T. 15931 (G 463).—F. juge, 'a judge;' Cot.—L. iudicem, acc. of iudex, a judge. β. The stem is iū-dic-, and signifies 'one who points out what is law;' from iūs, law, and -dic-āre, to point out, make known. For iūs, see JUST. For dic-āre, see INDICATE. Der. judge, verb, ME. Jugen, iugen, Rob. of Glouc., p. 345, l. 7082; judge-ship; judg-ment, ME. iugment (three syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 807 (A 805); judgment-day, judgment-seat; and see judicature, judicial, judicious. Also ad-judge, pre-judge.

JUDICATURE, judgment. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave and Palsgrave.—F. judicature, 'judicature;' Cot.—L. iudiciatūra, office of a judge; cf. iudiciāl-us, pp. of iudiciāre, to judge.—L. iudic-, stem of iudex, a judge. See JUDGE. Der. (from L. iudiciāre) judic-able; (like pp. iudiciātus), judicial-ive (L. iudiciātus), judicial-or-y (L. iudiciātorius).

JUDICIAL, pertaining to courts of law. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave; and in Wyclif, Nehelem. iii. 30.—OF. judiciel, 'judicial;' Cot.—L. iudiciālis, pertaining to courts of law.—L. iudici-um, a trial, suit, judgment.—L. iudici-, decl. stem of iudex, a judge. See JUDGE. Der. judicial-ly; judicial-y (L. iudiciātorius); and see below.

JUDICIOUS, full of judgment, discreet. (F.—L.) In Shak. Macb. iv. 2. 16.—F. judicieux, 'judicious;' Cot.—L. iudiciōsus, not found, but regularly formed with suffix -ōsus from L. iudici-, decl. stem of iudex, a judge. Der. judicious-ly, judicious-ness.

JUG, a kind of pitcher. (Heb.) 'A jugge, poculum;' Levins, ed. 1570. 'A jugge to drink in;' Minshen, ed. 1637. Of uncertain origin. Mr. Wedgwood's suggestion is probably right; he connects it with 'Jug or Judge, formerly a familiar equivalent of Joan or Jenny.' In this case, the word is of jocular origin; which is rendered probable by the fact that a drinking-vessel was also called a jack, and that another vessel was called a jill. 'A jack of leather to drink in;' Minshen. Jack seems to have been the earlier word, and jill was used in a similar way to go with it. 'Be the jacks fair within, the jills fair without;' Tam. of Shrew, iv. 1. 51; on which Steevens remarks that it is 'a play upon the words, which signify two drinking-measures as well as men and maid-servants.' β. The use of Jug or Joan appears in Cotgrave, who gives: 'Johannette, Jug, or Jinny;' and again: 'Jannette, Judge, Jenny, a woman's name.' [How Jug came to be used for Joanna is not very obvious; but pet names are liable to strange confusion. The forms Jug and Judge are more like the Heb. Judith (Gen. xvi. 34).] Similarly, Wedgwood cites 'Susan, a brown earthenware pitcher,' used in the district of Gower (Philol. Proceedings, iv. 223). Cf. also 'a jack of beer,' Dodsley's O. Plays, ed. Hazlitt, vii. 218, ix. 441. As Jug was a female name, we also find jug, a mistress, as a term of endearment; id. iv. 183, vi. 511, viii. 400, xii. 115. ¶ The curious word jubbe, in the sense of bottle, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 13000 (B 1260); but jug can hardly be a corruption of it.

JUGGERNAUT, the name of an Indian idol. (Hindi—Skt.) See Sonthey, Cure of Kachama, c. xiv; and see Yule. = Hindi Jagan-nātha, vernacularly jagannāth, a name esp. applied to Kṛṣṇa, as worshipped at Puri in Orissa (H. H. Wilson). = Skt. jagannātha, lord of the world. = Skt. jagat, world; nātha, protector, lord.

JUGGLER, one who exercises sleight of hand. (F. - L.) ME. Jugleour, jugleour, Chaucer, C. T. 7049, 10533 (D 1467, F 219). 'Ther saugh I playen jugleours, Magiciens, and tretourours'; Chaucer, Ho. Fame, iii. 169. Spelt juglar, with the sense of 'buffoon'; Andersen Kiwle, p. 219, l. 30. = OF. jugitor, jugleur, jugleour (Burguy); later jongleur, with inserted n; hence 'jongleur, a juggler.' Cot. - L. ioculitorem, acc. of ioculator, a jester. = L. ioculāri, for jest. = L. ioculus, a little jest, dimin. of iocus, a joke; see Joke. Der. jugglery, ME. Juglerie, Chaucer, C. T. 11577 (F 1265). Hence also was developed the verb juggle, formerly juglen, used by Tyndall, Works, p. 101, col. 2, l. 7 from bottom (see Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 169, l. 70, p. 170, l. 101); juggl-ing, juggle, sb.

JUGULAR, pertaining to the side of the neck. (F. - L.) Also jugularis, of or belonging to the throat; Minsheu, ed. 1627. Formed with suffix -ar or -ary. L. -arius from ingul-nm or ingul-us, the collar-bone (so called from its joining together the shoulders and neck); also, the hollow part of the neck above the collar-bone; also the throat. Dimin. of ingum, that which joins, a yoke. = YUEG, to join. See Yoke.

JUICE, sap, fluid part of animal bodies. (F. - L.) ME. Juse, iuice; Gower, C. A. l. 265; bk. v. 4120; spelt Juys, S. E. Legendary. St. Cathbert, l. 52. = OF. jus, 'juice, liquor, sap, pottage, broth'; Cot. - L. iū, 'broth, soup, sauce, pickle'; lit. 'mixture.' + Skt. yūsha-, sup. = YUEU, to bind, mix; cf. Skt. yū, to bind, join, mix; Gk. Yuan, 'leaven'. Der. juicy, juiceless, juiceiness.

JUJUBE, the fruit of a certain tree. (F. - L.) (Gk. - Pers.) The tree is the Rhamnus zizyphus or Rhamnus jujuba. 'Juibes, or iubeb-frut.' Minsheu, ed. 1627. See Lanfranc, Cirurgie, p. 74, l. 14. = OF. jubibes, 'the fruit or plum called jujubes'; Cot. A pl. form. = Late L. jujuba (Ital. gingiuba, Florio); altered form of the pl. of L. zizyphum, the jujube; fruit of the tree zizyphus. = Gk. ζίζυφον, fruit of the tree ζίζυφον. = Pers. zayzafūn, zizafūn, zizafūn, the jujube-tree; Rich. Dict. p. 793.

JULEP, a sweet drink, demulcent mixture. (F. - Span. - Arab. - Pers.) 'This cordial julep here.' Milton, Comus, 672. 'Good wine . . . made in a julep with sugar.' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 18. See Lanfranc, Cirurgie, p. 76, l. 9. = F. julep, 'a julep, or juleb, a drink made either of distilled waters and syrups mixed together; or of a decoction sweetened with honey and sugar, or else mingled with syrups'; Cot. = Span. julepe, julep. = Arab. julāb, julep; from Pers. gulāb, rose-water, also, julep; Rich. Dict. pp. 512, 1239. = Pers. gul, a rose; and āb, water; id. pp. 1238, 1.

JULY, the name of the seventh month. (F. - L.) Chaucer, Treat. on the Astrolabe, calls the month Julius, Juy, Juylle; pt. i. § 10. July is from AF. Julie, L. Julius, a name given to this month (formerly called Quintilis) in honour of Caius Julius Caesar, who was born in this month. Hence the E. form was accented as Jūly (rhyming with newly) as late as in Dr. Johnson's time; cf. 'Then came hot Jūly, hoyling like to fire'; Spenser, F. Q. vii. 7. 36. Now Jūly, prob. to distinguish it more clearly from Jūne (N. and Q., 9 S. x. 426). ¶ Quintilis is from quintus, fifth, because this was formerly the fifth month, when the year began in March. Quintus is from quinque, five; see Five.

JUMBLE, to mix together confusedly. (F. - L.) 'I jumble it, I make a noyse by removing of heavy thynges. I jumble, as one dothe that can [not] play upon an instrument, je brouille.' Palsgrave. Here it means to make a confused noise. Cf. prov. E. jum, a jolt; whence jumble, jumble, to jolt (frequentative). Of imitative origin. ¶ Chaucer uses the equivalent form jompren. 'Ne jompren eek no discordant thing yere' = do not jumble discordant things together; Trouilts, ii. 1037. But Sir T. More uses the word in the sense of 'to mingle harmoniously'; as in: 'Let vs . . . see how diffinition of the church and hys heresies will jumper and agree together among themselves'; Works, p. 612 n. Compare this with the phr. 'to jump together' (= to agree with). Der. jumble, sb.; jumble-ing.

JUMP (1), to leap, spring, skip. (Scand. f.) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 1. 53, and in Palsgrave; but not found earlier. The frequentative form jumper occurs in Sir T. More, and jompren in Chaucer; see quotations s. v. Jumble. Hence the word jump may have been known to our dialects at an earlier date. Cf. Sc. jump (pt. t. jump) in E. D. D. Perhaps it is of Scand. origin. Cf. Jutland jump, to be in oscillating motion, also, to jump, spring (Feilberg); allied to Swed. dial. jumpa, to jog up and down, as in riding (Rietz). Note also Swed. dial. jumpa, to spring, jump, or wag about heavily and clumsily (Rietz); Swed. gumpa, to move up and down; Dan. gumpe, to jolt; gimpe, to wriggle (Rietz); Norw. gimpe, to swing oneself about (Ross); Norw. gimpe, to see-saw, gimpe, a nag (Larsen). As Rietz remarks, there must have been a strong verb gimpe*, pt. t.

And see the longer description in Todd's Johnson. 'A cangreying cable'; Naval Annals, Henry VII, 1485, ed. 1896, p. 12. Allied to cadge, to fasten, to tie, which seems to be a variant of catch. KEEL (2), to cool. (E.) 'While greasy Joan doth keel the pot'; J. L. L., v. 2, 930. The proper sense is not to scum the pot (though it may sometimes be so used) but to keep it from boiling over by stirring it round and round; orig. merely to cool it or keep it cool. 'Keel, to keep the pot from boiling over'; A Tour to the Caves, 1781; see Eng. Dial. Soc. Gloss. B. 1. KEELSON, KESLON, a piece of timber in a ship next to the keel. (Scand.) 'Keelson, the second piece of timber, which lies right over the keel'; Kersey, ed. 1715. For the former syllable, see KEEL. The latter syllable wholly agrees, in appearance, with Swed. svin, Dan. svin, G. schwein, which = E. swine (see SWINE). And such may have been the original sense; for animal names are strangely applied. Perhaps a better sense is given by Norweg. kjølsvill, where vill answers to G. schuelle, E. sill; see SILL. It is not known in which direction the alteration was made.

KEEN, sharp, eager, acute. (E.) ME. kene, Chaucer, C. T. 1968 (A 1966); Iyavelok, 1832. AS. cin; Grein, i. 157. [Distinct from AS. cēpan, variant of cypan, to buy (see CHAP).] In Ælfric's Homilies, i. 412, we find 'gif he dysygra manna herunga cēþ on arfastum weorcum = if he seek after the praises of men in pious works. 'Geome Æas iudagan cēþon' = they earnestly awaited the appointed day; Ælf. Hom. ii. 172. 'Cēþaþ heora timan' = they observe (or keep) their times; id. ii. 224. 'As for the reits [sea-weeds] kilpe, tangle, and such like sea-weeds, Nicander saith they are as good as treacle. Sundry sorts there be of these reits, going under the name of Alga.' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 6. ME. culp; 'as culpes of the see waggeth with the water'; Trevisa, tr. of Ihigden, ii. 181. Not found in AS.

KELPIE, in Scotland, a fabulous demon assuming various shapes, usually that of a horse. (C.) 'Be thou a kelpie.' Burns, Let. to Mr. Cunningham, Sept. 10, 1792. And see Brand, Antiq., ed. Prob. from Gael. calpach, colpach, a heifer, bullock, colt; colpa, a cow, a horse; Irish colpach, Morris, C. 357 = Icel. kenna, to know; Swed. känna; Dan. kjende + Du. kennen; G. kennen. β. The sense 'to know' is Scand.; but it is not the original sense. The verb is, etymologically, a causal one, signifying to make to know, to teach, show; a sense frequently found in MF. 'Kenne me on Crist to bileve' = teach me to believe in Christ; P. Plowman, B. i. 81. Such is also the sense of AS. cennan, Grein, i. 156; and of Goth. kannjan, to make known, John, xvii. 26. Teut. type kannjan-*, to make known, causal of the verb which appears as cennan in AS. and kunnan in Gothic, with the sense 'to know.' For further remarks, see Can (1). Der. ken, sb., Cymb. iii. 6, 6; a coined word, not in early use; kenn-ing, the range of sight, as far as one can see.

Parv.; Sir Gawayn and Grene Knight, 1140. = Norm. French kenil*, answering to OF. chenil, a kennel. β. The Norman form is proved by the k being still preserved in English, and by the Norman F. kenet, a little dog, occurring in a Norman poem cited in Wey's note in Prompt. Parv., p. 271, where the ME. kenel also occurs. This kenet is dimin. of a Norman F. ken, answering to Picard kien, OF. chen (Litttré), mod. F. chien, a dog. So also in OF. chen-il, the former syllable = the same OF. chen. γ. From Late L. canile, 'domus canis'; Voc. 108. 29. = L. can-, base of canis, a dog; with the termination -ile, occurring in cu-ile, a house or place for sheep, a sheepfold, from cu-is, a sheep; cf. Ital. canile, a kennel. See Canine. Der. kennel, vb.; kennell'd, Shak. Venus, 913.

KENNEL (2), a gutter. (F.-I.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, iv. 3, 98. A later form of the ME. canil or canell, of which ME. chanell (= mod. E. channel) is a variant with palatalisation. = AF. canel, a channel; in Charlemagne, ed. Michel, l. 556. = L. canālis, ace. of canalis, a canal; hence, a channel or kennel. See Channel, of which kennel is a doublet; also Canal.

KERAMIC, the same as CERAMIC, q.v.

KERBSTONE, CURBSTONE, a stone laid so as to form part of the edging of stone or brick-work. (Hybrid; F.-I.; and E.) 'Kerbstone, a stone laid round the brim of a well'; Kersey's Diet., ed. 1715. A phonetic spelling of curbstone; so called from its curbing the stone-work, which it retains in its place. See Curb and Stone.

KERCHIEF, a square piece of cloth used to cover the head; and later, for other purposes. (F.-I.) Better spelt kerchief. Spelt kerchiefe in Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 3, 62, iv. 2, 74. ME. couverchief (= couchchief), Chaucer, C. T. 6172 (D 590); also spelt couchchief (= couchchief), id. 455 (A 453). Also kerchief, Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 272. = OF. couver-chief, later couverre-chief; cf. Couverre-chief, a kerchief; Cot. = OF. covrir, later couverir, to cover; and chief, chif, the head, which is from L. caput, the head. See Cover and Chief. ¶ A word of similar formation is curfew, q.v. Der. hand-kerchief, pocket-hand-kerchief.

KERMES, the dried bodies of insects used in dyeing crimson. (Arab. - Skt.) See Crimson.

KERN (1), KERNE, an Irish soldier. (Irish.) In Shak. Macb. i. 2, 13, 30; v. 7, 17. 'The kerne . . . whom only I took to be the proper Irish soldiour'; Spenser, View of the State of Ireland; in Globe ed. of Spenser, p. 640, col. 1. = Irish ceatharn, a troop, but used in the sense of ceatharnach, a (single) soldier; from (Irish) ceithern, a troop (Machair). Cp. L. catena, a troop. See Cateran. (Stokes-Pick, p. 76).

KERN (2), another spelling of Quern, q.v.

KERNEL, a grain, the substance in the shell of a nut. (F.) ME. kirnel (badly kirnelle), P. Plowman, B. xi. 253; curnel, id. C. xiii. 146. AS. cyrnel, to translate L. grānum; Voc. 138. 22. Formed (with dimin. suffix and vowel-change from Teut. n* to y) from AS. corn, grain. Teut. stem. kurnil-*. See Corn.

KEROSENE, a lamp-oil made from petroleum. (Gk.) Ill coined from Gk. kerps, wax; with suffix -ene.

KERSEY, coarse woollen cloth. (E.) In Shak. I. L. I. v. 2, 413. 'Carsey cloth, ere y.' Palgrave. 'Pro tribus unis de kersey.' Earl of Derby's Expedition, 1390. Camd. Soc., p. 89, l. 3. The word is certainly English, and the same word as the personal name Kersey; named from Kersey, 3 miles from Hadleigh, in the S. of Suffolk, where a woollen trade was once carried on. A little weaving still goes on at Hadleigh. The place of the manufacture of kersey is now the North of England, but it was once made in the South (Phillips' Dict.). AS. Ceres-ig, 'Ceres's island'; Birch, Cat. Saxon. iii. 603. ¶ The F. carizé, 'kerise' (Cot.), Du. karsai, Swed. karsing, are all from the E. word.

KERSEYMERE, a twilled cloth of fine wool. (Cashmere.) A modern corrupt spelling of cassimere, an old name for the cloth also called Cashmere. See Cassimere, Cashmere. The corruption is clearly due to confusion with kersey, a coarse cloth of a very different texture.

KESTREL, a base kind of hawk. (F.—L.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 3. 4; spelt castrel, Beaumont and Fletcher, Pilgrim, I. 1; kastril, Ben Jonson, Epicoene, iv. 4; see Nares. The t is excretant (as after s in whits-l, amongs-l); it stands for kastril, ka'stril, short for casserel, kerserel.—OF. queracelle, 'a kastrell'; Cot. Also crasserelle, cracerelle, 'a kastrell', ill. Probably for queracelle, the regular dimin. of querelle, 'a kastrell'; Cot.—L. querquedula, a kind of teal; see Diez and Scheler. Prob. of imitative origin. β. See also, in Cotgrave, the forms cerelle, a teal; ceracelle, a kastrel, teal; cracerelle, a kastrel; mod. F. cracerelle. The form cerelle is mod. F. saucelle; see Littré, under cracelle, cracerelle, saucelle; Diez, under cerella, the Spanish form. The Ital. tristarello, a kastrel (Florio), represents a form ristarello*; cf. Burgundian cristal, a kastrel, a form cited by Wedgwood. (See my list for The Academy, Oct. 7, 1882, p. 262.)

KETCH, a small yacht or hoy. (F.—L.) 'Ketch, a vessel like a hoy, but of a lesser size'; Kersey, ed. 1715. 'We stood in for the channel: about noon we saw a sail having but one mast; judged it to be a ketch; but, drawing nearer, found it was a ship in distress, having lost her main and main masts.' Randolph's Islands in the Archipelago, 1687, p. 103 (Todd). Formerly also catch; Capt. J. Smith, Works, ed. Arter, p. 51. Supposed to be a particular use of catch, from the verb to catch. See Catch; and see Catch, sb. '2) in N. E. D.

KETCHUP, a sauce. (Malay.) 'Shall I use ketch-up?' W. King, Art of Cookery, let. 8, in Eng. Poets (1810); ix. 252. Spelt ketchup in 1711 (N. E. D.).—Malay ketchup, kichup, a sauce; soy. (In Du. spelling keijap). See C. P. G. Scott; Malayan Words in English. Perhaps ult. of Chinese origin; see N. E. D.

KETTLE, a metal vessel for boiling liquids. (Scand.—L.) M.E. ketel (with one t), Prompt. Parv., Wyclif, Levit. xi. 35. As the t is ketel, it is prob. from Icel. ketill, a kettle; we find also AS. cetel, AS. Leechdoms, ii. 86; spelt cetel in the Epinal Glossary, 168. Cf. also Du. ketel, G. kessel. The Messico-Goth. form is kails, occurring in the gen. pl. ketilf in Mark, vii. 4 (Gk. κεκαλιον, Lat. ceramentorum, A. V. 'brazen vessels'). β. Borrowed from L. catillus, a small bowl; also found in the form catinulus; dimin. form of L. catinus, a bowl; a deep vessel for cooking food. The L. catinus is a kindred word to Gk. καίρος, a cup, καρύα, a small cup; see Cotyledon. ¶ From the L. catillus were also borrowed Icel. ketill, Swed. kittel, Dan. kadel, Du. ketel, G. kessel, and even Russ. котел. Der. kettle-drum, Hamlet, i. 4. 11.

KEX, hemlock; orig. a hollow stem. (C.) 'Bundles of these empty kexes'; Beaumont and Fletcher, Elder Brother, iii. 5. 13. M.E. kex, kix; P. Plowman, B. xvii. 210; Prompt. Parv. In Walter de Bibbesworth, the kex seems to mean 'dry stalks'; and translates OF. le fenouille; Wright, Vocab. vol. i. p. 157. Cf. prov. F. legens, tall umbelliferous plants; answering to Corn. egans, hemlock. Prob. of Celtic or Latin origin; cf. Welsh cegid, hemlock; L. cicuta, hemlock. ¶ Hence also prov. F. heckies—kexes, in Shak. Hen. V. v. 2. 52; a pl. sb. of which the proper singular form is not hecky, but kex. See Way's note in Prompt. Parv., s. v. kex. Note also that kex really—kexes, and is itself a plural; kexes being a double plural. W. cæys, pl., is merely the E. word borrowed.

KEX, that which opens or shuts a lock. (E.) Formerly called key, riming with may, Merch. of Ven. ii. 7. 59; and with may, Shak. Sonnet 52. M.E. keye (riming with playe, to play), Chaucer, C. T. 9918 (E 2044). AS. cæg, cæge, Grein, i. 156; whence M.E. keye by the usual change of g into y as in day from AS. dæg; OFries. kei, kei, a key. De. key-board, key-hole, key-note, key-stone.

KHALIF, KHALIFA, the same as Calif, q. v.

KHAN, a prince, chief, emperor. (Pers.—Tatar.) Common in Mandeville's Travels, spelt Chan, can, Chane, Chan, Chan; pp. 42, 215, 216, 224, 225.—Pers. khan, lord, prince (a title); Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 212. But the word is of Tatar origin; the well-known title Chingis Khan signifies 'great khan' or 'great lord', a title assumed by the celebrated conqueror Temagun, who was proclaimed Great Khan of the Moguls and Tatars, A. D. 1205. He is always known by the sole title, often also spelt Gengis Khan, corrupted (in Chaucer) to Cambuscan. See Intro. to Chaucer's Prioresse's Tale, &c., ed. Skeat, p. xlii. Der. khan-ate, where the suffix is of L. origin.

KERDIVE, a prince. (F.—Pers.) A Turkish title given to the governor of Egypt; the word itself is, however, not Turkish, but borrowed from Persian.—F. Khdivu.—Pers. khadiv, khidiv, khadiv, a king, a great prince, a sovereign, Rich. Dict. p. 601; spelt khidiv, a king, Palmer's Dict. col. 216, where the name for the viceroy of Egypt is given as khidiv. Cf. Pers. khodā, God (Vulliers, p. 603).

KHIDMUTGAR, KITMUTGAR, a male servant who waits at table; in India. (Hind.—Pers.—Arab.) First in 1765.—Hind. khidmatgar, a male domestic who waits at table (Forbes).—Pers. khidmat-gar, the same; lit. 'rendering service'; Rich. Dict., p. 601. Formed with Pers. -gar, agential suffix, from Arab. khidmat, service, employment, from Arab. root khadama, he served; ib. (See Yule).

KIBBE, a chilblain. (C.) In Hamlet, v. i. 153. 'She halted [owing to] a kibe'; Skelton, Elynour Kummynge, l. 493. 'He haltith often that hath a kibe he'; id. Garland of Laurell, l. 502. 'Gibbus, kibe', Voc. 586, 25. 'Kibis on the fete'; Lanfranc, Cirurgie, p. 5 (ab. 1400).—W. ribi, a kibe (D. Silvan Evans); also cibous, 'chilblains, kibes'; Spurrell, p. 13. Explained in Pughe's Welsh Dict. as standing for cib-gwas, from cib, a cup, seed-vessel, husk, and gwas, a humour, malady, disease. Thus the swelling or rounded form to be 'a malady in the shape of a cup,' from the swelling or rounded form.

KICK, to strike or thrust with the foot. (Scand.) M.E. kiken, Chaucer, C. T. 6523 (D 941); P. Plowman, C. v. 22. [W. ricio, to kick, given in the King-Welsh portion of Spurrell's Dict., and Gael. rig, to kick, are both from E.] We find also prov. E. kink, to kick, also to jerk, twist the body, to sprain.—Norw. kikka, for kinka, to over-drive a horse, so as to sprain him; killa, to jerk, to go jerkily, like a capricious horse; kikk, a spraining or straining of a sinew (Ross). Evidently related to Kink. Cf. Swed. kik-kasta, to throw. kinkhoost, the chincough, whooping-cough. A kink is a twist in a rope; hence, a hitch, jerk, kick, sprain. See Kink, in E. D. D.

KICKSHAW, a delicacy, fantastical dish. (F.—L.) 'Any pretty little tiny kickshaw'; 2 Hen. IV. v. 1. 29. The pl. is kickshaws. 'Art thou good at these kickshaws?' Twelfth N. i. 3. 122. At a later time, kickshaws was incorrectly regarded as being a pl. form. Kickshaw is a curious corruption of F. quelque chose, lit. something, hence, a trifle, small delicacy. This can be abundantly proved by quotations. 'Friendships, youth, skinless, and dainty puddings, or quelchoses, made of good flesh and herbs chopped together, then rolled up into the form of liverings, &c., and so boiled'; Cotgrave's F. Dict. 'I made bold to set on the board kickshaws, and variety of strange fruits'; Featley, Dippers Dipt, ed. 1645, p. 199 (Todd). 'Fresh salmon, and French kickshaw'; Milton, Animadversions upon Remonstrant's Defence (R.). 'Nor shall we then need the monsieurs of Paris to send [our youth] over back again transformed into mimicks, apes, and kickshaws'; Milton, Treatise on Education (Todd). 'As for French kickshaws, Celleri, and Cham-paign, Ragous, and Fricasces, in truth we've none'; Rochester, Works, 1777, p. 143. 'Some foolish French quelchouse, I warrant you. Quelchouse! oh! ignorance in supreme perfection! He means a kak shaw!' Dryden, Kant Keeper, A. iii. sc. 1.—F. quelque chose, something.—L. quid-que, of what kind, with suffix -quam; and causa, a cause, thing. Quid answers to E. which; quam is fem. acc. of qui, answering to E. who. See Which, Who, and Cause.

KID, a young goat. (Scand.) M.E. kid, Chaucer, C. T. 3260, 9238 (E 1364); Ormulum, 7804.—Norw. and Dan. kid, a kid; Swed. kid, in Widgeon's Swed. Dict., also kidling; Icel. kid, kidling, a kid. ¶ OIIG. kizz, MHG. and G. kizze, a kid. Der. kid, verb; kid-ling, with double suffix -ing; kid-fox, a young fox, Much Ado, ii. 3. 44; also kid-nap, q. v.

KIDDLE, a kind of weir formed of basket-work, placed in a river to catch fish. (AF.) AF. idel, pl. kidens, Statutes of the Realm, i. 316 (1351); MF. quideau, 'a wicker engine whereby fish is caught'; Cot. F. quideau; which cannot be derived from F. quider (Hatzfeld), though it may have been modified by it. Cf. E. kit, a tub, basket for fish; prov. E. kid, a tub, basket. See Kit (1).

KIDNAP, to steal children. (Scand.) 'People that lye in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law'; Spectator, no. 311 (Richardson, Johnson). 'Thou practisest the craft of a kidnapper'; said by Giant Maul, in Bunyan, Pilg. Prog. pt. 2. Compounded of kid, a child, in thieves' slang; and nap, more commonly nab, to steal. Kid is of Scand. origin; see Kid. Nap is also of Scand. origin; from Dan. nappa, to snatch, Swed. nappa, to catch, to snatch, lay hold on; see Nab. Der. kid-napper.

KIDNEY, a gland which secretes the urine. (E.) 'And the two kidneys'; Wyclif, Exod. xxix. 13 (earlier version); 'and they kidneris'; (later version). But the ending -eris, -ers seems to be a substitution for -eren, -iren (see N. E. D.); and, in the same passage, three MSS. have kideniren. In W. de Bibbesworth, we find the sing. form kidenet; Wright's Voc. vol. i. p. 149. Comparing kiden-et, pl. kiden-iren, with M.E. ei, ey, an egg, pl. eyren, eyges, we see the probability that M.E. ei (pl. eyren) constitutes the second element in kid(e)n-ey. β. This ME. ei is from AS. æg (pl. ægru, whence ME. aire, later aire-n, a double pl. form), meaning 'egg'; from the shape. Cf. Du. ei, an egg, pl. eijeren. The former element is unknown; perhaps it represents an AS. adj. form ealden*, or an AS. ealdan*, formed from AS. eald, a bag, husk, which in ME. also meant 'belly'. Cf. prov. F. kid, a pod, husk; kiddon, a kidney; Swed. dial. kudde, a pod. ¶ The ME. ner, a kidney, seems to be a different word, from Icel. nyra, Dan. nyre, cognate with G. nier, a kidney. Der. kidney-bone. The phrase 'of his kidney' means 'of his size or kind'; see Merry Wives, iii. 5. 116.

KILDERKIN, a liquid measure of 18 gallons. (Du. - F. - Span. - Arab. - L.) In Levins, ed. 1870; spelt kylterkin. 'Take a kilderkin . . . of 4 gallons of beer'; Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 46. The size of the measure appears to have varied. A corruption (by change of the liquid n to l) of MDu. kinderken. Spelt kylderken in Palsgrave; kylterken in 1590; see Riley, Memorials of London, p. 517; but kilderkin in 1598 and 1691, kyterken in 1530 (N. E. D.). Kilian gives: 'Kinderken, kinneken, the eighth part of a val'. In mod. Du. kinneke means 'a firkin', which in English measure is only half a kilderkin. β. The form resembles that of Du. kinderkin, 'a little child'; Sewel: formed, with dimin. suffix -ken (= F. -chen = G. -chen), from Du. kind, a child; but the real origin is very different. It is ascertained to be a derivative, with the same suffix -ken, from a Du. spelling of OF. quintal, 'a quintal, or hundredweight'; Cot. See further under QUINTAL. (See Grimm, Wirt., s.v. Kindelein (2); Verwijs and Verdam, s.v. Kinderkin (2).) N. E. D.

KILL, to slay, cadden. (E.) ME. killen, more commonly cullen; a weak verb. Spelt cullen. P. Plowman, A. i. 64; cullen (various reading, killen), id. B. i. 66. The old sense appears to be simply 'to hit' or 'strike'. 'We kylle of this heued' = we strike off thy head; Allit. Poesme, ed. Morris, B. 876. 'Dauh a word cule þe ful herde up o þine herte' — though a word stroke the full hard upon the heart; Ancren Riwle, p. 136, l. 13; with which compare: 'þe cul of þer ex' = the stroke of the axe; id. p. 128, l. 1. 'Ofte me hine culde'; often people struck him; Layamon, l. 20319. If a native word, it answers to an AS. type cyllan*, from the weak grade, c(w)ul, of cwæl-an, to die; of which F. quell is the causal form. The sense 'to strike' is somewhat against this; but there is a parallel form in Erics. kullen, to vex, strike, beat; which suits very well; cf. also OHG. cullen, to vex, kill, martyr, allied to quellan, with the same sense. For the loss of w, cf. dall, which is related to dwell. See QUALL. ¶ It bears some resemblance to Icel. kalla, to hit on the head, to harm; from kollr, top, summit, head, crown, shaven crown, pate; cf. Norweg. kylla, to poll, to cut the shoots off trees; from Norweg. koll, the top, head, crown; Aasen. But this hardly seems the right solution. Der. kill-er.

KILN, a large oven for drying corn, bricks, &c.; bricks piled for burning. (I.) 'Kylne, Kyll, for malt drying, Ustrina'; Prompt. Parv., p. 274; kylne, Reliquie Antiquæ, ii. 81. AS. cýln, a drying-house; 'Siccatorium, cýln, vel ast'; Wright's Vocab., i. 58 (where ast = ast = E. oast in oast-house, a drying-house). Also spelt cýlne in the Corpus glossary, l. 906. β. Merely borrowed from L. culina, a kitchen; whence the sense was easily transferred to that of 'drying-house'. The Icel. kýlna, Swed. küna, a kiln, are from the same source; so also W. cýlyn, cyl, a kiln. See CULINARY.

KILOGRAMME, KILOGRAM, a weight containing 1000 grammes; about 2.205 lb. avoirdupois. (F. - Gk.) F. kilogramme (1795). - F. kilo-, for Gk. χίλος, a thousand; and F. gramme, for Gk. γρᾶμμα, a letter, also taken to mean a small weight.

KILOMETRE, a length of 1000 metres; nearly five furlongs. (F. - Gk.) F. kilometre (1795). - F. kilo-, for Gk. χίλος, a thousand; and F. metre, a metre. See METRE.

KILT, a very short petticoat worn by the Highlanders of Scotland. (Scand.) The sb. is merely derived from the verb kilt, to tuck up, added by Todd to Johnson's Dict.; he makes no mention of the sb. 'Her tartan petticoat she'll kilt', i.e. tuck up; Burns, Author's Earnest Cry, st. 17. 'Kilt, to tuck up the clothes'; Brockett's North-Country Words. G. Douglas translates Virgil's Nuda genu (En. i. 320) by kiltit. 'To kyle, succingere'; Cath. Anglicum (1483). - Dan. kille, to tuck up; Swed. dial. killa, to swathe or swaddle a child (Rietz); MSwed. uphilla, to tuck up (Thre). Cf. Icel. kiltung, a skirt. β. There is an allied sb., signifying 'lap'; occurring in Swed. dial. killa, the lap; cf. Icel. kjalla, the lap, kjalla-barn, a baby in the lap, kjalla-rakki, a lap-dog.

KIMBO; see this discussed under AKIMBO.

KIN, relationship, affinity, genus, race. (E.) ME. kun, kyne, kin. 'I have no kun here' = I have no kindred there. P. Plowman, A. vi. 118, where some MSS. have kyne; spelt kyne, id. B. v. 639. AS. cýnn; Grein, i. 177. + OSax. kyunn; Icel. kyne, kin, kindred, tribe; cf. kyinni, acquaintance; Du. kunne, sex; Goth. kin, kin, race, tribe. β. Teut. type kunjom*, neut. From Teut. kun*, weak grade of the root KEN, equivalent to Idg. GEN*, to generate; whence L. genus. See GENUS, GENERATE. Der. from the same source are kind, q.v., kindred, q.v., king, q.v. Also kins-man = kin's man = man of the same kin or tribe, Much Ado, v. 4. 112; kins-woman, id. iv. 1. 305; kins-folk, Iake, ii. 44.

KIND (1), sb., nature, sort, character. (E.) ME. kund, kunde, kind, kinde; Chaucer, C. T. 2453 (A 2451); spelt kunde, Ancren Riwle, p. 14, l. 10. AS. cýnd, generally gecýnd; Grein, i. 387, 388; the prefix ge- making no difference to the meaning; the most usual sense is 'nature'. Teut. type kindiz*, fem.; from kuns*, base of kun-jom*, kin, with suffix -dis = Idg. -tis. See KIN. Der. kind-ly, adj., ME. kyndli = natural, Wyclif, Wisdom, xii. 10, and so used in the Litany in the phr. 'kindly fruits'; whence also kindli-ness. Also kind (2) below.

KIND (2), adj., natural, loving. (E.) ME. kunde, kinde; Chaucer, C. T. 8478 (E 602). 'For þe kunde folk of þe lond' = for the native people of the land; Rob. of Glouc. p. 40, l. 937. A common meaning is 'natural' or 'native'. AS. cýnde, natural, native, in-born; more usually gecýnde, where the common prefix ge- does not alter the sense; Grein, i. 178, 388. Teut. type kind-ess*, from the sb. kindiz*; see the sb. above. Der. kind-ness, ME. kindenesse (four syllables); Chaucer, C. T. 5533 (B 1113); kind-ly, adv.; kind-hearted, Shak. Sonnet 10.

KINDLE (1), to set fire to, inflame. (Scand.) ME. kindlen; Chaucer, C. T. 12415 (C 481); Havelok, 915; Ormulum, 13442. Formed from Icel. kynda, to light a fire, kindle; Swed. dial. kynda, kynda, to kindle. β. But Icel. kyndill, Swed. dial. kyndel, a torch, has evidently been affected by AS. candel, a candle (from L. candila); as shown by Icel. kyndill-messa. Candelmas; adapted from AS. candel-mæsse, Candelmas, at the time of the introduction of Christianity into Iceland. Der. kind-er.

KINDLE (2), to bring forth young. (E.) 'The cony that you see dwell where she is kindled'; As You Like It, iii. 2. 358. ME. kindlen, kundlen. 'Thet is the uttre oundunge thet kundli wrethe' — it is the outward temptation that produces wrath, Ancren Riwle, p. 194, l. 20: where we also find, immediately below, the sentence: 'thus beoþ thea inre oundunge the seonem heaned-sunen and hore fule kundles' — thus the inward temptations are the seven chief sins and their foul progeny. Cf. also: 'Kyndlyn, or byryng forthe yonge kyndelyngis, Feto, effeto'; Prompt. Parv., p. 275. And in Wyclif, Luke, iii. 7, we find kyndlis of eddis in the earlier, and kyndlyngis of eddis in the latter version, where the A. V. has 'generation of vipers'. β. The verb kindlen, to produce, and the sb. kindel, a generation, are due to the sb. kind; see KIND (1). We may probably regard the sb. kindel as a derivative of kind, and the verb as formed from it. Both words refer, in general, to a numerous progeny, a litter, esp. with regard to rabbits, &c.

KINDRED, relatives, relationship. (E.) The former d is excrecent, the true form being kindred, which occurs occasionally in Shakespeare; as, e.g. in Much Ado, ii. i. 68 (first folio). 'All the kindred of Marius'; Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 47, l. 27. ME. kinrede, Chaucer, C. T. 2792 (A 2790); spelt cyndreden, St. Juliana, ed. Cockayne, p. 60, l. 13. Composed of AS. cýn, kin (see KIN), and the suffix -reden, signifying 'condition', or more literally 'rule'. The AS. cýnreden does not appear, but we find the parallel word kinreden, a household, Matt. x. 6; and the same suffix is preserved in E. kat-reden. Riden is connected with the Goth. garadeins, rule, and the adj. Ready, q.v. Der. kindred, adj., K. John, iii. 4. 14.

KINE, cows. (E.) Not merely the plural, but the double plural form; it is impossible to regard it as a contraction of cowens, as some have absurdly supposed. α. The AS. cū, a cow, made the pl. cý, with the usual vowel-change of ū to ý; cf. mās (E. mousse), pl. mýs (E. mice). Hence the ME. ky (= cows); Barbour, Bruce, vi. 405; and still common in Lowland Scotch. The kye stock rowing 'the loan'; Burns, The Two Dogs, l. 5 from end. β. By the addition of -en, a weakened form of an from AS. en, an-ending -en, was formed the double plural ky-en, so spelt in the Trinity College MSS. of P. Plowman, B. vi. 142, where other MSS. have kyne, kyne, kyne, kyne. Hence kine in Gen. xxiii. 15; &c. See COW. Cf. ey-ne for ey-en (AS. æg-an), old pl. of eye (AS. ēage). Also MDu. kayen, pl. of koe, a cow. γ. Or kine may represent the AS. gen. pl. cýna, used with numerals; the evidence is insufficient.

KINEMATIC, relating to motion. (Gk.) From Gk. κίνημα, stem of κίνηω, movement; from κίνηω, to move; with adj. suffix -ic.

KINETIC, causing motion. (Gk.) From κίνηω, moving; from κίνηω, to move.

KING, a chief ruler, monarch. (E.) ME. king, a contraction of an older form kinig or kyning. Spelt king, Ancren Riwle, p. 138, last line; kinig, Mark, xv. 2 (Hattat MS.). AS. cýning, also cýnig; cýnig, cýnyng, Mark, xv. 2; Grein, i. 179. - AS. cýn, a tribe; race; kin; with suffix -ing. The suffix -ing means 'belonging to,'

and is frequently used with the sense 'son of,' as in 'Ælfred Æþelwulf' = Ælfred son of Æthelwulf; A. S. Chronicle, an. 871. Thus cyn-ing = son of the tribe, i. e. chosen of the tribe, or man of rank. 4. OSax. huning, a king, from huni, huni, a tribe; OFriesic kinig, kenig, from ken, a tribe; Icel. konung, a king, with which cf. Olcel. konr, a noble, Icel. hyn, a kind, kin, tribe; Swed. konung; Dan. konig; Du. konig; G. könig, MHG. künig, OHG. chuning, kunne; from MHG. künne, OHG. chunni, a race, kind. See King. 5. Or else cyn-ing is 'son of a noble,' from AS. cyn-e, royal; the ultimate result is the same. See below. Der. king-crab, king-craft, king-cup, Spenser, Shepherd's Calendar, April, l. 141; king-fisher (so called from the splendour of its plumage), Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 10; king-less, Rob. of Glouc. p. 105 (l. 2289); king-let, a double diminutive, with suffixes -l- and -et; king-like, king-by, ME. kingly, Lydgate's Minor Poems, p. 20; king-li-ness. Also king's bench, so called because the king used to sit in court; king's evil, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xx. c. 4 (end), and in Palsgrave, so called because it was supposed that a king's touch could cure it. And see kingdom.

KINGDOM, the realm of a king. (E.) ME. kingdom, kyngdom; P. Plowman, B. vi. 155. Evidently regarded as a compound of king with suffix -dom; and AS. cyningdom occurs thrice in the poem of Daniel. But, as a fact, the commoner form was kinadom; 'þene kinadom of heouene' = the kingdom of heaven, Ancræn Riwle, p. 148, l. 3. AS. cyneþing, a kingdom; Grein, l. 179. 2. The former is cognate with OSax. kingadom, ONorse konungadom. The latter was formed (with suffix -dom) from the adj. cyn, royal, very common in composition, but hardly used otherwise. This adj. answers nearly to Icel. konr, a man of royal or noble birth; and is related to King and King. Thus the alteration from ME. kinge to E. king makes little practical difference. 3. So also, for king-by, there is an AS. cynele, royal; Grein, l. 179.

KINK, a twist in a rope. (Du.) 'Kink, a twist or short convulsion in a rope;' Brockett, Gloss. of North Country Words, ed. 1846. = Du. kink, a twist in a rope; but prob. of Scand. origin. Cf. Norw. and Swed. kink, a twist in a rope; also Low G. kinke, a twist in a thread. 2. From a Teut. base KEK, to bend; appearing in Icel. kinna, to sink at the knees through a heavy burden, keir, to bend backwards, keirja, to bend backwards. The base well preserved in Norw. kika, to twist, keika, to bend back or aside, kinka, to writhe, twist, kink, a twist (Ancræn). 3. There is an ultimate relation to Chinook, q. v. And see Kink.

KIOSK, a Turkish open summer-house, small pavilion. (F. = Turk. = Pers.) In Byron, Corsair, iii. 1. Spelt ciocque in French. = Turk. kiosk, kiosk (with k pronounced as h), ciocque; Zenker's Dict., p. 774. = Pers. ciocque, a palace, a villa; a portico, or similar projection in a palace, Rich. Diet. p. 1217; a palace, kiosk, Palmer's Dict. col. 496. Devic remarks that the i is due to the Turkish practice of inserting a slight i after k.

KIPPER, to cure or preserve salmon. (E.) This meaning is quite an accidental one, arising from a practice of curing kipper-salmon, i. e. salmon during the spawning season. Such fish, being inferior in kind, were cured instead of being eaten fresh. 'Kipper-time, a space of time between May 3 and Twelfth-day, during which salmon-fishing in the river Thames was forbidden;' Kersey, ed. 1715. But some explain kipper to mean a salmon before spawning. It answers exactly, in form, to AS. cypera, a kind of salmon; though the precise sense is not known. 'Eow fin lysted leax oððe cypera, You wish to catch a salmon or a kipper; Metres of Boethius, v. 12. KIPPER, a church. (North. E. = Gk.) The North. E. form; see Burns, The Two Dogs, l. 10. ME. kirke, P. Plowman, B. v. 1; Ormulum, 3531. Cf. Icel. kirja; Dan. kirke; Swed. kyrka; borrowed from AS. circa, circa, a church. Of Gk. origin. See Church.

KIRTLE, a sort of gown or petticoat. (L. = with E. coffa.) Used rather vaguely. ME. hirtel, Chaucer, C. 7. 331; hirtel, Ancræn Riwle, p. 10. AS. cyrtel, to translate L. pallia; Ælfric's Gloss., in Voc. 107. 26. Also ONorthumbrian cyrtel, to translate L. tunica; Matt. v. 40 (Lindisfarne MS.); Icel. kyrtill, a kirtle, tunic, gown; Dan. hjørte, a tunic; Swed. hjørte, a petticoat. 2. Evidently a diminutive, with suffix -el, for -il. From L. curtus, short; which also appears in Du. kurt, G. kurz, short. See Curt.

KISMET, fate, destiny. (Turk. = Pers. = Arab.) First in 1849. = Turk. gismet, fate. = Pers. gismet, fate. = Arab. gisma (?), a portion; fate, destiny. = Arab. root qasama, he divided.

KISS, a salute with the lips, osculation. (E.) ME. cos, kos, cus, kus; later kiss, kiss. The vowel i is really proper only to the verb, which is formed from the sb. by vowel-change. 'And he cam to þesus, to kiss him; And þesus said, xiiij. Judas, with a cos thou betrayest many sone;' Wyclif, Luke, xxii. 47, 48. The form kuss is as late as Skelton, Phylip Sparowe, 361. In the Ancræn Riwle, p. 102, we find cos, nom. sing., coses, pl., cosse, dat. sing.;

as well as cus, verb in the imperative mood. AS. cos, sb., a kiss, Luke, xxii. 48; whence cyssan, to kiss, id. xxii. 47. 4. Du. kus, sb., whence kussen, vb.; Icel. koss, sb., whence kysa, vb.; Dan. kys, sb., kysse, vb.; Swed. kys, sb., kysa, vb.; G. kuss, MHG. kus, sb., whence küssen, vb. 2. All from a Teut. type kussaz*, sb. Cf. Goth. kukjan, to kiss; EFries. kük, a kiss. Der. kiss, verb; as shown above.

KISTVAEN, the same as Cistvaen, q. v.

KIT (1), a vessel of various kinds, a milk-pail, tub; hence, an outfit. (Du.) 'A kit, a little vessel, Cantharus;' Levins. 'Hoc mulj[er]trum, a kytt;' Voc. 696. 14. In Barbour's Brace, b. xviii. l. 168, we are told that Gib Harper's head was cut off, salted, put into 'a kyt,' and sent to London. = M1n. kitte, 'a great wooden bowl, or tankard,' Hexham; Du. kit, 'a wooden can;' Sewel. Cf. Norweg. kitte, a large corn-bin in the wall of a house (Ansen). Kit, an outfit, a collection, set, lot, is the same word (N. E. D.).

KIT (2), a small violin. (F. = L. = Gk.) 'I'll have his little gut to string a kit with;' Jesum, and Fletcher, Philaster, Act v. sc. 4 (4th Citizen). Abbreviated from MF. quittera, a cittern, or cithern, Cot. = OF. quittera (Roquefort); which is borrowed from L. cithara. See Cithern, Cithara. Godefroy, s. v. quittera, a player on a cittern, quotes the by-form quitterner. The form is North. F.; Norm. dial. quittera, Moisy, ed. 1895.

KIT-KAT, KIT-KAT, the name given to portraits of a particular size. (Personal name.) = A portrait of about 28 by 36 in. in size is thus called, because it is the size adopted by Sir Godfrey Kneller (died 1723) for painting portraits of the members of the Kit-kat club. This club, founded in 1703, was so named because the members used to dine at the house of Christopher Kat, a pastry-cook in King's Street, Westminster [or in Shire Lane, near Temple Bar; see Spectator, no. 9, and note in Morley's edition;] Haydn, Dict. of Dates. 'Immortal made, as Kit Kat by his pies;' W. King, Art of Poetry, letter viii; pr. in 1708. 2. Kit is a familiar abbreviation of Christopher, a name of Gk. origin, from Gk. Χριστο-φόρος, lit. 'Christ-bearing.'

KITCHEN, a room where food is cooked. (L.) The t is inserted. ME. kichen, kychene, kechene, Will. of Palerne, 1681, 1707; 2171; kykyne, P. Plowman, B. v. 261. Spelt kuchene, Ancræn Riwle, p. 214. AS. cykene, coquina; Voc. 283. 12. = Lat. L. cucina, for cognina, a kitchen; = L. coquere, to cook; see Cook. Der. kitchen-maid, kitchen-stuff, kitchen-garden.

KITE, a voracious bird; a toy for flying in the air. (E.) ME. kite, kyte (disyllabic); Chaucer, C. T. 1181 (A 1170). AS. cyta; we find the entry 'Butio (sic), cyta' in Ælfric's Gloss. (Nomina Auium); and in the Corpus Glossary, 332. The L. butio is properly a bittern; but doubtless butio is meant, signifying a kind of falcon or hawk. The y was long, as shown by the modern sound; cf. E. mice with AS. mȳs. 2. Teut. type kut-jon*, an agential form. Prob. from its swift flight; cf. Norw. kuta (pt. t. kaut), to run, go swiftly (Ansen). 3. The toy called a kite is mentioned in Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 414; and is named from its hovering in the air.

KITH, kindred, acquaintance, sort. (E.) Usual in the phrase 'kith and kin.' ME. cuððe, kyþe, kith; see Gower, C. A. ii. 267, bk. v. 4180; P. Plowman, B. xv. 497. AS. cyððu, native land, cyðð, relationship; Grein, l. 181, 182. = AS. cuðð, known; pp. of cunnan, to know; see Can (1) and Kythe.

KITLING, a kitten. (Scand.) Palsgrave has kytling (1530). = Icel. ketling, a kitten, dimin. of kíttr (stem kattu), a cat. Cognate with E. cat; see Cat. 2. The ME. killing, kelling, also meant a whelp, or young of any animal; perhaps it was influenced by L. cattulus, a whelp. It first appears in 'the kittlings of lions;' E. Englar, lvi. 5; where the Vulgate has cattulorum lionum.

KITTEN, a young cat. (F. = L.) ME. kyton, P. Plowman, C. i. 204, 207; kittoun, id., B. prol. 190, 202. From an AF. kytoun, variant of OF. chyton, a kitten, used by Gower, Mirour de l'Omme, l. 8221. Again, AF. kytoun is a variant of Norm. F. caton, Northern form of F. chaton, a kitten, formed from F. chat, a cat, with suffix -on (cf. L. -ionem). = Folk-L. cattum, acc. of cattus, for L. cattus, a cat. See Cat. Cf. MF. chaiton. 'Chaiton, a killing or young cat;' Cot. For the i-sound, cf. Low G. katte, kitte, ketin, kitin, i. a female cat; kitten, a kitten (Schambach). 2. The true E. form is kit-ling; see above. Note also the old verb to kittle, to produce young as a cat does. Cf. Norw. kytling, a killing or kitten, kytla, to kittle or kitten; Ansen. 3. 'I kyttell, as a catte dothe, he chaitonne. Gossyppe, whan your catte kyttelleth, I praye you let me haue a kytlyng (chaiton);' Palsgrave; cf. Way's note in Prompt. Parv. p. 277.

KIWI, the apteryx, a wingless bird. (Maori.) First in 1835. The native name in New Zealand; so called from the note of the bird. See Austral English; by E. E. Morris.

KLEPTOMANIA, an irresistible propensity to theft. (Gk.)

Spelt cleptomani in 1830. — Gk. κλεπτο-, for κλεπτή, a thief; and mania, frenzy; see MANIA.

KNACK, a snap, quick motion, dexterity, trick. (E.) 'The more quaint knacks that they make' — the more clever tricks they practise; Chaucer, C. T. A 4051 (Harl. MS.). On which Tyrwhitt remarks: 'The word seems to have been formed from the knacking or snapping of the fingers made by jugglers.' For this explanation, he refers us to Cotgrave. 'Matassier des mains, to move, knack, or wrangle the fingers, like a juggler, plier, jester, &c.:' Cot. 'Niquet, a knick, tick, snap with the teeth or fingers, a trifle, nifle, bable [bauble], matter of small value;' id. 'Faire la nique, to threaten or defie, by putting the thumb nail into the mouth, and with a jerke (from the upper teeth) make it to knack;' id. The word is clearly (like crack, click) of imitative origin; cf. EFries. knakken (base knakan*), pt. t. knook, knük, to snap, make a snapping noise. + Du. knakken; Norw. knaka, Swed. knaka, Dan. knage, to crack. [Gael. cnac, a crack, is from E. crack.] The senses are (1) a snap, crack, (2) a snap with the finger or nail, (3) a jester's trick, piece of dexterity, (4) a joke, trifle, toy. See Shak. Mids. Tr. i. 1. 34; Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 67; Wint. Talc, iv. 4. 360, 439. ¶ A similar succession of ideas is seen in Du. knaf, a crack; knappen, to crack, snap; knaf, clever, nimble; knaphandig, nimble-handed, dexterous. See KNAP. Der. knick-knack, q. v. ¶ The F. nique (above) is from Du. knikken, to crack slightly, an attenuated form of knakken. And see Knook.

KNACKER, a dealer in old horses. (E.) Now applied to a dealer in old horses and dogs' meat. Prob. it meant at first a dealer in knacks, i. e. trifles or worthless articles. See KNACK, above. 2. We also find 'Knacker, one that makes collars and other furniture for cart-horses;' Ray, South and East Country Words, 1691 (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 16). Perhaps from Icel. knakkr, a man's saddle; cf. knakkmar, a saddle-horse.

KNAG, a knot in wood, a peg, branch of a deer's horn. (E.) 'I schall lyt hynde on a knagge;' — I shall hang it on a peg; Le Bone Florence, l. 1795; in Kitson, Metrical Romances, v. iii. 'A knagge in wood, bosse;' Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave. We read also of the 'sharp and branching knags' of a stag's horn; Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 1039. Not found in AS. EFries. knagge, a knot in wood, a stump. Cf. also Low G. knagge, knot, peg (Lübben); Norw. knagg, a knag, short branch; Swed. knagg, a knag, knot; Dan. knag, a peg, cog. We also find Irish cnag, a knob, peg, cnag, a knot in wood; Gael. cnag, a pin, peg, knob; borrowed from E. Der. knag-gy.

KNAP, to snap, break with a noise. (E.) 'He hath knapped the spear in sonder;' Ps. xli. 9, in the Bible of 1535, also of 1551; still preserved in the Prayer-book version. 'As lying a gossip as ever knapped ginger;' Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 'Thow can knap down [knock down] caponis;' Henryson, Wolf and Fox. Not in AS.; EFries. knappen. Of imitative origin; cf. EFries. knaf, a cracking, a snap. + Du. knappen, to crack, snap, catch, crush, eat; whence knapper, (1) hard gingerbread, (2) a lie, untruth [this brings out the force of Shakespeare's phrase]; Dan. knæp, to snap, crack with the fingers; knep, a snap, crack, fillip. Cf. Swed. knep, a trick, artifice; bruka knep, to play tricks; which illustrates the use of the parallel word knack, q. v. Der. knap-sack.

KNAPSACK, a provision-bag, case for necessities used by travellers. (Du.) 'And each one fills his knapsack of his scrip;' Drayton, The Battle of Agincourt, 6th st. from end. = Du. knapsak, a knapsack; orig. a provision-bag. = Du. knaf, eating, knappen, to crack, crush, eat; and zak, a bag, sack, pocket. Cf. Westphalian knapp, a piece of bread (Frank). See KNAP and Snack.

KNAP, a hill-top; KNAPWEED, knopweed; see KNOP.

KNAR, a knot in wood. (E.) See Gnarled and Knur.

KNAVE, a boy, servant, sly fellow, villain. (E.) The older senses are 'boy' and 'servant.' ME. knave (with u for v). 'A knave child' = a male child, boy; Chaucer, C. T. 8320, 8323 (E 444, 447). 'The kokes knave, that wasse the dishes;' = the cook's boy, that washes the dishes; Ancien Riwle, p. 380, l. 8. AS. cnafa, a boy, another form of cnaga, a boy; cnaga occurs in Matt. xii. 18, and in Ps. lxxxv. 15, ed. Spelman, where another reading (in the latter passage) is cnafa. + Du. knaf, a lad, servant, fellow; Icel. knafi, a servant-boy; Swed. knäff, a rogue (a dimin. form); G. knabe, a boy; OHG. knappo, also knabo, as to which see Streitberg, § 131 (5). B. The origin of the word is doubtful; but it is generally supposed that the initial kn- corresponds to the weak grade of the GEN, to beget. Cp. Genus. And see Knight. Der. knau-isk, Chaucer, C. T. 17154 (H 205); knau-isk-ly; knau-er-y, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 3. 9.

KNED, to work flour into dough, mould by pressure. (E.) ME. kneden, Chaucer, C. T. 4092 (A 4094); Ormulum, 1486. AS. cnedan, to knead, very rare; in the ONorthumbrian versions of Luke, xiii. 21, the L. fermentetur is glossed by sie gedærsted vel geenoden in the Lindisfarne MS., and by sie gedærsted vel cneden in the Rushworth MS.; hence we infer the strong verb cnedan, with pt. t. cnæd, and pp. cnæden. We also find the form gecnædan, Gen. xviii. 6; where the prefix ge- does not affect the force of the verb. The verb has become a weak one, the pp. passing from knoden to kneden in the 15th century, as shown by the entry: 'Knoden, knæd, Pistus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 280. + Du. kneden; Icel. knöð, Swed. knäda (both from the weak grade); G. kneten, OHG. cnætan. Teut. type knedan-, pt. t. knud, pp. knædauz*. Further allied to Russ. gnëdat, gnësti, to press, squeeze, from an Idg. base gnē-*, to press. Der. knæd-ing-trough, ME. knæding-trough, Chaucer, C. T. 3548.

KNEE, the joint of the lower leg with the thigh. (E.) ME. kne, knee; pl. knees, Chaucer, C. T. 5573 (B 1153); also cnœ, pl. cnœn (= kneen), Ancien Riwle, p. 16, last line but one. AS. cnœð, cnœw, a knee; Grein, i. 164. + Du. knē; Icel. kné; Dan. knæ; Swed. knä; G. knie, OHG. chniu; Goth. knīu. Teut. type knewom*, neut. Allied to L. genu; Gk. gývō; Skt. jānu, knee. B. The Idg. related bases are genu-* (as in L.), gonu-* (as in Gk.), and gneu-* (answering to Teut. kneu-*). The loss of vowel in the weak grade is well illustrated by the Gk. γνῦ-μερος, fallen upon the knees. Der. knée-d, knee-pan; also knuel, q. v. And see geni-culate, geni-fection, penitagon, hexagon, &c.

KNEEL, to fall on the knees. (E.) ME. knēlen, Havelok, 1320; Ormulum, 6138. AS. cnœwlian, to kneel, various reading for gecnœwlian in Canons under k. Edgar; see N. E. D. and Thorpe, Anc. Laws, ii. 282, § xvi. + Du. knēlen; Low G. knēlen (Lübben); whence Dan. knæle, to kneel. Formed from knee (AS. cnœw) by adding -l-, to denote the action.

KNELL, KNOLL, to sound as a bell, toll. (E.) 'Where bells have knolled to church;' As You Like It, ii. 7. 114: 'I knolle a belle, Je frappe du batout;' Palsgrave. ME. knellen; 'And lette also the belles knille;' Myrc's Instructions for Parish Priests, ed. Peacock, l. 779. 'Knyllyng of a belle, Tintillacio;' Prompt. Parv. p. 279. The orig. sense is to beat so as to produce a sound. AS. cnellan, to beat noisily; in the ONorthumb. version of Luke, xi. 9, we find: 'cnyllaß and ontmynd bið iow' = knock and it shall be opened to you (Rushworth MS.). We find also AS. cnyl, a knell, the sound of a bell (Bosworth). The AS. verb = Teut. knud-jan*, whence ME. knellen, of which knell and knoll are later variants (prob. of imitative origin). From a Teut. base knel-* (whence knal*, knud-* by gradation); as in the OHG. strong verb er-knellan, to resound. Cp. Du. knallen, to give a loud report; knal, a clap, a report; Dan. knalde (= knalle), to explode; knalde med en yidsk, to crack a whip; knald (= knall), a crack; Swed. knalla, to make a noise, to thunder; knall, a report, loud noise; G. knallen, to make a loud noise; knall, a report, explosion; Icel. gnella, to scream. B. All words of imitative origin, like knack, knaf, knuck. ¶ We find also W. cnill, a passing-bell, cnul, a knell; borrowed from E. Der. knell, sb., Temp. i. 2. 402.

KNICKERBOCKERS, loose knee-breeches. (Du.) First in 1859. 'The name is said to have been given to them because of their resemblance to the knee-breeches of the Dutchmen in Cruikshank's illustrations to W. Irving's Hist. of New York;' N. E. D. This book came out under the pseudonym of Dietrich Knickerbocker.

KNICK-KNACK, a trick, trifle, toy. (E.) A reduplication of knack in the sense of 'trick,' as formerly used; or in the sense of 'toy,' as generally used now. 'But if you see these knick-knacks, i. e. these tricks; Beaumont and Fletcher, Loyal Subject, ii. 1 (Theodore). The reduplication is effected in the usual manner, by the attenuation of the radical vowel a to i; cf. click-click, ding-dong, pit-a-pat. Cf. Du. knikken, to crack, snap, weakened form of knakken, to crack. See further under Knack.

KNIFE, an instrument for cutting. (E.) ME. knif, cnif; pl. knives (with u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 233. The sing. knif is in the Ancien Riwle, p. 282, last line but one. AS. cnif, a knife (late), Voc. 329. 17. EFries. knif, also knip. + Du. knif; Icel. knif, knif; Dan. kniv; Swed. knif; G. (provincial) knief, a hedging-bill, clasp-knife (Flügel); Low G. knif, knip (Lübben). B. The root is uncertain; if we may take knip-* as the Teut. base, we may perhaps connect it with the verb which appears in Du. knippen, to pinch, nip; G. knipen, to pinch, knipfen, to nip, squeeze. See Nip. ¶ The F. cnif is of Teut. origin. Der. knif-edge.

KNIGHT, a youth, servant, man at arms. (E.) ME. ME knight; see Chaucer's Knights Tale. AS. cnicht, a boy, servant; Grein, i. 165; OMerc. cnicht (O. E. Texts). + Du. knacht, a servant, waiter, whence Dan. knægt, a servant, knave (at cards); Swed. knækt, a soldier, knave (at cards); G. knacht, a man-servant. B. Origin uncertain; the AS. suffix -iht, -iht is adjectival, as in stān-ih = stony. Probably cn-ih is from cn-, weak grade of cen-, Idg. gen-, as in Gk. γῆν-ος, kin, cf. Gk. γῆν-ος, legitimate, allied to γῆν-ος. Thus cn-ih may = cn-ih, i. e. belonging to the 'kin' or tribe; it would thus signify one of age to be admitted among the men of the tribe. Der. knicht, verb, knicht-ly, Wyclif, a Macc. viii. 9, with which cf. AS. cniklic, boyish (Bosworth); knicht-hood, ME. knichthod, P. Plowman, B. prol. 111, from AS. cnikhad, lit. boyhood, youth (Bosworth); knicht-errant, a Hen. IV. v. 4-24; knicht-errantry.

KNIT, to form into a knot. (E.) ME. knitten, Chaucer, C. T. 1130 (A 1128); P. Plowman, B. prol. 169. AS. cnytan, cuitan; 'Necto, ic cnytt', Ælfrie, Gram. ed. Zupitza, p. 214; the comp. be-cnyttan is used in Ælfrie's Homilies, i. 476, l. 5. Formed by vowel-change from Teut. knut*-, base of AS. cnotta, a knot; + Icel. knýta, knýja, to knit; cf. knútr, a knot; Dan. knytte, to tie in a knot, knit; Swed. knäta, to knit, tie; knut, knot. See Knót. Der. knitt-er, knitt-ing.

Leechdoms, i. 168, note 8. + Icel. knoka, to knock. An imitative word; from Teut. knuk*-, weak grade allied to knuk*-. See Knack. Cf. Low G. knuk, a knock. Der. knuck, sb., knock-kneet, knock-er.

KNOLL (1), the top of a hill, a hillock, mound. (E.) ME. knol, a hill, mound; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, i. 4129. And cf. Swed. dial. knall, a knoll. We also find W. cnol, a knoll, hillock; from E.

KNOLL (2), the same as Knell, q.v. (E.)

KNOP, KNOB, a protuberance, bump, round projection. (E.) Knob is a derivative, yet occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 635 (A 633), where we find the pl. knobbes, from a singular knobbi (dissyllabic). Knop is in Exod. xxv. 31, 33, 36 (A. V.). The pl. knoppis is in Wyclif, Exod. xxvi. 11; spelt knoppes, Rom. of the Rose, 1683, 1685, where it means 'rose-buds'. It also occurs in the sense of a hill-top (N. E. D.). [It is perhaps allied to knup, in the sense of 'hill-top'; as in: 'some high knup or tuft of a mountaine'; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xi. c. 11.] + Du. knop, a knob, pommel, button, bud; allied to knop, a knob, button, knot, tie; Dan. knop, a knob, bud; Swed. knopp, a knob; allied to knop, a knob; G. knopf, a knob, button, pommel, bud. Teut. stem knuppo*-; and Du. knop is from Teut. stem knau*po-; both from a Teut. base knep*-. (Frank). β. With a different vowel, we find E. knop (as above), from AS. cnæpp, a hill-top, Luke, iv. 29; Numb. xiv. 44; allied to Icel. knapp, a knot, stud, button; MSwed. knapp, a button; Dan. knop, a knob, button; Low G. knapp, a hill (Schmablach). And this may be allied to knop, to strike; cf. bump. See Knap. Knop, in the sense of 'to beat,' occurs in King Lear, ii. 4. 125. Der. knop-swed or knop-swed.

KNÖT, a tight fastening, bond, cluster. (E.) ME. knott (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 10715 (F 401). AS. cnotta, a knot; Ælfrie's Hom. ii. 386, l. 22. + Du. knut, Low G. knutte. Teut. type knutton*- (whence E. knit); from a base knup*-. β. We also find OHG. knodo, a knob, from a Teut. type knūpon*-. Idg. type gnūton*-; as well as OHG. knoto, G. knoten, a knob, a knot, from a Teut. type knubōn*-. Idg. type gnūbōn*-. γ. KNOUT, a whip used as an instrument of punishment in Russia. (Russian—Scand.) Not in Todd's Johnson.—Russ. knute, a whip, scourge; but spelt as in French. Not a Slavonic word.—Swed. knut (Icel. knútr), a knot. See Knót (γ). Der. knout, verb.

KNOW, to be assured of, recognise. (E.) ME. knowen; pt. t. knæw, Chaucer, C. T. 5474 (B 1054); 1 p. knowen, id. 5310 (B 890). AS. cnāwan, pt. t. cnāwe, pp. cnāwen; gen. used with prefix ge, which does not affect the sense; Grein, i. 386. 4.—Icel. cná, I know how to, defective verb; OHG. chnāwan, to know, only in the compounds bi-chnāwan, ir-chnāwan, int-chnāwan; cited by Fick, iii. 41.—Russ. znate, to know, Oslavon. znati; L. nōscere (for gnōscere), to know; Gk. γινώσκω (fut. γνώσκει), a reduplicated form; Skt. jñā, to know. (1), Ken, Keen, &c. Brugmann, i. § 304. Der. know-ing, know-ing-ly; also know-ledge, q.v.

KNOWLEDGE, assured belief, information, skill. (E.) ME. knowlege, Chaucer, C. T. 12960; spelt knoweliche, knowliche in Six-text ed., B 1220. In the Cursor Mundi, 12162, the spellings are knawlege, knowlege, knawleche, knowleche. The d is a late insertion; and -lege is for older -leche. For know-, see above. As to the suffix, it is of verbal origin; the ch is a palatalised form of c as usual; and the ME. suffix -leche represents the AS. suffix -læcan, as in nēah-læcan, to draw nigh. β. The origin of this -læcan is not quite certain; I regard it as representing lācian*, from the substantival suffix -lāc, preserved in E. Wedlock, q.v. γ. The AS. -lāc corresponds to Icel. -leir; and we find a related word in Icel. kunnleir, knowledge. Der. acknowledge, a bad spelling of a-knowledge; see Acknowledge.

KNUCKLE, the projecting joint of the fingers. (E.) ME. knokil, 'Knokyl of an honde, knokil-bone, Condilus.' Prompt. Parv. 'Knokylle-bone of a legge, Coxa;' id. 'The knoklye of the fete;' Rel. Antiq. i. 190 (ab. 1375). Not found in AS.; the alleged form cnuc, due to Sommer, appears to be a fiction. Yet some such form probably existed, though not recorded; it occurs in OFrisic as knokle, knokle, + Du. knokkel, a knuckle (Sewel); dimin. of knokke, knake, a bone, or a knuckle (Hexham); Low G. knukkel; Dan. knokkel; Swed. knoge, a knuckle (in which the dimin. suffix is not added); G. knöchel, a knuckle, joint; connected with knuchen, a bone. Note MDu. knake; Hexham has: 'De knaest, knake, ofte Werre van een boom, the knob or knot of a tree.' All from a Teut. base knuk*-, perhaps allied to Knock. And cf. Knop.

KNURR, KNUR, a knot in wood, wooden ball. (E.) 'A knur, bruscum, gibbus.' Levins, 190. 16. 'Dosse, a knob, knot, or knur in a tree;' Cot. ME. knor. 'Without knot or knor, or any signe of goute;' Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, l. 2514. Not found in AS., but prob. a native word. EFrisic. knure. Cf. also MDu. knorre, a hard swelling, knot in wood (Kilian, Oudemans); Dan. knort, a knot, gnarl, knag; Swed. dial. knurr, knurra, a round knob on a tree; G. knurren, a hunch, lump, protuberance, knot in reed or straw; prov. LABEL, a small slip of paper, &c. (F.) Various uses. In heraldry, it denotes a small horizontal strip with (usually) three pendants or tassels. Also, a strip or slip of silk, parchment, or paper. ME. label; Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 22; where it denotes a movable slip or thin rule of metal, used on the front of the astrolabe, revolving on a central pin, and used as a sort of pointer.—OF. label, also lambel (F. lambeau), in the heraldic sense; see Hatzfeld. Cotgrave has: 'Lambel, a label of three points; Lambeau, a shread, rag, or small piece of stuffe or of a garment.' Of uncertain origin; perhaps allied to OLat. lamberare, to tear in pieces (Ascoli). Körting, § 3399. β. But the OF. label may be of Teut. origin; from OHG. lappa (G. lappen), a flap, rag, shred; see Lap (1). Der. label, verb; Twelfth Night, i. 5. 265.

LABIATE, having lips or lobes. (L.) A botanical term. Coined, as if from a L. pp. labiatus*, from L. labium, the lip. See LABIAL.

LABORATORY, a chemist's workroom. (L.) 'Laboratory, a chemist's workhouse'; Kersey, ed. 1715. And in Ben Jonson, Mercury Vindicated. Shortened from laboratory, by loss of e. 'Laboratory, a work-house'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Cf. MF. laboratoire, 'an laboratory, or workhouse'; Cot. Formed, as if from a L. laboratōrium*, from laborāre, to take pains, compounded of L. ē, out, extremely, and laborāre, to work. See ELABORATE, LABOUR.

LABORIOUS, toilsome. (F.—L.) ME. laborious; Gower, Conf. Amant. ii. 90; bk. iv. 2636.—F. laborieux, 'laborious'; Cot.—L. laboriosus, toilsome; formed with suffix -osus from labori, decl. stem of labor. See LABOUR. Der. laboriosus, -ness.

LABOUR, toil, work. (F.—L.) ME. labour (accented on -our); Chaucer, C. T. 2195 (A 2193).—OF. labour, later labour.—L. labōrem, acc. of labor (oldest form labūm), labour, toil. β. Perhaps allied to labāre, to totter, to sink, from the idea of struggling with a heavy weight (Hral). Der. labour, verb, ME. labouren, Chaucer, C. T. 186; labour-ed; labour-er, ME. laborer, Chaucer, C. T. 1411 (A 1409); and see labor-i-us, labor-at-ory. ⚡ The spelling with final -our, answering to OF. -our, shows that the derivation is not from L. nom. labor, but from the acc. laborem.

LABURNUM, the name of a tree. (L.) In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xvi. c. 18.—L. laburnum; Pliny, xvi. 18. 31.

'Lacca, a kind of red gum'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715.—Hind. lak, the same as Pers. lak, lak, 'the substance commonly called gum-lac, being the nidus of an insect found deposited on certain trees in India, and from which a beautiful red lake is extracted, used in dyeing'; Richardson's Pers. Dict. p. 1272.—Skt. lakṣhā, lac, the animal dye; also lakṣa, lac; rakṣi, lac, from rakta, pp. of the verb rañj, to dye, to colour, to reddish; cf. Skt. rañga, colour, paint (Benley). Doublet, lake (2). Der. lacquer, gum-lac, shel-lac.

Imported from India in modern times; we speak of 'a lac of rupees'—100,000 rupees.—Hind. lakh, a hundred thousand.—Skt. lakṣhā, a lac, a hundred thousand; orig. 'a mark'; cf. Skt. lakṣ, to mark. According to H. H. Wilson, the reference is to the great number of lacca insects in a nest. See LACK in Yule. See Lao (1).

LACE, a cord, tie, plaited string. (F.—L.) ME. las, laas, King Alisaunder, 7698; Chaucer, C. T. 394 (A 392).—OF. las, a snare; MF. lags (F. lacs); cf. lags courant, a noose, running knot; Cot.—L. laqueum, acc. of laqueus, a noose, snare, knot. β. Perhaps allied to L. lacere, to allure, used in the comp. alliere, to allude, elicere, to draw out, delicere, to entice, delight. See DELIGHT. Der. lace, verb, Spenser, F. Q. v. 3. 3. Doublet, lasso. ⚡ The use of lace in the orig. sense of 'snare' occurs in Spenser, Maipopotms, 427. LACERATE, to tear. (L.) In Cotgrave, to translate F. lacerer; and in Minshew, ed. 1627.—L. lacerātus, pp. of lacerare, to tear, rend.—L. lacer, mangled, torn.—Gk. λαερός, torn; cf. laxis, a rent. Der. lacerat-in, lacerat-ive.

LACHRYMAL, LACRIMAL, pertaining to tears. (L.) The usual spelling lachrymal is false; it should be lacrimal. In anatomy, we speak of 'the lacrymal gland'. Spelt lachrymal in Holland, tr. of Pliny, bk. xxix. c. 6; p. 367; we find 'lachrymable, lamentable', 'lachrymate, to weep', and 'lachrymatory, a tear-bottle' in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. All formed from L. lacryma, a tear, better spelt lacruma or lacrima. β. The oldest form is lacrima (Festus); cognate with Gk. δακρυ, a tear, and with E. tear. See TEAR, sb. Der. from the same L. lacrima are lachrym-ose, lachrymat-ory.

LACK (1), want. (E.) The old sense is often 'failing', 'failure', or 'fault'. ME. lak, spelt lak, Havelok, l. 191; the pl. lakkes is in P. Plowman, B. x. 262. Not found in AS, but cf. EFries. lak, defect, blame; OFries. lek, damage, harm, lakia, to attack.—Du. lak, blemish, stain; whence laken, to blame; Low G. lak, defect, blame; MSwed. lack, defect, blame. We also find Icel. læk, defective, lacking. Der. lack, verb; see below.

LACK (2), to want, be destitute of. (E.) ME. lakken, Chaucer, C. T. 758, 11498 (A 756, F 1186); P. Plowman, B. v. 132. The verb is formed from the sb.; hence the verb is a weak one; and the pt. t. is lakkede, as in Chaucer. See therefore LACK (1) above.

LACKEY, another form of LACQUER, q. v.

LACKEY, LACQUEY, a footman, menial attendant. (F.—Span. 7.—Arab. 7.) In Shak. As You Like It, iii. 2. 314; Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 66. Also spelt alakey in Lowl. Sc.; see Rolland, Court of Venus, ii. 1035 (S. T. S.).—MF. laquey, 'a lackey, footboy, footman'; Cot. Modf. laquais. There was also an OF. form alakey; see Littré, who shows that, in the 15th cent., a certain class of soldiers (esp. crossbow-men) were called alagues, alacays, or lacays. (The prefix a- suggests al, the Arab. def. article.)—Span. lacayo, a lackey; cf. Port. lacaio, a lackey, lacaia, a woman-servant in dramatic performances. β. The use of a- (for al) in OF. alacays suggests an Arab. origin.—Arab. lakā, worthless, slavish, and, as a sb., a slave. The fem. form lakā'a, mean, servile (applied to a woman) may account for the Port. lacaia. Allied words are laki, abject, servile, lakā'i, slovenly; alkā, sordid, servile. See Richardson, Pers. Diet. pp. 1272, 1273, 159. γ. However, this is but a guess; the etymology is quite uncertain; Dietz connects it with Ital. lecane, G. lecken, to lick; see LICK. Der. lackey, verb, Ant. and Cleop. i. 4. 46; Spenser, F. Q. vi. 2. 15.

LACONIC, brief, pithy. (L.—Gk.) 'Laconical, that speaks briefly or pithily'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'With Laconic brevity'; Baum, and Fletcher, Little Fir. Lawyer, v. 1 (Clarendon).—L. laconicus, Laconian.—Gk. Λακωνικός, Laconian.—Gk. Λάκων, a Laconian, an inhabitant of Lacedaemon or Sparta. These men were proverbial for their brief and pithy style of speaking. Der. laconic-al, laconic-al-ly, laconic-ism; also lacon-ism, from Gk. Λάκων.

'The lack of Tonquin is a sort of gummy juice, which drains out of the bodies or limbs of trees. . . . The cabinets, desks, or any sort of frames to be lacquered, are made of fir or pine-tree (sic). . . . The work-houses where the lacquer is laid on are accounted very unwholesome.' Dampier, Voyages, an. 1688; ed. 1699; vol. ii. pt. 1, p. 61.—MF. laque, 'a confection or stuffe made of rosin, brimstone, and white wax mingled, and melted together', &c.; Cot.—Port. laque, sealing-wax; allied to Port. laca, gum-lac.—Hind. lakh, lac.—Skt. lakṣhā, lac. See Lao (1). Der. lacquer, verb.

LACROSSE, a Canadian game; played with a crosse, or large stringed bat. (F.—L.) F. la crosse; from la, I, the, and crosse, a bent stick.—L. illa, f. of ille, that; Late L. type erocacia, 'erocacea', fem. of adj. formed from Late L. croceus, a hock.

LACTEAL, relating to milk, conveying chyle. (L.) 'Lacteal, Lacteous, milky'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Lactory [read lactary] or milky plants, which have a white and lacteous juice'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. vi. c. 10, § 2. Formed with suffix -al from L. lacte-us, milky.—L. lact-, stem of lac, milk.—Gk. γαλακτ-, stem of γάλα, milk. Der. lacte-ous (= L. lacteus); lactes-ent, from pres. part. of lactescere, to become milky; whence lactescence. Also lacti-, from lacti-, decl. stem of lac; whence also lacti-ferous, where the suffix is from L. -fer, bearing, from ferre, to bear, cognate with E. bear. Also lactuce, q. v.

LACUNA, a hiatus, gap in a MS. (L.) First in 1663.—L. lacūna, a hole, pit.—L. lacu-s, a lake; see Lake (1), Lagoona.

LACUSTRINE, pertaining to a lake. (L.) First in 1830. Formed from L. lacus, a lake; like L. palustris, from palus, a marsh. LAD, a boy, youth. (E.) ME. ladde, pl. laddes; Havelok, l. 1786; P. Plowman, B. xix. 32; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 36. Of obscure origin; perhaps (as suggested in N. E. D.) the orig. sense was 'one led', i. e. a follower, dependant. From ME. lad, led, pp. of liden, to lead. See Lead (1). (H. Bradley, in Athenaeum, June 1, 1894.) ⚡ Larsen has Dan. aske-ladd (Norw. aske-ladd) the youngest son in Norw. nursery tales, a (male) Cinderella; where aske=ash.

LADANUM, the same as Laudanum, q. v.

LADDER, a frame with steps, for climbing up by. (E.) ME. ladder, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 44; Rob. of Glouc. p. 333, l. 6830. The word has lost an initial h. AS. lædder, hlædder, a ladder; Grein, ii. 80.—Du. ladder, a ladder, rack or rails of a cart; OHG. hleitra, G. leiter, a ladder, scale. β. Allied to Gk. κλίμαξ, a ladder; see CLIMAX. Named from sloping; see Lean (1). (✓KLEI.)

LADE (1), to load. (E.) 'And they laded their asses with the corn'; Gen. xlii. 26. Formerly a strong verb; we still use the pp. laden=loaded; Ant. and Cleop. iii. 11. 5; v. 2. 123. ME. laden, pp. laden, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 1800. AS. hladan, to heap together, to lade, to burden; also, to lade out (water); pt. t. hlōd, pp. hladen.—Du. laden; Icel. hlada, Dan. lade, Swed. ladda; Goth. hlaitan (in comp. af-Mathan); G. laden, OHG. hladan. β. All from a Teut. base lad* (not laik*), to lade (Kluge). Allied to Russ. lad, a load. Der. lad-ing, a load, cargo, Merch. Ven. iii. 1. 3. And see LAD (s).

LADDE (s), to draw out water, drain. (E.) 'He'll lade it [the sea] dry'; 3 lilen. VI. iii. 2. 139. ME. laden, laden; ladde out that water = lade out the water, Aynbite of Inwytt, p. 178, l. 19 [where la is written for la]. AS. ladan, to heap together, to load, to lade out; Grein, ii. 70. 'Hlōd water' = drew water; Exod. ii. 19. The same word as LAD (1). Der. lad-de, q. v.

LADLE, a large spoon. (E.) So called because used for lading or dipping out water from a vessel. ME. ladel, Chaucer, C. T. 2022; P. Plowman, B. xix. 274. AS. ladell; in Glosses, ed. Napier. Formed with suffix -el from AS. ladan, to lade; see LAD (s). β. The suffix -el in this case denotes the means or instrument, as in F. settle (= AS. set), a seat, a thing to sit upon.

LADY, the mistress of a house, a wife, woman of rank. (E.) ME. lady, Chaucer, C. T. 88. Older spellings lefdi, Layamon, 1266; lefdi, lefdi, Ancræn Riwe, pp. 4, 38; leud (= leuad), Aynbite of Inwytt, p. 24; lefdi, Ormulum, 1807. AS. lādfige, a lady; Grein, ii. 81; ONorumb. hlāfdis, in the margin of John, xv. 16, in the Lindisfarne MS. β. Of uncertain origin; the syllable lāf is certainly from the word lāf, a loaf; see LOAF, LORD. But the suffix -dige remains uncertain; the most reasonable guess is that which identifies it with a supposed dige*, a kneader, from a verb cognate with Goth. deigan, to knead. This gives the sense 'bread-kneader; or maker of bread, which is a very likely one; see LORD. Cf. leu, deiga, a dairy-maid; and see further under DAIRY, DOUGH.

¶ The lady, lady, is merely borrowed from English. β. The term lady was often used in a special sense, to signify the blessed Virgin Mary; hence several derivatives, such as lady-bird, lady-fern, lady-finger, lady's-mantle, lady's-slipper, lady's-smock, lady's-tresses, Cf. G. Marien-häfer (Mary's chaper), a lady-bird; Marien-blume (Mary's flower), a daisy; Marien-mantel (Mary's mantle), lady's-mantle; Marien-schuh (Mary's shoe), lady's-slipper. Der. A. (in the general sense), lady-love, lady-ship, ME. ladiþip, Gower, C. A. ii. 301, bk. v. 5208; written lefdiþip (= deference), Ancræn Riwe, p. 108; lady-like. β. (in the special sense) lady-bird, &c., as above. Also lady-chapel, lady-day, which strictly speaking are not compound words at all, since lady is here in the gen. case, so that lady-chapel = chapel of our Lady, and lady-day = day of our Lady. The ME. gen. case of this word was lady or ladie, rather than ladies, which was a later form; this is remarkably shown by the phrase 'in his lady grace' = in his lady's favour, Chaucer, C. T. 88; where Tyrwhitt wrongly prints ladies, though the MSS. have lady. The contrast of Lady day with Lord's day is striking, like that of Fri-day with Thurs-day, the absence of s marking the fem. gender; the AS. gen. case is hlāfdig-an.

LAG, sluggish, coming behind. (E.) 'Came too lag [late] to see him buried'; Rich. III. ii. 1. 90. Cf. prov. F. lag, late, last, slow; lag-last, a loiterer; lag-teeth, the grinders, so called because the last in growth; Halliwell. A difficult word, prob. due to confusion of lag, in other senses (see N. E. D.) with ME. lak, E. lack, failure, deficiency. Cf. prov. E. lack, to be absent, to loiter, lackish, slow, backward, lacky, laggy, a last turn, last of all; ME. Dan lakke, to go slowly (Kalkar); Norw. lagge, to go slowly (Ross); Icel. lakra, to loiter, to lag behind. ¶ The obs. lagg, remnant of liquor in a cask, seems to answer to Norw. lagga (hall), with the same sense (Ross), which is prob. derived from Icel. legg, the end of a cask, and Norw. hald, inclined. This may have influenced the form. Der. lag, verb, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 6; spelt lagge in Palsgrave; also lagg-ing, lagg-er; lagg-end; Hen. IV. v. 1. 24; lagg-ard (a late word), where the suffix -ard is French (of Teut. origin) and is affixed even to English bases, as in drunk-ard.

LAGAN, wreckage lying on the bed of the sea. (F. -Scand.) 'Logan, such a parcel of goods as the mariners in danger of shipwreck cast out of the ship; and because they sink, they fasten to them a buoy'; Cowel, Interpreter (1701). He adds that they are called ligan, from Lat. ligand, i. e. fastening. But they are called lagan, -AF. lagan, used by Edw. II in 1315 (Godefroy); whence Lat. Laganum. Der. lac-oon, q. v.

AS. lama (weak form only), Matt. viii. 6. + Du. lam; Icel. lami; Dan. lamb, palsied; Swed. lam; MHG. lam; G. lahm, β. 'Lansknicht, lancquenet'; Palsgrave, F. F. lansequenet, 'a lanc-knight, or German footman'; also, the name of a game at cards; Cot. — G. (and Du.) lands-knecht, a foot-soldier. — G. lands, for landes, gen. case of land, land, country; and knecht, a soldier. Land = E. land; and knecht = F. knight. Thus the word is land's-knight, not lance-knight. ¶ The term means a soldier of the flat or Low Countries, as distinguished from the men who came from the highlands of Switzerland; see Revue Britannique, no. for Sept. 1866, p. 29 (Littré).

LANTERN, a case for carrying a light. (F. — L. — Gk.) ME. lanterne, Floriz and Blanchefleur, ed. Lumby, l. 238. — F. lanterne, L. lanterna, lanterna, a lantern; the spelling lanterna occurs in the Lindisfarne MS., in the L. text of John, xviii. 3. *Lanterna = lanterna = lanterna*; not a true L. word, but borrowed from Gk. λαμπτήρ, a light, torch. — Gk. λαμπρύνω, to shine. See Lamp. ¶ Sometimes spell lanthorn (Kersey), by a singular popular etymology which took account of the horn sometimes used for the sides of lanterns.

LANUGINOUS, covered with down or soft hair. (L.) In Blount's Gloss. (1681). From L. lanuginosus, downy. — L. lanugin, stem of lanugo, down, from lana, wool. See Wool.

LANYARD, LANIARD, a certain small rope in a ship. (F.) The spelling laniard is the better one, since the word has nothing to do with yard. The d is excrement; the old spelling was lanier. 'Laniers, Laniards, small ship-ropes that serve to slacken or make stiff the shrouds, chains, &c.'; Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Laniers, vox nautica'; Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Lanyer of leather, laniers'; Palsgrave. — MF. laniers, 'a long and narrow band or strip of leather'; Cot. β. Origin uncertain; but Cotgr. has laniers, 'hawk's lones', i.e. jesses; perhaps from OF. lanier, a species of falcon. See Lanner.

LAP (1), to lick up with the tongue. (E.) ME. lappen, lapen, Wyclif, Judges, vii. 7; Gower, C. A. iii. 215; bk. vii. 3671. AS. lapian, to lap; rare, but found in Ælfric's Grammar, De Tertia Conj. § 6; and in Glosses to Prudentius (Leo). The derivative lapelder, a dish, is in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 244, l. 4. — Icel. leþja, to lap like a dog; Dan. labe, to lap; MIHG. lappen, OHG. lappan, to lap up; MDu. lappen, lappen, 'to lap or lick like a dog'; Hexham. — L. imbere (with inserted m), to lick. All from √LAB, to lap, lick up; Brugmann, ii. § 632. Der. from the same base are lab-i-al, lamb-ent, lip.

LAP (3), the loose part of a coat, an apron, part of the body covered by an apron, a fold, flap. (E.) ME. lappe (dissyllabic); Chaucer, C. T. 688 (A 686); P. Plowman, B. li. 35, xvi. 255; often in the sense of 'skirt of a garment'; see Prompt. Parv., and Way's note. AS. lappa, a loosely hanging portion; 'lifre-lappa' = portions of the liver; Ælfric's Gloss., in Voc. 160. 39. OFr. lappa, a piece of a garment. -f. Du. lap, a remnant, shred, rag, patch; Dan. lap, a patch; Swed. lapp, a piece, shred, patch; G. lappen, a patch, shred. β. The Teut. type is lappōn*, m.; allied to Icel. lapa, to hang down (not given in Cleasby, but cited by Fick and others). Cf. Gk. λαβός, a lobe of the ear, or of the liver (Prelwitz). See LOBE. Der. lap-ful; lap-et, i. e. part of a coat which laps over the facing (a mod. word, added by Todd to Johnson), formed with dimin. suffix -et; lapp-et, dimin. form with suffix -et, used by Swift (Johnson); lap-dog, Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. vi. 853; also dew-lap. Perhaps connected with lap (3). Cf. lap-eared = lap-eared, with hanging ears, applied to rabbits.

LAP (3), to wrap, involve, fold. (E.) Prob. derived from the word above; whence also ME. bi-lappen, to enfold; Ormulum, 14267. MF. lappen, to wrap, fold, Will. of Palerne, 1712; 'lapped in cloutes' = wrapped up in rags, P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 438. β. The puzzling form wolappen is misleading; thus in Wyclif, Matt. xxvii. 59, the L. involuit is translated in the later version by 'lappede it', but in the earlier one by 'wolappede it.' But this ME. wolappen is a later form of wolappen, to wrap, by the frequent change of r to l; so that wolap is a mere corruption or later form of worap, prob. influenced by lap, to enfold. See WRAP.

LAPIDARY, one who cuts and sets precious stones. (L.) Cotgrave translates F. lapidaire by 'a lapidary or jeweller.' Werk of the lapidarie; cf. Wyclif, Eccles. xiv. 13 (A. V. 11). Englished from L. lapidarius, a stone-mason, a jeweller. -L. lapid, stem of lapis, a stone. Allied to Gk. λίθος, a bare rock, λίθος, a scale, flake. From the base LEI, to scale off, peel; seen in Gk. λίπεω, to peel. Der. from the same source, lapid-ify, lapid-esc-ent, lapid-esc-ence, lapid-esc-ue; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. liii. c. 23. § 5. Also di-lapid-ate, q. v.

LAPIS LAZULI, a silicate containing sulphur, of a bright blue colour. (L. and Arab.) From L. lapis, a stone; and lazuli, gen. of Med. L. lāzūlus, azure; see AZURE.

LAPSE, to slip or fall into error, to fail in duty. (L.) In Shak. Cor. v. 2. 19; the sb. lapse is in All's Well, ii. 3. 170. -L. lapsare, to slip, frequentative of labi (pp. lapsus), to glide, slip, trip. Cf. F. laps, a slip. Allied to SLEEP. Cf. Skt. lamb, to hang down; Brugmann, i. § 553. Der. lapse, sb., from L. lapsus, a slip; hence also some senses of the vb.; cf. AF. laps de temps, lapse of time, Stat. Realm, i. 318 (1351). Also cad-lapse, e-lapse, il-lapse, re-lapse.

LAPWING, the name of a bird. (E.) ME. Lapewynke (four syllables), Gower, C. A. ii. 329, bk. v. 6041; later lapwynke, Prompt. Parv. p. 288; spelt thapwynche, Aeneid of Wuyt, p. 61, l. 31. AS. lāpawynce; Voc. 260. 2. β. The first part is lāpaw, connected with lāpaw, to run, spring, leap; see LEAP. γ. The second part of the word is, literally, 'winker'; but we must assign to the verb wink its original sense. This orig. sense appears in the OJIG. winkan, MIIG. winkan, to move from side to side, a sense preserved in mod. G. wanken, to totter, stagger, vacillate, reel, waver, &c. Thus the sense is 'one who turns about in running or flight,' which is fairly descriptive of the habit of the male bird. 8. We find, however, an AS. form lāpawynce (OE. Texis, p. 504), which has not been explained. ¶ Popular etymology explains the word as 'wing-flapper'; but lap does not really take the sense of flap; it means, rather, to droop, hang down loosely; see LEAP (2). This interpretation is wrong as to both parts of the AS. form of the word, and is too general.

LARBOARD, the left side of a ship, looking from the stern. (E.) Cotgrave has: 'Babot, the larboard side of a ship.' It is also spelt larboard in Minshew, ed. 1627. The spelling is, however, probably corrupt; the ME. spelling appears to be laddeboard. In Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. l. 106, some sailors are preparing to set sail, and after spreading the mainsail, 'þay layden in on ladde-borde and the lofe wyynes'—they laid in [hauled in?] on the larboard and set right the loof (see Luff). Again, in the Naval Accounts of Henry VII, ed. Oppenheim, p. 192, we find steeborde and laddeborde; and, at p. 203, laddeord; so that the former syllable was once ladde, late, or ladde. It was obviously altered to leerboard (Itakluyt, Voy. i. 4), and to larboard (Milton, P. P. ii. 1019) by the influence of steeboard, later starboard; see STARBOARD. β. The only word which answers in form to ME. ladde is Swed. ladda, to lade, load, charge, answering to Icel. ladda, AS. lādian, E. lade. We find Icel. kladda seglum—to take in sail. γ. Beyond this, all is uncertainty; we may conjecture that the sails, when taken down, were put on the left side of the ship, to be out of the way of the steersman, who originally stood on the starboard (=steer-board) or right side of the ship. 8. But it is worth notice that Icel. kladda á mara bögu, lit. 'to lade oneself on the shoulders of a horse,' meant 'to mount a horse'; and one mounts a horse on the loft side. ¶ The F. babord = G. backbord, where back means 'behind' the steersman, who used his paddle on the right side of the ship.

LARCENY, theft, robbery. (F.—L.) In Cotgrave, who explains OF. larrecin by 'larceny, theft, robbery.' An old law term; see Mount's Nomenclon. =OF. larrecin, larcin (both forms are in Cotgrave); mod. F. larcin. The spelling larrecin occurs in the Laws of William the Conqueror, § 41v; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws of England, i. 472; and larcin in Britton, bk. i. c. 25. [The suffix -y appears to be an E. addition, to conform the word to forger-y, burglar-y, felon-y, and the like; but it is unnecessary.] -L. latrocinium, freebooting, marauding, robbery; formed with suffix -cinium (occurring also in strā-cinium) from latro, a robber. β. Curtius (l. 453) considers latro as borrowed from Gk. It is, rather, allied to Gk. λάτρεω, a hiring, used in a bad sense. The suffix -tro or -rus denotes the agent, and the base is le- or la-, discussed by Prelwitz, s. v. λάτρεω. Der. larrecin-ist.

LARCH, a kind of tree like a pine. (G.—L.) Spelt larche in Minshew, ed. 1627. Also spelt larche by Turner, Names of Herbes (1548), who seems to have introduced the spelling directly from G. larche, a larch, though the ch naturally took the E. sound. -G. larche. -L. laricem, acc. of larix, the larch-tree (whence Late Gk. λάριξ). The L. larix is for 'doris (cf. lingua for dignus)'; cognate with Irish dar, W. dar, an oak (Stokes-Fick, p. 147); cf. Skt. dāru, wood, a kind of pine. Allied to TREE.

LARD, the melted fat of swine. (F.—L.) 'Larde de flesche, larda, vel lardum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 288.—OF. (and F.) lard, 'lard'; Cot.—L. lardum; also lardo, shortened form of lardum (also lārda), lard, fat of bacon. Akin to Gk. λαρός, pleasant to the taste, nice, dainty, sweet, λαρός, fat. Der. lard, verb, ME. larden (Prompt. Parv.), from F. larder, to lard (see note to Ben Jonson, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, A. iii. sc. 5, l. 174); lard-er, Gower, C. A. iii. l. 124; with which cf. AF. larder, OF. larder, 'a tuc to keep bacon in' (Cotgrave), hence applied to a room in which bacon and meat are kept, called by Falsgrave a larder-house; lard-y, lard-ac-e-ous; inter-lard.

LARGE, great, bulky, vast. (F.—L.) In early use. ME. large (which usually has the sense of liberal). O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 143, l. 32.—F. large. -L. large, fem. of largus, large, long. Cf. OF. large, larg, m. (superceded by large, f.). Der. large-ly, large-ness, King Alisaunder, l. 6879; large-heart-ed; large-hand-ed; 'Timon of Ath. iv. t. 11'; and see largess, en-large.

LARGESSE, a liberal gift, donation. (F.—L.) ME. largesse, P. Plowman, A. vi. 112; Ancren Riwle, p. 166.—F. largesse, bounty; Cot.—Late L. largitia* (not found), for L. largitio, a bestowing, giving; cf. L. largitus, pp. of largiri, to bestow.—L. largus, large, liberal; see LARGE.

LARIAT, a rope with a noose, a lasso. (Span.—L.) 'Lariats, or noosed cords;' W. Irving, Tour on the Prairies, 1835, p. 26.—Span. la reata, lit. 'the rope that ties together.'—L. illa, fcm. of ille, he; and Span. reata, lit. 'to retie,' attach together, from L. re, again, and aptare, to adjust, from aptus, fit. See APT.

LARK (1), the name of a bird. (E.) Lark also appears as lawrock; see Burns, Holy Fair, st. 1. ME. larke, Chaucer, C. T. 1493 (A 1491); spelt lawrock, Gower, C. A. li. 264; bk. v. 4100. AS. lawere, later lawere, lawere, lawere. The spelling lawere is in Voc. 286. 17; lawere in Voc. 131. 28. Lawere is in the comp. laweran-beorh, a place-name found in Kemble. But the oldest spelling is lawrice, Corpus Gloss. 1173.—Icel. lawirki, a lark; Low G. lawerke (Bremen Wörterbuch); OJIG. lērēhka; G. lerche; Du. leuwerik, leuwerik; Swed. lärka; Dan. lærke. β. The Icel. lawirki—skilful worker or worker of craft, from law, craft, and virki, a worker; cf. Icel. law-virki, craft, skill, law-virki, crafty, skilful; and (as to virki), ill-virki, a worker of ill, spell-virki, a doer of mischief. But the general Teut. form points rather to an original lawirakjōn* (N. E. D.), which may perhaps mean 'revealer of treachery'; from lawirakjōn* (AS. reacan, to relate, expound). Cf. lawu, a traitor, betrayer, Mark, xiv. 44; also Goth. lawu, an occasion, opportunity (Rom. vii. 8, 11), whence lawjan, lawjan, to betray. Such a name would point to some superstition which may have connected the bird with the rising sun; but no such legend is known. Thus the true origin remains wholly unknown; and the oldest spelling (lawrice) is obscure.

LARK (2), a game, sport, fun. (E.) Spelt lark in modern E., and now a slang term. Also used as sky-lark, and probably due to a peculiar use of LARK (1); from its cheerful note. ¶ Often (but perhaps wrongly) connected with ME. lak, lok; also laik, which is a Scand. form. See Will. of Palerne, 678; P. Plowman, B. xiv.

243; Ormulum, 1157, 2166; Ancren Riwle, p. 152, note b; &c. (Stratmann). Cf. l. lāc, play, content, prey, gift, offering; Grein, ii. 148; Icel. leikr, a game, play, sport.

LARUM, short for ALARUM, q.v. In Shak. Cor. i. 4. 9.

LARVA, an insect in the caterpillar state. (L.) A scientific term. — l. larva, a ghost, spectre, mask; the insect's first stage being the mask (disguise) of its last; e.g. a fanciful term. Root unknown. Der. larv-nd, Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674.

LARYNX, the upper part of the windpipe. (L.—Gk.) In Kersey, ed. 1715; and in P. Fletcher, Purple Island, c. 4, note 29. — l. larynx. — Gk. larynx, the larynx, throat, gullet; gen. case, laryngos. Der. laryng-e-al, laryng-e-an, laryng-it.

LASCAR, a native E. Indian sailor. (Pers.) 'Lascars, or Indian seamen;' W. Dampier, A New Voyage, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 112 (1699). First in 1625. — Pers. laskhar, an army; whence laskhari, military; hence, a soldier, camp-follower; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1265. See Yule.

LASCIVIOUS, lustful. (L.) In Shak. Rich. II. ii. 1. 19; Lydgate, Assembly of Gods, l. 686. — Late L. lasciviosus, lustful. — L. lascivius, sb.; from L. lascivus, lascivious. Lengthened from an older form lascus (not found), as fest-us is from fest-us. Cf. Skt. lask, to desire, covet, akin to Gk. λίσσωμαι, I desire, and to E. lust. See Lust. Der. lascivious-ly, lasciviousness.

LASH (1), to fasten firmly together. (F.—L.) 'Lash (in sea affairs), to fasten or bind up anything to the ship's sides;' Kersey, ed. 1715. 'Her ordnance being lashed so fast;' Capt. Smith, Works, ed. Arber, p. 674. — OF. lacier, variant of lacier (Godefroy), to fasten with a lace or string. — OF. lache (Godefroy), a lace, also a hinge. — Folk-L. laciun, for L. laqueum, acc. of laqueus, a snare. See Laos. (cf. Norm. dial. lacher, to fasten with thongs (Moisy).) We also find Du. lascchen, to join, scarf together; lasc, sb., a piece, joint, seam, notch; Swed. laska, to stitch, lask, a scarf, joint; Dan. lask, to scarf, lask, a scarf; but it is not clear that they have influenced the E. word. See lask in Franck. Der. lask-ing, sb.

LASH (2), a thong, flexible part of a whip, a stroke, stripe. (F.—L.) ME. lache. 'Lache, stroke, ligula, flagrum;' Prompt. Parv. p. 288. 'Whippes lache;' Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 178. Perhaps formed from Lash (1). Cf. Norm. dial. lascier, to lash, whip with a cord (Le Héricher). β. Or, from OF. lache, a lace (Godefroy); see above. Der. lask, verb, to flog, scourge; cf. Laschyng, laskyn, betyn, ligulo, verbero;' Prompt. Parv.

LASS, a girl. (Scand.) ME. lasse, spelt lass in Cursor Mundi, l. 2608. ME. lasse may be regarded as allied to Icel. laskr (base lask), weak; MSwed. lusk, a person having no fixed abode; OSwed. laska kona, a spinster (cited by Vigfusson). — II. Bradley, in Athenæum, June 16, 1894. Cf. Bavarian lask, a woman (a term of contempt); Schmeller. β. Olcel. laskr is for lat-kwaz*, allied to Goth. lat-s, idle, E. late, q.v.; Brugmann, i. § 85.

LAZZITUDE, weariness. (F.—L.) 'The one is callid cruditie, the other lassitude;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. i. — F. lassitude; Cot. — L. lassitudo, faintness, weariness. — L. lassi, for lassus, tired, wearied; with suffix -tudo. β. Lassus is for lad-tus*, where lad- corresponds to lat- in Goth. lats, slothful, cognate with E. late. See Lato. Brugmann, i. § 197.

LAZZO, a rope with a noose. (Span.—L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. The pron. is that used in Texas, which is archaic. — OSpan. lazo (Minsheu, 1623); Span. lazo, a snare, slip-knot; and cf. F. lacs. — Folk-L. laciun, for L. laqueum, acc. of laqueus, a snare. See Laos. (cf. Not from mod. Spanish, for the Span. z is sounded like our voiceless t. Der. lasso, verb.

LAST (1), latest, hindmost. (E.) Last is a contraction of latest, through the intermediate form latst (= lat'st), for which see Ormulum, l. 4168. See Late. Cf. Du. laast, last, which is the superl. of laet, late.

LAST (2), a wooden model of the foot on which shoes are made. (E.) ME. last, laste. 'Hec formula, last;' Voc. 654. 35; in a glossary of the 15th cent. 'Laste, sowtarys [shoemaker's] forme, formula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 298. AS. lást, a foot-track, path, trace of feet; Grein, ii. 160; also AS. lást, a model of the foot; 'Calopodium, uel musticula, laste;' Voc. 125. 37. 4-Du. last, a last, shape, form; Icel. lastir, the foot below the ankle; Swed. last, a shoemaker's last; Dan. last, the same; G. lasten, the same; Goth. laista, a track, way, footstep; 2 Cor. xii. 18. β. The Teut. types are all from a base laist, and the original sense is foot-track, trace of a man's path; cf. G. gleise (gleise), a track. Formed from Teut. laist*, as in Goth. laist, I know (Phil. iv. 12); the trace being that whereby a man's path is known. This word laist was orig. used in the sense 'I have experienced,' and it is the pt. t. of Goth. laian, to track, to find out. From Teut. base laist*, to find out, whence E. learn; allied to L. lira, a furrow, a track, whence E. de-lir-ious. See Learn. Der. last (3).

LAST (3), to endure, continue. (E.) ME. lasten, Havelok, 538; also lasten, Prompt. Parv. p. 299. AS. læstan, to observe, perform, last, remain; the orig. sense being 'to follow in the track of,' from last, a foot-track; see Last (2). +Goth. laistjan, to follow, follow after; from laista, a foot-track; G. leisten, verb, to perform, follow out, fulfil, allied to leisten, sb., a form, model, shoemaker's last. Der. last-ing-ly, ever-last-ing. ¶ The train of ideas in learn, last (2), and last (3) is: trace (whence learn, know), follow out, fulfil, continue.

LAST (4), a load, a large weight, ship's cargo. (E.) ME. last. 'A thousand last quad yere' — a thousand cargoes of bad years; Chaucer, C. T. 13368 (B 1628); and see Deposition of Rich. II, ed. Skent, iv. 74. AS. læst, a burden; Grein, ii. 81. — AS. lædan, to load; see Lade, Load. +Icel. lest, a load, from læda, to load; Dan. last, a weight, burden, cargo, from lade, to load; Swed. last, a burden, allied to ladda, to load; Du. and G. last, from laden, to load. Idg. type klat-sto- (-sti), from klat-, to lade; whence also Idg. klat-to-*, as in Icel. lass, a cart-load, Swed. lass, the same.

LATCH, a catch, fastening. (E.) ME. lache, used by Walter de Bibbesworth to translate OF. cliket; Wright's Vocab. i. 170. [See cliket in Chaucer, C. T. 9920 (E 2046).] 'Latches, lache, latch, or snekke, Clitorium, vel pessula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 283. From ME. verb lachen, to seize, catch hold of, Will. of Palerne, 666, 671; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 324. AS. læccan, to seize, lay hold of, Grein, ii. 161; also ge-læccan, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 182, ii. 50. β. AS. læccan is a weak verb (pt. t. lachte), from a base lakk-*. It is perhaps ultimately connected with L. laqueus, a snare. ¶ The assertion in Trench's Select Glossary that lace and latch are 'the same word,' may be true for some senses of the latter; thus ME. lache occurs in the sense of 'snare' in Ch. Rom. Rose, 1624. The E. and F. words were prob. confused. For the F. word, see Latchet. Der. latch, verb, to fasten with a latch, merely formed from the sb., and not the same as ME. lachen; also latch-key.

LATCH, to moisten. (E.) In Shak. Mid. Nt. Dream, iii. 2. 36: 'But hast thou yet latched the Athenians eyes With the loue-lynce, as I did bid thee doe?' ed. 1623. Oberon had bidden Puck to 'annoint his eyes;' ii. 1. 261. A variant of North E. leck, to moisten, which exactly represents AS. læccan, to moisten, water; latch has the vowel of prov. E. lache, a gutter, AS. lacu, a stream, closely allied to læccan. Cf. MDu. laken, to flow (Oudemans), Swed. laka jå, to pour on. To See Notes on E. Etym., p. 158.

LATCHET, a little lace, a thong. (F.—L.) In the Bible, Mark, i. 7, Isa. v. 27. The former t is intrusive. ME. latchet, as in 'Latchet of a schoo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 284. 'Latchet other louppe' = latched or loop; Sir Gawayne and the Grene Knight, l. 591. — OF. latchet, Norman and Picard form of OF. laet, 'the lace of a petticoat, a woman's lace or lacing, also a snare or ginnie;' Cot. Dimin. (with suffix -et) of OF. lache (Godefroy), variant of las, a snare. See Laos. Observe that latchet is the dimin. of lace, and distinct from latch in most of its senses.

LATE, tardy, coming behind, slow, delayed. (E.) 1. ME. lat, rare as an adj. in the positive degree. 'A lat mon' — a man slow of belief; Joseph of Arimathea, ed. Skent, l. 695. The adv. is late, as in 'late ne rather' — late nor early, P. Plowman, B. iii. 73. 2. The compar. form is later or latter, spelt lattere in Layman, l. 5911. 3. The superl. is lates, latst, or last, the intermediate form appearing in the Ormulum, l. 4168. AS. lat, slow, late; Grein, ii. 165. 4-Du. laet, late; Icel. laet, slow, lazy; Dan. laet, lazy, slothful; Swed. lat, lazy, idle; Goth. lats, slothful, Luke, xix. 22; G. lass, weary, indolent. Allied to L. lassus (= lad-tus*), weary. β. All from the weak grade of Teut. base let*, to let, let go, let alone; so that late means let alone, neglected, hence slothful, slow, coming behindhand. See Let (1). Brugmann, i. § 197. Der. late-ly, late-ness, lat-iss, lat-er-ly, last (1), q.v., last-ly. Also let (2). From the same source, lassitude, q.v.

LATEEN, triangular, applied to sails. (F.—L.) In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. Vessels in the Mediterranean frequently have lateen sails, of a triangular shape. The E. spelling preserves the pronunciation of the F. word latine, the fem. of Latin, Latin; the lit. sense being 'Latin sails,' i.e. Roman sails. See Latine. 'Voile Latine, a mizen or smack sail;' Cot. 'Latina, the mizen sail of a ship; also, the Latine toong;' Florio, Ital. Dict. ed. 1598. So also Span. Latina vln, a Latine sail; a la Latina, of a triangular form.

LATENT, lying hid, concealed. (L.) In Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674; and in Cockeram (1642). — L. latens, stem of pres. pt. of latere, to lie hid. Der. latent-ly, latency.

LATERAL, belonging to the side. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 705. 'A lateral view;' Ben Jonson, Underwoods, xxiii. l. 9. — L. lateralis, belonging to the side. — L. later, for lates*, stem of latens, the side. +Irish leth, W. lad, side. Der. lateral-ly.

LATH, a thin slip of wood. (E.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. iv. 2. 136.

In the North of England, the form used is lat; see Ray, Halliwell, and the Holderness Glossary (E. D. S.). This corresponds with M.E. lathe, a lath. 'He assere, a latt' Voc. 729. 4. AS. lattu, pl. latta; 'Asseres, latta'; 'Ælfric's Gloss., in Voc. 126. 14; also latta, pl. Voc. 185. 20. +Du. lat, a lath; G. latte, a lath, whence F. latte is borrowed. β. The exact correspondence of the dental sound in AS. latt and G. latte presents a difficulty. Perhaps the modern E. form was influenced by the W. lath, a rod, staff, yard, which is cognate with Irish lath, a rod, from a Celtic type lathā*. The pl. lathes occurs in 1350; Riley, Memorials of London, p. 261. Der. latt-ice, q. v., latt-en, q. v.

LATHE (1), a machine for 'turning' wood and metal. (Scand.) 'Could turn his word, and oath, and faith, As many ways as in a lathe;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 2. ll. 375, 376. Cotgrave explains F. tournoir by 'a turner's wheel, a lathe or lars.' Prob. of Scand. origin: from a form represented by Dan. lad, as in dreis-lad, a turning-lathe; which also means 'frame,' as in wæver-lad, a loom (weaving-frame). This Dan. lad is prob. the same as Icel. klad, a pile, a stack; from klada, to lade; see LADE (2). β. We may also compare AS. hlæd-hwogl (lit. lade-wheel), an engine or wheel of a mill, to draw water (Bosworth); also AS. hlæd-trendel, a wheel for drawing water (id.), which are clearly derived from AS. hladan, to lade out water. A transference of name from the water-wheel to the lathe would be easy. ¶ The entry lōd, a lathe, in Vigfusson's Icel. Dict., is incorrect (N. E. D.).

LATHE (2), a division of a county. (E.) Kent is divided into five lathes or portions; see Pegge's Alphabet of Kenticisms; E. D. S. Gloss. C. 3. AS. lād, a portion of land; 'ne gýrne ic pines, ne lædes ne landes' = I covet not their neither lathe nor land; Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 184. 'In quibusdam vero provinciis Anglice vocabatur lath, quod isti dicunt tilthings;' id. i. 455, note 3; and see Glossary in vol. ii. +Icel. lād, land, landed possession. Teut. type lōdom*, neuter. Cf. Goth. un-lēds, poor, lit. 'landless.'

LATHER, foam or froth, esp. when made with soap and water. (E.) M.E. lather, for which Stratmann gives no reference; but we find the derived verb latherien, as in 'he lþerede a swote' = he was in a lather with sweat; Layamon, i. 7489 (later text). AS. læðor, lather, Voc. 456. 14; also in the comp. læðor-wyrt, lit. lather-wort, i. e. soap-wort; Gloss. to AS. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne; whence the verb læðrian, to anoint, John, xi. 2 (Lindisfarne MS.). +Icel. laður, lather lōðr, froth, foam, scum of the sea, soap; whence laðurá, lōðra, to foam, also to drip with blood; læðra, to wash. Teut. type laudrom*, neut.; Idg. type laudrom*, as in Gk. λαυρόν, for λαυρόν, a bath, from λαύω, Homeric λῶω (for lāwō*), I wash (Prellwitz). Cf. L. laure, to wash; for which see LAURE. Der. lather, vb.

LATIN, pertaining to the Romans. (F.-L.) M.E. Latin; Chaucer, C. T. 4939 (B 519); and earlier, in St. Juliana, p. 3. = F. Latin. = L. Latīnus, Latin, belonging to Latium. = L. Latīnus, the name of a country of Italy, in which Rome was situated. Der. Latin-ism, Latin-ist, Latin-i-ty, Latin-ise. Also latin-er = Latin-er, an interpreter, Layamon, 14319; well known as a proper name. Also latens, q. v.

LATITUDE, breadth, scope, distance of a place N. or S. of the equator. (F.-L.) M.E. latitude; Chaucer, C. T. 4433. = F. latitude. = L. latitudo, breadth. = L. lātus, broad; from an OL. slātus, appearing in slāta, a broad ship. See Brugmann, i. § 529 (2). Der. latitudin-āl, from stem latitūd- of the sb. latitudo; latitudin-ar-i-an, latitudin-ar-i-an-ism, latitudin-ous.

LATTEN, a mixed metal, a kind of brass. (F.-G.?) 'This latten bilbo;' Merry Wives, i. 1. 165. M.E. latten; Chaucer, C. T. 701 (A 699). = OF. laton (13th cent., see Littré); mod. F. laiton. Cotgrave has: 'Laiton, latin (metall)'. Cf. Span. latón, latten, brass; Port. latão, brass; Ital. ottone (corrupted from lōtone or lōtione), latten, brass, yellow copper. β. According to Diez, the OF. laton is from latte, a lath (also spelt late, as in Cotgrave); because this metal was hammered into thin plates. This is rendered probable by the Ital. latina, tin, a thin sheet of iron tinned, answering in form to Low L. latta, a lath (occurring in Voc. 729. 5); so also Span. latas, laths, hoja de lata, tin-plate, tinned iron plate [where hoja = foil, leaf]; also Port. lata, tin plate, latas, laths. γ. If this be right, these words are of G. origin viz. from G. latte, a lath; see LATH.

LATTER, another form of later; see LATE. (E.)

LATTICE, a network of crossed laths. (F.-G.) Here, as in other words, the final -e stands for s; a better form is lattia, as in Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 15. M.E. latis, latys; Wyclif, Prov. vii. 6. = AF. latys, Liber Albus, p. 333. 1. 4; F. lattia, lath-work (Hamilton). = F. latte, a lath. = G. latte, a lath; see LATH. Der. lattice-work.

LAUD, to praise. (L.) M.E. lauden. 'If thou laudest and lovest any night;' Test. of Love, b. i. ch. 10. 76; 'laude it nought;' P. Plowman, B. xi. 102. = L. laudare, to praise. = L. laud, stem of laus, praise. Root uncertain. Der. laud-er, laud-able, laud-able-ness, laud-ably; also laud-at-ory (from pp. laud-ātus); laud, sb., Troll, iii. 3. 179; Hamlet, iv. 7. 178. Also see allow (2).

LAUDANUM, a preparation of opium. (L. - Gk. - Pers.) 'Laudanum or Opiate Laudanum, a medicine so called from its excellent qualities;' Kersey, ed. 1715; and in Sir T. Browne, Religio Medici, pt. ii. § 12. Kersey's remark refers to a supposed connexion with L. laudire, to praise; on which Mahn (in Webster) remarks: 'this word cannot be derived from L. laudandum, to be praised, nor was it invented by Paracelsus, as it previously existed in Provençal.' The name, in fact, was an old one; but was transferred from one drug to another. 'Laudanum, Ladanum, or Lobdanum, a sweet-smelling transparent gum gathered from the leaves of Cistus Ledon, a shrub, of which they make pomander; it smells like wine mingled with spices;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Cf. MSpan. laudano, 'the gum ladanum used in pomanders;' Minshew (1623). Spelt lobdanum in Cotgrave, s. v. lobdano; but laudanum in Bullein's Dialogue (1578), p. 43. l. 13. Spelt ladanum, Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, v. 2 (Perfumer). = L. laudanum, lédanum, the resinous substance exuding from the shrub luda; Pliny, xxvi. 8. 30, § 47; xii. 17. 37, § 45. = Gk. λῆδανον, λῆδανον, the same. = Gk. λῆδον, an oriental shrub, Cistus Creticus. = Pers. lādan, the gum-herb luda; Rich. Pers. Dict., p. 1251, col. 2, last line.

LAUGH, to make the noise denoting mirth. (E.) M.E. laughen, Chaucer, C. T. 3847 (A 3849). Various spellings are lauken, lauchen, laghen, lehen, lihen, &c.; see Stratmann. OMerc. klekhan, AS. klekhan, klekhan, klekhan, pt. t. klek; Grein, ii. 81. +Du. laghen; Icel. kleja, pt. t. klej; Dan. lee; Swed. le; G. lachen; Goth. klahan, pt. t. klah. β. All imitative words from a Teut. base HLAH, corresponding to an Aryan base KLAH, to make a noise. Cf. Lith. klek-ėti, to laugh, Gk. κλάσσειν, to cluck. Compare similar words are κλάσσειν, to cry as a jackdaw, κράσσειν, to caw, κλάσσειν, to clash, κράσσειν, to croak, &c.; L. crociāre, glocire; and cf. E. crake, crack, click, clack, cluck, &c. Der. laugh, sb., laugh-er, laugh-able, laugh-ably, laugh-able-ness, laugh-ing-ly, laugh-ing-gas, laugh-ing-stock. Also, laugh-ter, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 1169, from AS. leahtr, Grein, ii. 82, cognate with Icel. klátr, Dan. latter, G. lächter.

LAUNCH (1), LAUNCH, to throw forward like a spear, hurl, send forth, send (a ship) into the water. (F.-L.) M.E. launchen, to pierce, Destr. of Troy, 6817; variant of launen, to hurl, Will. of Palerne, i. 2755; cf. P. Plowman's Crele, 551. 'Launcyn, launckyn, or styng with a spere or blode-yrnc, lance;' Prompt. Parv. = OF. lanchier, variant of lancier, Picard lancher, F. lancer, to throw, sling, hurl, dart; also, to pick, pierce; 'Cot. = F. lance, a lance; see LANCE. Doublet, lance, verb.

See Notes on P. Etym., p. 158.

LAUNDRESS, a washerwoman. (F.-L.) Formerly launderess (see below), formed by adding the F. suffix -ess to the old word launder or launder, which had the same sense. M.E. launder, Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, l. 358; spelt launder, laynder, landar, Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, xvi. 273, 292. = OF. lavandier, masc. one who washes; (whence the fem. lavandiere, 'a launderess or washing-woman'; 'Cot.). = Late L. lavandarius, one who washes; Ducange. = L. lavand-ā, things to be washed; from lavāre, to wash; see LAURE. Der. laundry (= launder-y), spelt laundry in P. Plowman, B. xv. 182.

LAUREATE, crowned with laurel. (L.) M.E. laureat, Chaucer, C. T. 14614 (B 3886). = L. laureatus, crowned with laurel. = L. laurea, a laurel crown; fem. form of adj. laureus, made of laurel, from laurus; see LAUREL. Der. laureate-ship.

LAUREL, the bay-tree. (F.-L.) In Shak. Troil. i. 3. 107. Formed, by the common substitution of l for r, from M.E. lauwer, a laurel, Chaucer, C. T. 9340 (E 1466); spelt lorer, Gower, C. A late word; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. = Ital. lava, 'a running gullet, stream, or gutter sodainly caused by rain'; Florio's Ital. Dict., ed. 1598. = Ital. lavare, to wash. = L. lavare, to wash; see LAURE.

LAVATORY, a place for washing. (L.) In Levins; and in Wyclif, Exod. xxx. 18. Cotgrave explains F. lavatoire as 'a lavatory, a place or vessel to wash in.'—L. lavatorium, a lavatory; neut. of lavatorius, belonging to a washer.—L. lavator, a washer.—L. lavare, to wash; see LAVE.

LAVE, to wash, bathe. (F.—L.) ME. lauen; 'And laueth hem in the laundrie' [laundry]; P. Plowman, C. xvii. 330; cf. Layamon, 7489.—F. laver, to wash.—L. lavare, to wash.—Gk. λούω, to wash. From the Idg. base LOU, to wash. See LATHER. DER. lav-er (Exod. xxxviii. 8), ME. lavoer, lavoer, Chaucer, C. T. 5869 (D 287), from OF. laveoir, lavoer (Godefroy), lavoir, 'a washing pool' (Cot.), from L. lavatorium (above). And see laundress, lotion. From the same base are de-luge, al-luvial.

LAVEER, to beat to windward, to tack. (Du.—F.—Du.) 'But those that 'gainst stiff gales lavinger go'; Dryden, Astraea Redux, l. 65.—Du. laveren, MDa. laveren, loeveren, 'to sail up and downe', Hexham.—MF. lavoier (Littré); F. lavooyer.—F. lof, luff, weather-side.—Du. loef. See LUFF. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 159.

LAVENDER, an odoriferous plant. (F.—Late L.) Spelt lavendre in Palsgrave; cf. Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 104. 'Lavendere, herbe, Lavendula'; Prompt. Parv.—AF. lavendre, Voc. 557. 9.—Late L. lavendula, as in Prompt. Parv. and Voc. 557. 9. Other forms are lavandula, lavendula (N.E.D.). Also F. lavande, 'lavender', Cot.; Ital. lavanda, lavender; Ital. lavendula, Span. lavandula. β. The plant was often laid with fresh-washed linen, and thus came to be associated (in popular etymology) with L. lavare, to wash. But the early form lavendula tends rather to associate it with lavare, to be livid, from its bluish colour. The exact source is unknown.

LAVISH, adj., profuse, prodigal. (F.—L.) α. The adj. is due to an obs. sb., also spelt lavish; also lavas, lavess, which is explained below. β. Examples of the adj. are as follows. 'In al other thing so light and lavess [are they] of their tong'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 250 b. 'Punishing with losse of life the lavesses of the tounge'; Brende, Quintus Curtius, fol. 67 (K.). 'Although some laviss lippes, which like some other best'; Gascoigne, In Praise of Lady Sandes, l. 7 (Poems, ed. Hazlitt, vol. i. p. 53). 'Lavish Nature'; Spenser, Moopotmos, l. 163. Spelt lavas in 'Romeus and Juliet', p. 20 (Halliwell); so also 'lavas of their tungs'; Paston Letters, iii. 323. γ. The adj. arose from the use of lavas, sb., in the sense of lavishness or prodigality. 'There was no lavas [profusion, excess] in their speche'; Caxton, Golden Legend, fol. 364, back (N.E.D.). Whence also the vb., as in: 'those who did prodigally lavasse out and waste their substance'; Udalr, tr. of Erasmus Apophthegms, Diogenes, § 161. The sb. is of F. origin.—OF. lavasse, an inundation, abundant rain (Godefroy); cf. Kouchi lavasse, as in pluvioir lavasse, to rain abundantly (Hécart).—F. laver, to wash; Norm. dial. laver, to lavish, to squander (Moisy).—L. lavare, to wash. See LAVE. Compare: 'He lavess his gyfte as water of dyche';—Gd. laviss his gifis as (freely as one would take) water out of a dyche; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 607; see the whole passage, which treats of God's profuseness of reward to the souls in heaven. DER. lavish, lavishness, lavish-ment; also lavish, verb (Levinus).

LAW, a rule of action, edict, statute. (Scand.) ME. lawe (two syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 1167 (A 1165). AS. lagu, a late word, used in place of the early AS. lag, law. Borrowed from prehistoric ON. lagu*, answering to Icel. lag (below). Cf. OSax. lag (pl. lagu), a statute, decree; Icel. lag (s. pl., but used in the sing. sense), for older lagu*, a law; it is the pl. of lag, a stratum, order, due place, lit. 'that which lies' or is placed; Swed. lag; Dan. lov. Teut. type lagom*, n. β. The sense is 'that which lies' or is in due order; from Teut. base lag*, 2nd grade of legan-*, to lie; see LIE (1). DER. law-ful, ME. lawful, Trevisa, iii. 193; law-ful-ly, ME. lawfulliche, P. Plowman, C. x. 59; law-ful-ness, see Owl and Nightingale, ed. Stratmann, l. 1741; law-giver; law-less, ME. lawless, Trevisa, iii. 73; law-less-ly, law-less-ness; law-book, see Ormulum, l. 1953; law-suit; also law-yeer, q.v.

LAWN (1), a space of ground covered with grass in a garden. (F.—C.) Properly an open space, esp. in a wood; a glade (see GLADE). The spelling lawn is not old; the older spelling is invariably laund, which was still in use in the 18th century. 'Laund or Lawn, in a park, plain untill ground'; Kersey's Dict., ed. 1715. Spelt laund in Shak. Venus. 813; 3 Hen. VI., iii. 1. 2. ME. laund, Chaucer, C. T. 1691; (observe that Dryden substitutes lawn in his Palamon and Arcite, l. 845); P. Plowman, C. i. 8.—OF. launde (Godefroy), also laund, 'a land or laund, a wild, untilld, shrubby, or bushy plain'; Cot. Cf. Ital. and Span. launda, a heath, tract of open country.—OCeltic laundi*, fem.; whence Bret. lann, a bushy shrub, of which the pl. lannou is only used to signify waste land, like the F. landes. The Bret. lann is also used in a variety of senses, corresponding to those of Gael. and Irish lann, and W. llan; one of these senses is land or territory, though most often used of an inclosure. Spurrell gives W. llan, 'an area, yard, church'; but the Gael. lann means 'an inclosure, a house, a church, a repository, land'; and the Irish lann is 'land, a house, church, repository.' In fact, the Irish lann and F. land are cognate words; see LAND.

LAWN (2), a sort of fine linen. (F.—L.) In Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 209, 220. 'In the third year of the reign of Queene Elizabeth, 1562, beganne the knowledge and wearing of lawne and cambric, which was then brought into England by very small quantities; Stow, King James, an. 1604 (R.). But this misleading statement is entirely wrong, as the word is known to this English as early as 1415 (N. E. D.). It also occurs in Lydgate's London Pickpenny, l. 66 (Minor Poems, p. 105); and in Henrysoun, Test. Cressid, 423. In 1502, lawn is enumerated among the wares of Flanders; Arnold's Chron., ed. 1811, p. 205. And Palsgrave (1530) has: 'Laune linnen, crespé.' I understand Laune linnen to mean 'linen of Laon', formerly also Lan, not far N.W. of Rheims; cf. 'Laune, or fine linnen cloth called cloth of Remes'; Baret. Linnen manufacture was carried on at Laon for many centuries (Romania, xxix. 182). For the spelling Lan, see Calendar of State Papers, vi. 203, 224; and for OF. Lan (Laon) see Ménage.—L. Lanfūnum, Lugdūnum, a name of Celtic origin. Cf. faun (2), from OF. fan, faun; pawn (2), from OF. paon.

LAWYER, one versed in the law, one who practises law. (E.) ME. lawyer, lawier; P. Plowman, B. vii. 59. From law, with suffix -yer. This suffix originated in the use of the suffix -ten in place of -en in causal verbs, and verbs derived from sbs. Thus, from the AS. lufu, love, was formed the vb. lufigan or lufian, to love, which became low-ien in ME. Hence the sb. low-ier or low-yeer, a lover, another form of low-er or low-ere, a lover; see the readings in the Petworth and Lansdowne MSS. in Chaucer, C. T. A. 1347. By analogy, from lawe, law, was formed law-ier or law-yeer. So also bow-yeer, one who uses a bow; saw-yeer, one who uses a saw.

LAX, slack, loose, soft, not strict. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vii. 162. —L. laxus, lax, loose.—L. base LAG, to be weak; whence also langu-ire, to be languid, with inserted n. Allied to slack; see SLACK. Brugmann, i. § 193. DER. lax-ly, lax-ness; lax-ly, from F. laxité (Cot.), which from L. acc. laxitatem; and see lax-at-ive.

LAXATIVE, loosening. (F.—L.) ME. laxatif, Chaucer, C. T. 14949 (B 4133).—F. laxatif, 'laxative'; Cot.—L. laxātīvus, loosening; cf. laxātivus, pp. of laxare, to render lax.—L. laxus; see LAX. DER. laxative-ness.

LAY (1), to cause to lie down, place, set. (E.) The causal of lie, from which it is derived. ME. leggen; weak verb, pt. l. leide, pp. leid; Chaucer, C. T. 81, 3035 (A 3937). AS. leggan (where cg=gg), to lay; pt. l. legde, pp. gelegd; Grein, ii. 166. Formed by vowel-change of (a) to (e) from lag, orig. form of AS. lag, pt. l. legde, to lay; see LIE (1).—F. Du. leggen, pt. l. legde, leide, pp. geleg; Icel. leggja, pt. leggi, pp. lagði, legðr; Dan. legge, pt. l. legde, pp. lagt; Swed. legge, pt. l. lade, pp. lagd; Goth. lagjan, pt. l. lagida, pp. lagitiks; G. legen, pt. l. legte, pp. gelegt. Teut. type lagjan-*, from lag, 2nd grade of legjan-*, to lie. β. The form lay is due to the base leg, occurring in AS. leg-ed, leg-d, 2nd and 3rd pers. sing. of the present tense. DER. lay-er, n.

LAY (2), a song, lyric poem. (F.—OHG.) ME. lai, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 109. l. 167; lay. P. Plowman, li. viii. 66.—OF. lai, spelt lay in Cotgrave; cf. Prov. lais, a lay. [The lay was regarded as specially belonging to the Bretons; Mr. Wedgwood cites from Marie de France: '*Les cuntes ke jo sai verais Dun li Breton unt fait lor lais Vus cunterai assez briefment*'—the tales which I know to be true, of which the Bretons have made their lays, I will briefly relate to you. See further in note 24 to Tyrwhitt's Introductory Discourse to the Cant. Tales; and see Chaucer, C. T. 11021 (F 709).] Of doubtful origin; but most probably from OHG. leich, leich, a game, sport; also melody, song (see SCHADE).—Icel. leir; AS. lae, sport; Goth. laiks, dancing (L. xv. 25). Teut. type laioz*, m.; whence also Oslav. lěka, Russ. lik, a chorus, choir. ¶ Not from Celtic; and not from G. lied; see under LARK (2).

LAY (3), LAIC, pertaining to the laity. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. lay; 'I erced men and lay' = learned men and laymen; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 171, last line.—OF. lai, 'lay, secular, of the laity'; Cot.—L. laicus, belonging to the people (where the E. laic).—Gk. λαϊκός, belonging to the people.—Gk. λαός (Ionic ἁγός, Attic λαός), the people. Root uncertain. DER. laic-al, lay-man, Trevisa, v. 280; also lay-ty, used by Cotgrave (as cited above), formed with suffix -ty by analogy with words such as chast-ty, quanti-ty, &c.

LAY FIGURE, a jointed wooden model of the human body, used by artists. (Du. and F.) Figure is from F. figure, l. figurā. Lay is properly a part of the older word layman (used in the same sense as lay figure).—Du. leeman, lit. 'joint man', i.e. jointed figure; where lee is for lede, in compounds (Sewel); from MDu. led, lid (Hexham), Du. lid, a joint, limb, which is cognate with AS. lið, a limb, G. g-lied, Goth. lihtus, a limb. See Franck. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 159.

LAYER, a stratum, row, tier, bed. (E.) 'Layer, a bed or channel in a creek, where small oysters are thrown in to breed; among gardeners, it is taken for a young sprout covered with mould, in order to raise its kind;' Kersey, ed. 1715. Layer—that which lays, hence a mode of laying or propagating. It was extended to mean anything carefully laid in due order. See LAY (1). ¶ Distinct from lair, which is from the intrans. verb to lie. Der. layering.

LAZAR, a leper. (F.—L.—Gk.—Heb.) ME. lazar, Chaucer, C. T. 243. —F. Lazare. See Littre.—L. Lazarus.—Gk. Adzapor, the name of the beggar in the parable; Luke, xvi. 20; contracted from the Heb. name Eleazar.—Heb. El'azar, 'he whom God helps.' Der. lazar-like, Hamlet, i. 5. 73; lazar-house, Milton, P. L. xi. 479; also lazar-etto, from Ital. lazzaretto, a plague-hospital.

LAZY, slow, sluggish, slothful. (Low G.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 1. 28; spelt lascia in Spenser, Kal. Feb. 9; July, 33; lazio in Minshew, ed. 1627. We also find the verb to laze. 'S'endormir en seintelle, to sleep when he hath most cause to watch; to laze it when he hath most need to look about him.' Cot.; this is a back formation from the adj. Spelt lasy in 1549 (N. E. D.). Of obscure origin; but prob. from Low G. lascich, variant of louch, languid, idle (Lilbren); lössig, lazy (Danneil); Pomeran. lasyig; Hamburg lasy, slow, tired, lazy (Richy); cf. lausem, lazy (Bremen); Du. lousig, idle (Calisch). Allied to LOOSE. The phonology offers difficulties; it does not appear to be connected with G. lässig, weary, lazy (though the sense corresponds); which is from G. lass, cognate with E. late. Of course we do not borrow words from High German in the 16th century, except in very rare and peculiar instances, such as carouse. Der. lazy-ly, lazy-ness.

LEA (1). LEY, LAY, a tract of open ground. (E.) 'On the watry lea,' i. e. plain; Spenser, F. Q. iv. 2. 16. Often spelt ley, leigh, in E. place-names, in Bromley, leay, Had-leigh. 'Thy rich leas,' Tempest, v. 1. 60. AS. lāh, lāh, gen. case lāes, also lāge; see Thorpe, Diplomatarium Aevi Saxonici, p. 109, l. 8, p. 292, l. 4; also p. 526, where the place-name Had-leah (Hadleah) occurs; also p. 658. β. Just as AS. lāh (= E. lean) is cognate with G. flah, so lea is cognate with prov. G. loh, a morass, bog, wood, forest (Flügel), which also appears in place-names, such as Hohen-leh, i. e. high leas. So also we find the Low G. loge, which in place-names near Bremen signifies a low-lying tract, a grassy plain; Bremen Wörterb. iii. 80. So also Water-loe = water-lea. Teut. types laukuz, in., lauhā, f. Further cognates occur in Lithuanian laukas, an open field (Neusselman); L. lietus, a grove, glade, open space in a wood (?); Skt. lōka-s, a region; Idg. type lougos*. 'to show the way.'—AS. lād, a way, path; Grein, ii. 150.—AS. līdan, strong verb, to travel, go; Grein, ii. 183; of which lādan may be regarded as the causal form. +Icel. leida, to lead, from leita, a way; which from lida, to go, pass, move along; Swed. leda, to lead, from led, a way, course; which from lida, to pass, go on; Dan. lede, to lead, from led, a gate; which from lida, to glide on; G. leiten, to lead; causal of OHG. lidan, to go, go away, undergo, endure, suffer = mod. LEAGUE (2), a distance of about three miles. (Prov.—L.—C.) The distance varied. 'A league or myle;' Levins, ed. 1570. Cotgrave, s. v. lieue, notes that German or long leagues are about 4 miles long, those of Languedoc, about 3 miles, and Italian or short leagues are about 1 mile. 'A hundred league' from the OF. The Celtic word remains in Bret. leu or lew, a league; in the district of Vannes, leu. From Celtic type leugā; Stokes-Fick, p. 244. Observe that the F. form from which the E. word is derived is a Southern F. or Provencal form; and the E. league of 3 miles coincides, as to length, with that of Languedoc. See Phil. Soc. Trans. 1903, p. 154. Der. seven-league-ed.

LEAGUER, a camp. (Du.) In All's Well, iii. 6. 27.—Du. leger, a lair; also, a camp, army. See BELEAGUER. Doublet, lair.

LEAN (1), to incline, bend, stoop. (E.) ME. lenen, P. Plowman, B. prol. 9, xviii. 5. The trans. and intrans. forms are now alike; properly, the intrans. form is the more primitive, and the mod. E. verb may have arisen from this form only, as the causal form was rare. AS. lāne, lean; used of Pharaoh's lean kine; Gen. xli. 3.—Low G. leen, lean. β. Perhaps the orig. sense was leaning, bending, stooping; hence weak, thin, poor. Cf. See LEAN (1). ¶ The occurrence of the initial h in AS. lāne at once separates it from AS. lāne, adj. transitory, which is connected with lend and loan. Der. lean-ly, lean-ness.

An AF. law term; see Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. —AF. lesser, Year-book of Edw. I (1292-3), p. 43; F. laisser, 'to leave, relinquish'; Cot. [Cf. Ital. lasciare, to quit.] Laisser is still used in the sense 'to part with' or 'let go' at a fixed price; see Littré. [The AF. form lesser at once accounts for E. less-or, less-ee.] —I. laxiare, to slacken, let go. —I. laxus, lax, slack; see LAX. ¶ Not related to G. lassen, which = E. let; see LET (1). LEAVE (2), permission, farewell. (E.) In the phr. 'to take leave', the word is the same as leaw, permission. The orig. sense was, probably, 'to take permission to go,' hence, 'to take a formal farewell.' Cf. 'to give leave.' We may, then, remember that the sb. is entirely independent of the verb above. ME. leue, leawe (with u = v). 'By your leue' — with your permission; Chaucer, C. T. 13377. 'But taketh his leue' — but takes his leave; id. 1210. AS. leaf, permission; Grein, li. 168; whence was formed the verb līfan (Old English līfan), to permit = ME. leuen, to permit, grant (now obsolete), one of the most troublesome words in old authors, as it is frequently confounded by editors with ME. leuen, to lend, and misprinted accordingly; see note to Chaucer's Prioress's Tale, ed. Skeat, i. 1873. The orig. sense of leaw is 'that which is acceptable or pleasing,' or simply 'pleasure'; and the Teut. type is laubā*, fem., from laub-, 2nd grade of Teut. root laub-, whence AS. leof, pleasing, lief, dear; see LIEF. +Du. lof, only in the comp. oor-lof, permission, ver-lof, leave; cf. also Icel. leypf, leave; leypa, to permit; lofan, permission; G. ur-laub, leave, furlough; ver-laub, leave, permission; er-lauben, to permit. See Furlough and Love.

LEAVEN, the ferment which makes dough rise. (F.-L.) ME. leuain, leuain (with u = v). 'He is the leuain of the bred' [bread]; Gower, C. A. i. 294; bk. iii. 446; cf. Prompt. Parv. p. 300. —F. levain, 'leaven'; Cot. = L. leuamen, an alleviation, mitigation; but used (here) in the orig. sense of 'that which raises.' [Ducange records the sense of 'leaven' for Late L. leuamentum, a parallel form to leuamen.] —L. leuare, to raise. See LEVER. Similarly, Ital. lievito, leaven, is from Ital. lievare, to raise (< L. leuāre). Der. leuen, verb.

LECHER, a man addicted to lewdness. (F.-G.) In early use. ME. lechor, lechor; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 53, l. 27; Ancien Riwle, p. 216; Rols. of Glouc. p. 119; l. 1529. —OF. lecheor (Godefroy), lecheor (Cotgrave), lit. one who licks up. —OF. lecher, to lick, to live in gluttony (Godefroy), mod. F. licker, to lick. —OHG. lechōn, G. lechen, to lick; cognate with E. lick, q.v. Der. lecherous, P. Plowman, C. ii. 25; lecher-ous-ly, lecher-ous-ly; lecher-y, ME. lecherie, lecherie, Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 11, l. 3. Cf. lickerish.

LECTERN, LECTURN, a reading-desk. (F.-L.) 'Leterone, lectorne, lectrone, lecturn, deske, Lectrinum'; Prompt. Parv. p. 299. Spelt lecterne in Minshew, ed. 1627. Adapted from OF. lecturn, a lectern (Godefroy), with e added from the Late L. form. —Late L. lecturn, a reading-desk or pulpit (attributed to Isidore of Seville). For leg-trum*, from leg-ere, to read (below). [Cf. I. mulc-trum, a milking-pail; from mulg-ere, to milk.] See Legend. Some forms, as OF. leitrin, F. litrin, were influenced by Late L. lectrinum, by-form of lecturn. Hence lectryne, a lectern; Trevisa, tr. of Higden, vi. 447.

LECTION, a reading, portion to be read. (F.-L.) 'Other copies and various lections;' Milton, A Defence of the People of England. (R.-O.) OF. lection, a reading, a lesson (Godefroy). —I. lectionem, acc. of lectio, a reading; cf. L. lectus, pp. of legere, to gather, read; see Legend. Der. lection-ary; and see below. Doublet, lesson.

LECTURE, a discourse, formal reproof. (F.-L.) 'Whereof oure present lecture speaketh'; Sir T. More, p. 1301 c. = F. lecture, 'a lecture, a reading'; Cot. = Late L. lectura, a commentary; cf. lectus, pp. of legere, to read; see Legend. Der. lecture, verb, lecture-r, lecture-ship.

LEDGE, a slight shelf, ridge, small moulding. (E.) Palsgrave has: 'Ledge of a shelve, apuy, i.e. support; also: 'Ledge of a dore, barre.' See Legge in Prompt. Parv. In Norfolk, a bar of a gate, or stile, of a chair, table, &c., is termed a ledge, according to Forby. A floor made of three or four upright boards, fastened by cross-pieces, is called a ledger-door; a ledger is a horizontal slab of stone, a horizontal bar, and is also called a ligger (Halliwell). A ligger is 'a pier, that which lies, from AS. līgan, to lie; and ledge is from a like source, that it was evidently formed from ME. leggen [gg = d], to lay, the causal of līgan, AS. līgan (above). So also MHG. leike, legge, a layer, stratum, from OHG. leigan, to lay. We may also note Norw. leg, a lying, couch, laid, a support upon which anything rests. See Lay (1), Lie (1).

LEDGER, a book in which a summary of accounts is preserved. (E.) Formerly called a ledger-book; Kersey, ed. 1715. Spelt ledger in 1558, with reference to a bible that was always to lie in the same place (N. E. D.). The word had other meanings, most of them involving the sense of 'lying still'. Thus a ledger was a horizontal slab of stone (Halliwell); ledger ambassadors were such as remained for some time at a foreign court; see ledger in Shak. Meas. iii. 1. 59. A ledger-bait was a bait that was 'fixed or made to rest in one certain place'; I. Walton, Angler, pt. i. c. 8. 'A rusty musket, which had lien long ledger in his shop'; Fuller's Worthies, London (R.). Formed, like ledge above, from ME. leggen [gg = dj], to lay, or from ME. lidge [gg = dj], to lie; which were much confused. Cf. prov. E. lidge, to lie (E. D. D.). A similar formation occurs in Du. legger, 'one that lies down' (Sewel); hence mod. Du. legger, the nether mill-stone [answering to E. ledger, a horizontal slab of stone]; MDu. ligger, 'a daily Booke kept for ones use,' i. e. a ledger (Hexham); MDu. leggen, to lie, once in common use, though the true form is leggen, and the proper sense of leggen is to lay. We know how these words are constantly confused in English. 'Te hed leggen, to ly a-led. Neer leggen, to lie down. Waar legt hy rhyds, where does he ly, or lodge?' Sewel. See Lie (1). ¶ Thus a ledger-book is one that lies always ready in one place. The etymology of the word was ill-understood, and it was confused with OF. legier, light; see Ledger-line. Hence it was sometimes spelt legier (see Richardson); and Howell goes so far as to use a legier-book in the sense of a portable memorandum-book, apparently from thus mistaking the true sense. 'Some do use to have a small leger-booke fairly bound up table-book-wise,' i. e. like a memorandum-book; Howell, Forraire Travell, sect. iv, ed. Arber, p. 27. N.B. The earliest quotation in the N. E. D. is dated 1481, with reference to 'a large copy of the breviary'; but Wylie, Hist. Henry IV, iv. 198, cites '10 portos, 3 liggeres' in 1401.

LEDGER-LINE, in music; one of the short lines added above or below the stave to accommodate notes lying beyond the usual five lines. (Hybrid; E. and L.) Not in Todd's Johnson. Spelt leger-line in Ash's Dict., 1775. 'You add a line or two to the five lines, . . . those lines . . . being called ledger-lines;' Playford, Skill of Music, i. 6; ed. 1700 (N. E. D.). So called from lying flat; cf. ledger, a horizontal timber (N. E. D.). ¶ Not from F. legier, OF. legier, light; the F. name is ligne additionnelle.

LEE, a sheltered place, shelter; part of a ship away from the wind. (Scand.) ME. lee, shelter. 'We lurked vnder lee,' we lay hid under shelter; Mort Arthur, ed. Brock, l. 1446. A-lee = on the lee; Deposition of Rich. II, ed. Skeat, iv. 74. The word and its use are perhaps both Scand.; the E. word is lee, a shelter, still in use provincially (E. D. D.), though lee also occurs. Prob. from Icel. lér, lee, used only by seamen; sigla á hli, to stand to leeward; hli-börð, the lee-side; Dan. læ; Swed. lä + Du. lij. Cognate with AS. lreo, kleow, a covering, protection, shelter; Grein, ii. 82; whence prov. E. lee, a shelter, also, as adj., warm; see Lew. β. From AS. lreo was formed the sb. lreoð, kleowð, a shelter (Grein, ii. 82); the same word as prov. E. leuth, shelter, warmth. With these forms we may compare Icel. hif, warmth, klar, hif, warm, hifja, to shelter. All from a Teut. type klewoz*, adj. warm. ¶ Note the pronunciation lee-ward, for lee-ward, due to E. lee. Der. lee-shore, lee-side, lee-way. Also lee-ward, allied to MDu. lyuward, lee-ward (Sewel); the mod. Du. form being lyuwaarts.

LEECH (1), a physician. (E.) In Shak. Timon, v. 4. 84. ME. leche, Chaucer, C. T. 15524 (G 56). AS. læca, a physician; Matt. ix. 12; Lu. iv. 23. Connected with AS. læcanian, to heal; Grein, ii. 150. Cf. Icel. lækur, a physician; lækna, to cure, heal; Dan. læge, a physician; læge, to heal; Swed. läkare, a physician; from läka, to heal; Goth. læikeis, læikeis, a physician, Lu. iv. 23; connected with læiknon, læiknon, to heal; OHG. læhhi, læhi, a physician; connected with OHG. læhkinôn, to heal, MITG. læchenen, to employ remedies, MITG. læchen, a remedy. β. The AS. læca, Dan. læge, Goth. læikeis, are all from a Teut. type læhjoz*, a healer; from Idg. base leh-*. γ. We may further compare Irish. and Gael. leigh, Olrish liag, a physician.

LEECH (2), a blood-sucking worm. (E.) ME. leche, Prompt. Parv. p. 291. AS. læce; we find 'Sanguisuga, vel hirudo, lites' in Ælfric's Gloss, Nomina Insectorum; Voc. 121. 36. Lee, 'the healer'; and the same word as the above.

LEECH (3), LEACH, the border or edge of a sail at the sides. (Scand.) 'Leech, the edge of a sail, the goring;' Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. 'The leech of a sail, vox nautica;' Skinner, ed. 1671. 'Penne d'une voile, the leech of a sail;' Cot. Ultimately allied to Icel. lik, a leech-line; Swed. lik, a bolt-rope, ständer liden, the leeches; Dan. lig, a bolt-rope, stænede lig, a leech. + MDu. lyhen, a bolt-rope (Sewel); Du. hij (see Franch).

LEEK, a kind of onion. (E.) ME. leek, Chaucer, C. T. 3877

(A 3879); P. Plowman, B. v. 82. AS. leac; Voc. 295. 22. + Du. look; Icel. laukr; Dan. løg; Swed. lök; G. lauch. Teut. type laukoz*, m.; laukom, n. Root unknown; perhaps from Teut. type lauk*, as in AS. leac, pt. t. of lucan, to weed, to pull up. Der. gar-lic, char-look, hem-look.

LEER, to stare with glances. (E.) 'I leere or lere, as a dogge dothe undemeth a caste;' Palsgrave. Cf. Shak. L. L. v. 2. 480, 2 Hen. IV. v. 5. 7; Troil. v. 1. 97. The verb is a later development from the ME. lere, meaning the cheek, also the face, complexion, mien. 'A lovely lady of lere' = a lady of lovely mien; P. Plowman, B. i. 3. It was orig. almost always used in a good sense, and with adjectives expressive of beauty, but in Skelton we find it otherwise in two passages. 'Her lothely lere is nothyng cler, But vgly of chere' = her loathsome look is not at all clear, but ugly of aspect; Elymoure Rummynge, l. 12. 'Your lothesum lere to loke on;' and Poem against Gamesche, l. 5. 'Shakspeare has it in two senses; (1) the complexion, aspect, As You Like It, iv. 1. 67; Titus Andronicus, iv. 2. 119; (2) a winning look, Merry Wives, i. 2. 50. At a later period it is generally used in a sinister sense. = AS. lhor, the cheek; hence the face, look, Grein, ii. 85. + OSax. klhor, the cheek; MDu. lier (Oudemans); Icel. hlyr, pl. the cheeks. Der. leer, sb., a side-glance.

LEES, dregs of wine. (F.) In A. V. Isa. xzv. 6, Jer. xlviii. 11. 'Verily the lees of wine are so strong;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 2. ME. lyes, pl.; Chaucer, House of Fame, iii. 1040. Gower has lie, sing., sediment; Conf. Amant. i. 309; bk. iii. 895. A pl. sb., from a sing. not much used. = F. lie, 'the lees, dregs, grounds, thick substance that settles in the bottom of liquor;' Cot. Of unknown origin; the Late L. form is lia; the phr. 'fecla vis lia uini' occurs in a MS. of the 10th century (Littre). Moncaut has Gascon lie, 'lie de vin.' Perhaps Celtic; cf. Bret. lec'hid, sediment, W. llaid, mire. Körtling, § 5574; Thurneysen, p. 66.

LEET, a special court of record held by certain lords of manors. (F.) 'Amercyn in a corte or lete;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt leta in Law Latin (Cowell); and lete in AF, as in Stat. Realm, i. 342 (1353); Year-books of Edw. I., 1392, p. 297. Lete is perhaps the AF. spelling and adaptation of AS. læð; for which see Lathe (2). β. Or perhaps it was adapted from Icel. leð, which, according to Vigfusson, means precisely 'a leet'. γ. Or perhaps a particular use of leat, q. v. Cf. Low G. gelat, G. gelas, room, space.

LEFT, a term applied to the (usually) weaker hand. (E.) ME. left, lift, luft. Spelt left, Chaucer, C. T. 2955 (A 2593); lift, Will. of Palerne, 2061; F. P. Plowman, A. ii. 5; Layamon, 24461. Rare in AS, which has the term winster instead; see Grein, ii. 716. We do, however, find 'inanis, left,' in a Gloss (Mone, Quellen, i. 443), and the same MS. has senne for synne (sin); so that left is the Kentish form of lyft, with the sense of 'worthless' or 'weak'; cf. AS. lyft-lyft, palsy. NFrisic left, leftier hand (left hand); Outzen, + MDu. lyft, left (Oudemans); Kilian also gives the form lycht. β. The l is a suffix; cf. Etrus. lyf, weak. There is also, according to Ihre (Lexicon Lapponicum), a Lapp form, luomek. β. Origin obscure; Aasen thinks that the word means 'lamming', i.e. spoiling, very destructive, and connects it with Norweg. lenja, to palsy, strike, beat; but this is 'popular etymology.' Perhaps it is of Lapp origin, after all.

LEND, to let for hire, allow the use of for a time. (E.) The final d is excrement, as in sound from F. son. ME. lenen, pt. t. lenede, lende, lente, pp. lened, lent, lent. Thus the mod. final d was easily suggested by the forms of the pt. t. and pp. 'Lēn me your hand' = lend me your hand; Chaucer, C. T. 3084 (A 3082). 'This lond he hire lende' = he lent [granted] her this land; Layamon, l. 228. AS. lēnan, to lend, also to give, grant; Grein, ii. 163. = AS. lēn, a loan, Grein, ii. 163. = F. lōnen, to lend; from lōn, a fee, fief; Icel. lāna, to lend; from lān, a loan; Dan. laane, to lend; from laan, a loan; OIIG. lēhanū, G. lehen, to lend (a provincial word); from OIIG. lēhon, lehen, lehn, a fief. See further under Loan. Der. lend-er; lend-ing; K. Lear, iii. 4. 113.

LENGTH, extent, the quality of being long. (E.) ME. lengthe (two syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 83, 4428 (B 8). AS. lengthu; the dat. lengthe occurs in the AS. Chron. an. 1122. For lengthū*. Formed with suffix -th and vowel-change of a to e from AS. lang, long. = Du. lengte, from lang; Dan. langde, from lang; Swed. längd, from lång; Icel. lengd, from lungr. See Long. Der. length-en, in which the final -en has a causal force, though this peculiar formation is conventional and unusual; in the ME. lengthen, the final -en merely denoted the infinitive mood, and properly produced the verb to length, as in Palgrave, and in Shak. 'passionate Pilgrim', l. 210. Also length-y, length-i-ly, length-i-ness; length-wise, length-ways.

LENIENT, mild, merciful. (L.) In Milton, Samson, 659. = L. lenient, stem of pres. part. of lenire, to soften, soothe. = L. lenis, soft, mild. See Lenity, Lithe. Der. lenient-ly, leniency.

V, iii. 2. 26, 6. 118. = OF. lenit, mildness (obsolete). = L. lenitatem, acc. of lenitas, softness, mildness. = L. leni, decl. stem of lenis, soft, gentle, mild; with suffix -itas. Root uncertain; but re-lent and lithe are related words. Der. lenit-ive = OF. lenitif, a 'lenitive' (Cot.), from Late L. lenitivus. And see Lenient.

LENS, a piece of glass used for optical purposes. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. So called, from the resemblance in shape to the seed of a lentil, which is like a double-convex lens. = L. lens; see Lentil. Der. lenticul-ar, from L. lenticula, a lentil.

LENT, a fast of forty days, beginning with Ash Wednesday. (E.) The fast is in the spring of the year, and the old sense is simply 'spring.' ME. lenten, lente, lent; spelt lenten, P. Plowman, B. xx. 359. AS. lencden, the spring; Grein, ii. 167. = Du. lente, the spring; G. lenz, spring; OIIG. lenzin, lenzigen. β. Supposed to be derived from AS. Du, and G. lang, long, because in spring the days lengthen; Kluge suggests that the orig. Teut. type was langi-tino*, i.e. 'long day'; where -tino is allied to Skt. dina, Iith. dēna, a day. Der. lenten, adj., Hamlet, ii. 2. 329; here the suffix -en is not adjectival (as in gold-en), but the whole word is the ME. lenten fully preserved; so also Lenten-tide = AS. lencden-tid, spring-time, Gen. xlviii. 7.

LENTIL, an annual plant, bearing pulse for food. (F.-L.) ME. lentil; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 1488. = OF. lentille, 'the lentil or lentil'; Cot. = L. lenticula, a little lentil; double dimin. (with suffix -cul) from lenti, decl. stem of lens, a lentil. See Lens. LEPER, one afflicted with leprosy. (F. — L. — Gk.) The form of the word is founded on a mistake; the word properly means the disease itself (2 Kings, v. 11), now called leprosy; the old term for 'leper' was leprosus man. 'And loo! a leprose man cam . . . And anon the lepre of him was clensid'; Wyclif, Matt. viii. 2, 3. And see Henryson, Test. of Cressid, ll. 438, 451, 474, 480, &c. — F. lepre, 'a leprosie'; Cot. — L. lepra = Gk. λεπρα, leprosy. So called because it makes the skin scaly. — Gk. λεπρός, scaly, scabby, rough. — Gk. λέπρος, a scale, husk, rind. — Gk. λέπω, to strip, peel, take off the husk or rind, scale. Cf. Russ. лупит, to scale, peel, bark; Lithuanian lūpti, to scale, peel. Der. lepr-ous = OF. leprosus, from L. leprosus, adj.; whence was coined the sb. leprosus, Matt. viii. 3.

LEPIDOPTERA, s. pl., a certain order of insects. (Gk.) Modern, and scientific; due to Linnaeus. Used of the butterfly, and other insects whose four wings are covered with very fine scales. Coined from Gk. λεπίδα, decl. stem of λεπίς, a scale; and πτερόν, pl. of πτερός, a wing. Actis is from λέων, to scale (see Leprosy); and πτερόν is allied to E. feather, from πτερόν, weak grade of πτερόν, to fly; see Feather, Fen. Der. lepidopter-us.

LESS, smaller. (E.) Used as compar. of little, but from a different root; the coincidence in the first letter is accidental. ME. less, lass, adj., les, adv. 'The less lute' — the less low; Ancien Kwele, p. 92, l. 7. Les as adv., p. 30, l. 7. AS. læssan, adj., læw, adv.; Grein, ii. 164. — OFries. læsa, less. β. Læssa stands for læw-ra, by assimilation; Teut. type læis-iz-on*; and læw represents the adv. type læis-iz*, both formed (with comp. suffix -iz) from a base læu-, for læis-, small; allied to Lith. lësas, thin, small. From Idg. base læis-*.

LEAST, the superl. form, is the ME. læst, adj., P. Plowman, B. iii. 24; læt, adv., Gower, C. A. i. 153; bk. i. 3285. AS. læstest (whence læst by contraction), Grein, ii. 164; from the same base læis-*, with the usual suffix -est (for -ist, Gk. -ιστος). Der. less, sb.; læis-er, a double comparative, Gen. i. 16; less-en, vb., from ME. lassen, Sir Gawain and the Grene Knight, l. 1800, læssin (for lassen). Prompt. LEST, for fear that, that not. (E.) Not for least, as sometimes erroneously said, but due to less. It arose from the AS. equivalent expression læs lēs &c., as in the following sentence. 'Nelle we ēās race nā lēng tēon, 87 lēs lēs hit ēow aþryt bync' — we will not prolong this story farther, lest it seem to you tedious; Sweet's A. S. Reader, p. 94, l. 211. Here 87 lēs lēs literally = for the reason less that (i. e. quod minus); where 87 (= for the reason) is the instrumental case of the def. article; læs = less, adv.; and lēs (= that) is the indeclinable relative. β. At a later period 87 was dropped, læs became les, and lēs &c., coalescing, became one word lestha, altered (regularly) to lest, and lastly to lest, for ease of pronunciation. The form lest occurs in the Ancien Kwele, p. 58, l. 12, whilst the older expression β. les β. occurs in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 117, l. 2 from bottom; so that the word took the form lest about the beginning of the 13th century. See Nevertheless.

AS. lettan, to hinder; also gelettan; Grein, ii. 168. LIE (2), to tell a lie, speak falsely. (E.) ME. liȝen, liȝn, liȝn, a strong verb; Layamon, 3034, Chaucer, C. T. 765 (A 763); pt. t. leh, Layamon, 12942, 17684; pp. lowen, P. Plowman, B. v. 95. AS. liogan, pt. t. leag, pp. logan; Grein, ii. 176. = Du. liegen, pt. t. loog, pp. gelogen; Icel. lioga, pt. t. laug, pp. loginn; Dan. lyve, pt. t. løj, pp. løjel; Swed. lyga, pt. t. lig, pp. lygen; Goth. liugan, pt. t. lauh, pp. lugans; G. liugen, pt. t. log, pp. gelogen. β. Teut. type leugan-*, pt. t. laug, pp. lugans*. Teut. root leg*; idg. LEUGH*. Cf. Russ. ligat, ligat, to lie; Icel. liog, a lie. Der. lie, sb., = AS. lyge, lige, Grein, ii. 199; lior, cf. AS. liogere; lying, lying-ly.

LIEB, dear, beloved, loved, pleasing. (E.) Now chiefly used in the phr. 'I had as lieb,' which is common in Shak.; see Hamlet, iii. 2. 4. ME. lief, leif, lef; Chaucer, C. T. 3790 (A 3792); vocative and pl. leue (= leue), id. 1238; compar. leuer (= leuer), id. 298; superl. leuest (= leuest). P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 16. AS. liof, liof, vocative liofa, pl. liofs; compar. liofra, superl. liofasta, Grein, ii. 174. 175. (a common word) = Du. lief, dear; Icel. liofr; Swed. liuf; Goth. liubs; G. lieb, MHG. liep, OHG. liup. Teut. type leubos*; idg. type leubhos*. Cf. also Russ. liubit, agreeable; liubit, to love. β. All from Teut. base LEUB, to be pleasing to; cf. L. libet, libet, it pleases; Skt. liubh, to covet, desire. = LEUBH*, to desire. Der. (from the same root) love, leave (2), believe, furlough, lib-idious.

LIEGE, faithful, subject, true, bound by feudal tenure. (F.-OHG.) a. The etymology is disguised by a change both of sense and usage. We now say 'a liege vassal,' i.e. one bound to his lord; it is easy to see that this sense is due to a false etymology which connected the word with L. ligatus, bound, pp. of ligare, to bind; see Ligament. β. But the fact is, that the older phrase was 'a liege lord,' and the older sense 'a lord entitled to feudal allegiance.' The phrase 'my liege man' occurs twice, and 'my liege men' once, in Will. of Palerme, 1174, 2663, 3004. The expression 'vr [our] liege lord' occurs in Koh. of Ghent, p. 457. l. 9376; and in Chaucer, C. T. 12271 (Six-text, C 337, where the MSS. have liege, liege, liege). In Barbour's Bruce, ed. Skeat, v. 165, we find: 'Bot and I lif in liege pouste' = but if I survive in sovereignty entitled to homage; or, in free sovereignty. = OF. liege, 'liege, leal, or loyall'; Primes liege, a liege lord; Seigneur liege, the same; Cot. Also (better) spelt liege in the 12th cent. (Littre). = OHG. lede, lede, also lidic, lidig (mod. G. ledig), free, unfettered, free from all obligations; which seems to have been the orig. sense. The expression ligius homo, quod Teutonice dicitur ledighman occurs A.D. 1253; Ducange. 'A liege lord' seems to have been a lord of a free band; and his liege, though serving under him, were privileged men, free from other obligations. β. Further the OHG. lidic is cognate with Icel. liðgr, free, also ready, willing; and is prob. allied to OHG. liðan, to go, depart, experience, take one's way; cognate with AS. liðan, to go, travel. Also, the Icel. liðgr, ready, free, is from Icel. lið, to travel; see Lead (1). ¶ For further information on this difficult word, see Dietz, Scheler, and Littre; and the MDu. ledig, free, in Kilian. And see Körtling, § 5506. 'Loechet' [= ledigheid] is mooder van alle quaethede' = idleness is mother of all vices; O. Du. Proverb, cited in Oudemans. Ducange's attempt to connect the word with Late L. litus, a kind of vassal, is a failure.

LIEGER, LEIGER, an ambassador; see Ledger.

LIEB, a legal claim, a charge on property. (F.-L.) A legal word; not in Todd's Johnson; preserved as a law term from the 16th century. = F. lien, a band, or tie, . . . anything that fasteneth or fettereth; Cot. = L. ligamen, a band, tie. = L. ligare, to tie; see Ligament.

LIEU, place, stead. (F.-L.) In the phr. 'in lieu of' = in place of; Temp. i. 2. 123. = F. lieu, 'a place, room'; Cot. Spelt lin in the 10th century. (Littre). = L. locum, acc. of locus, a place; see Locus. Der. lieu-tenant, q.v.

LIEUTENANT, a deputy, vicegerent, &c. (F.-L.) ME. lieutenant, Gower, C. A. i. 73; bk. i. 947; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 47. = F. lieutenant, 'a lieutenant, deputy'; Cot. = L. locum-tenens, acc. of locum-tenens, one who holds another's place, a deputy. = L. locum, acc. of locus, a place; and tenens, pres. part. of tenere, to hold. See Locus and Tenant. Der. lieutenant-y. ¶ The pron.

as leftenant is old; cf. leftenant in Barbour, Bruce, xiv. 139. Cf. OF. luef, for lie (Godfrey).

LIFE, animate existence. (E.) ME. lif, lyf, gen. case lyves, dat. lyue, pl. lyues (with u=v); Chaucer, C. T. 2757, 2778, 14100 (A 2755, 2776, B 3284). AS. lif, gen. lifes, dat. lyfe, pl. lyfas; Grein, ii. 183. +Icel. lif, lyf; Dan. liv; Swed. lif; OHG. lyp, leip, life; mod. G. leib, the body. Cf. Du. lyf, the body. β . Teut. type liþom*, n. This sb. is a derivative from Teut. root liþ* (weak grade liþ*), to remain, occurring in Icel. lyfa, to be left, to remain, to live, AS. lyfan, to be remaining, to live; OHG. lyban, lypan, only used in the comp. beliban, MHG. beliben, G. bleiben, to remain, be left. γ . The sense 'remain' arose from that of 'to cleave'; and thus life is connected with Lithuanian lipti, to cleave, stick, Skt. lipi, to anoint, smear, Gk. ἀλείφω, to anoint, ἀλφ-αφ, persistent; the form of the root being LEIP; Fick, i. 754. Der. life-blond, life-boat, life-estate, life-guard, q.v., life-hold, life-insurance, &c.; as life-less, life-less-ly, life-less-ness, life-long. Also live, live-ly, live-living, live-long. From the same source, leave (1). And see ALIVE.

LIFEGUARD, a body-guard. (Hybrid; F. and G.) 'The Cherethites were a kind of lifeguard to king David.' Fuller, Pisgah Sight of Palestine, ed. 1650, p. 217. From LIFE and GUARD. Cf. See French, Eng. Past and Present. The word is not borrowed from the G. Leibgarde, a body-guard; and it is much to the purpose to observe that, if it were so, it would make no difference; for the G. leib is the G. spelling of the word which we spell life, despite the difference in sense. The MHG. lyp meant 'life' as well as 'body'.

LIFELONG, lasting for a life-time. (E.) Modern; suggested by live-long. See LIVELONG.

LIFT (1), to elevate, raise. (Scand.) ME. lyften, to raise; Prompt. Parv. p. 303; I. Plowman, ll. v. 359; Havelok, 1028; spelt lyften (lyftene), Ormulun, 2658, 2744, 2755, 6141; 7528, &c. The orig. sense is to raise aloft, to exalt into the air = Icel. lyfta (pronounced lyfta), to lift; allied to lyft, the air; Dan. lyfte, to lift; lyft, a loft, a cock-loft, orig. 'the air'; Swed. lyfta, to lift; lyft, a loft, garret, orig. 'the air'. Teut. type lyftjan*; from lyftaz*, the air; see LOFT. The i=y mutation of a (o).

LIFT (2), to steal. (E.) 'But if night-robers lift [steal from] the well-stored hive.' Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 228, l. 916. The sb. lift, a thief, occurs in Shak., Troil. i. 2. 129. This sense arose from that of lifting up and carrying away; and the word is ult. the same as LIFT (1). See N. E. D. Skelton has: 'Convey it be [by] craft, lift and lay asyde.' Magnificence, l. 1373.

LIGAMENT, a band, the membrane connecting the moveable bones. (F.-L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. ME. ligament, Lanfranc, Chirurgie, p. 24, l. 1. -F. ligament, 'a ligament, or ligature.' Cot. -L. ligamentum, a tie, band. -L. liga-re, to tie; with suffix -mentum. Der. ligament-al, ligament-ous. From L. ligare we have also ligature, ligule, ligule, ligule, lium, lime-bound, ally, alligation, alloy, ally, league (1), oblique, rally (1).

LIGAN, as if from L. ligare; corrupt form of LEGAN, q.v.

LIGATURE, a bandage. (F.-L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627; and in Lanfranc, Chirurgie, p. 177, l. 17. -F. ligature, 'a ligature, tie, band.' Cot. -L. ligatura, a binding, bandage; from ligare, to bind; see LIGAMENT.

LIGHT (1), illumination. (E.) ME. licht, Chaucer, C. T. 1989, 1991 (A 1987, 1989). AS. leht, Grein, ii. 177 (cf. lyktan, lyktan, to shine, id. ii. 200); OMerc. leht, whence ME. licht, lyght. +Du. licht; G. licht, OHG. licht; Goth. liukath, light. β . Observe that the t is a mere suffix; Teut. type leuk-ton*, n., related to leuk-taz*, adj., 'bright,' as in E. light, adj. The Goth. liuk-atik answers to Teut. type leuk-a-thom*, lyg, type leuk-o-tom*. γ . Neglecting the final t, we have cognate words in Icel. lyfj (Teut. type leuk-som*), lyght, Icel. lygi, a flame (whence Lowland Scotch lyue, a flame). Idg. root LI-UQ; whence L. lux, light, l. lumen (= luc-men), light, luna (= luc-sua), moon; with numerous connected terms; also Gk. λευκός, white, bright, αἴσχυρος (= αἰσ-χρος), a light, lamp, &c. Cf. Skt. ruḥ, to shine. See LUOID. Der. light-house. Also light, verb, ME. lychten, Chaucer, C. T. 2428, AS. lyktan, lyktan, Grein, ii. 200; whence light-er, sb. Also light-en (1), q.v., light-ning, q.v. Connected words are luc-id, luc-fer, luc-ide, il-lu-minate, lu-nar, lu-natic, lu-nation, tea (1), q.v., lustre, il-lu-strate, il-lu-strious, luminous, lynx, &c.

LIGHT (2), active, not heavy, unimportant. (E.) ME. light, Chaucer, C. T. 9087 (E 1211); lightly, adv., id. 1463 (A 1461). AS. leht, adj., Grein, ii. 176; OMerc. leht, Matt. xi. 30 (Rushworth MS.). +Du. lygt; Icel. lyttir; Dan. let; Swed. lett; Goth. lehts, 2 Cor. i. 17; G. leicht, MHG. licht, OHG. liht, liht. Teut. type lihtoz*, for lihtoz*, lihtoz*. Allied to Lith. lengvas, light; from Idg. base legh* (u). From the weak grade of the same we have Gk. ἡλ-α-υ-ς, Skt. lagh-u (s), light. Allied further to Skt. lagh, to jump over. See Brugmann, i. § 684; Sievers, § 84. Thus the orig. sense is 'springy,' active, nimble; from which the other senses are easily deduced. Der. light-ly, light-ness, light, q.v., light-fingered, light-headed, light-hearted, light-minded, &c.; light-son, Rom. of the Rose, l. 936; light-son-ness; light-en (2), q.v.; light-er, q.v. From the same root we have (from L. leu-is) leu-ant, leu-er, leu-ly, leu-ly, al-leu-ate, &c. And see LUNG.

LIGHT (3), to settle, alight, descend. (E.) ME. lychten, lykten; 'adun heo gunnen lykten' - they alighted down; Layamon, 26337; 'he ghte a-doun of yerd' - he lighted down from his horse, I. Plowman, B. xvii. 64. β . The sense is to relieve a horse of his burden, and the word is identical with ME. lychten in the sense of to relieve of a burden. The derivation is from the adj. lyght, not heavy; see LIGHT (2). γ . When a man alights from a horse, he sense of relieving the horse of his burden, but completes the action by descending or alighting on the earth; hence light came to be used in the sense of to descend, settle, often with the prep. on. 'New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill.' Hamlet, iii. 4. 59; 'this murderous shaft hath yet not lighted'; Macb. ii. 3. 148. Hence this verb is (in sense) a doublet of LIGHTEN (2), q.v., as well as of LIGHTEN (3).

Der. light-er, q.v. And see ALIGHT, verb.

LIGHTEN (1), to illuminate, flash. (F.) The force of the final -en is somewhat dubious, but appears to have arisen in the transitive form. L. Intrans, to shine as lightning; 'it lightens,' Romeo, ii. 2. 120. ME. lychtenen, Prompt. Parv. p. 304; also lyght-en, to shine; Wyclif, Gen. i. 15. β . Trans, 'The trans. use is in Shak. Hen. VIII, iii. 3. 79, Titus And. ii. 3. 227, with the sense 'to illuminate.' ME. lychtenen; as in 'that lighted has ur ded sa dim'; Cursor, Mundi, 18600. From lyght, sb. with causal suffix -en, as in length-en, strengthen. We also find the simple form light, as in: 'the eye of heaven that lights the lower world.' Rich. II, iii. 2. 38. This is the ME. lychten, lyght (where the final -en is merely the mark of the infin. mood, often dropped); Chaucer, C. T. 2428 (A 2426). AS. lyktan, to illuminate; Grein, ii. 178. -AS. leht, light; see LIGHT (1). Der. light-ning.

LIGHTEN (2), to make lighter, alleviate. (E.) The final -en is merely formative, as in strengthen, length-en, short-en, weak-en. It is intended to have a causal force. We also find the simple form light, answering to ME. lychten, lyght (in which the final -en is merely the mark of the infin. mood, and is often dropped). 'Lyghten, or make wyghtys [weights] more esy, lightyn burdens, heuy weights, Allevio;' Prompt. Parv. p. 304. 'To lykten over heaved' = to take the weight [of hair] off your head; Ancren Riwle, p. 422. From the adj. lyght; see LIGHT (2), and LIGHT (3). So also Dan. lette, to lighten, from let, light.

LIGHTEN (3), to descend, settle, alight. (E.) 'O Lord, let thy mercy lighten upon us;' Te Deum, in the Prayer-book (L. 'nat'). Here lyghten is a mere extension of LIGHT (3), q.v.

LIGHTER, a boat for unloading ships. (Du.) In Skinner, ed. 1671; and in Pope, Dunciad, ii. 287. 'Lyghter, a great boat;' Falsgrave. Probably borrowed from Du. lyghter, a lighter (Sewel); spelt lichter in Skinner. Hence also lighter-man, from Du. lyghterman, a lighter-man (Sewel). -Du. lygt, light (not heavy); see LIGHT (2). γ . Thus the sense is the same as if the word had been purely English; it means 'unloader,' from the use made of these vessels.

Der. lighter-man (as above); lighter-age.

LIGHTNING, an illuminating flash. (F.) 'Thi lightningis schyneden;' Wyclif, Ps. lxxvii (lxxviii). 19. Verbal sb. from LIGHTEN (1).

LIGHTS, lungs. (E.) ME. lyghtes, Destruction of Troy, 10705; 'ya lyhte' = the lights, Layamon, 6499, answering to AS. ðā lyktan, i.e. the light things. So called from their lightness. So also Russ. legkii, lights; from legkii, light. See LIGHT (2).

LIGN-ALOES, the bitter drug aloes. (Hybrid; I. and Gk.) In Numbers, xxiv. 6 (A. V.). 'A kind of odoriferous Indian tree, usually identified with the Aquilaria Agallochum which supplies the aloes-wood of commerce. Our word is a partial translation of the L. lignum aloës, Gk. ῥαζαλιν. The bitterness of the aloes is proverbial;' Bible Word-book, ed. Eastwood and Wright. Chaucer has: 'As bittre . . . as lygne aloes, or galle;' Troilus, iv. 1137. -L. lignum, wood; and aloës, of the aloes, gen. case of alōē, the aloes, a word borrowed from Gk. ἀλός, the aloes. γ . On the true distinction between aloe and aloes-wood, see note to ALOE. And see LIGNEOUS.

LIGNEOUS, woody, wooden, wood-like. (L.) 'Of a more ligneous nature;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 504. Formed by mere change of L. -m into E. -ous as in ingenuous, arduous, and many others, from L. lignus, wooden. -L. lignum, wood; a word of disputed origin. Der. from ligni- (for ligno-) we have ligni-fer-ous = wood-producing (from ferre, to bear); ligni-fy = to turn to wood; and from the stem lign- has been formed lign-ite, coal retaining the texture of wood, where the suffix -ite is Gk.

LIGULE, a strap-shaped petal. (L.) A mod. botanical term; also applied to the flat part of the leaf of a grass. = L. ligula, a little tongue, a tongue-shaped extremity; by-form of lingula. Dimin. of lingua, a tongue; see LINGUAL. But Brugmann (i. § 604) derives ligula immediately from lig-, base of ling-are, to lick. See LICK.

FIGURE, a precious stone. (L.—Gk.) In the Bible, A. V., Ex. xxviii, 19, xxxix, 12. 'Our translators have followed the Septuagint lyguron and Vulgate ligurinus in translating the Heb. leshem by figure, which is a precious stone unknown in modern mineralogy; Bible Word-book, by Eastwood and Wright. = L. ligurius. = Gk. lyguron, also spelt lyguron, lyguron, lyguron, a sort of gem; acc. to some, a reddish amber, acc. to others, the hyacinth (Liddell).

LIKE (1), similar, resembling. (E.) ME. lyk, lik; Chaucer, C. T. 414, 1973 (A 412, 1971). AS. lic, in comp. ge-lic, like, in which form it is common; Grein, i. 422. The prefix ge- was long retained in the weakened form i- or y-; Chaucer has glyche as an adv., C. T. 2528 (A 2526). + Du. ge-lyk, like; where ge- is a prefix; Icel. likr, glíkr, like; where ge- = ge-, prefix; Dan. lig; Swed. lik; Goth. ga-likes, Mark, vii. 8; G. gleich, MHG. ge-lich, OHG. ka-lik. β All signifying 'resembling in form,' and derived from the Teut. sb. likom*, a form, shape, appearing in AS. lic, a form, body (whence lidon-gate). OSax. lik, Icel. lik, Goth. leik, the body, &c. Cf. Lith. lygas, like; Skt. linga(m), a mark, sign; W. cyffwr-lyb, like, similar; Stokes-Pick, p. 251. Der. like-ly, ME. lykly, Chaucer, C. T. 1174 (A 1172); like-li-hood, ME. liklihood, id. 13526 (B 1786); like-li-ness, ME. likliness, id. 8272 (P 396); like-ness, ME. liknes, P. Plowman, B. i. 113, formerly i-licnes, Ancrén Riwe, p. 230, from AS. ge-licnes; like-wise, short for in like wise (see WISE, sb.); like (2), q. v.; like, sb.; like-en, q. v. γ All adjectives ending in -ly have adopted this ending from AS. -lic, lit. 'like'; all adverbs in -ly take this suffix from AS. -lice, the same word with the adverbial final -e added. The word like-ly = like-like, a reduplication.

LIKE (2), to approve, be pleased with. (E.) The mod. sense is evolved by an alteration in the construction. The ME. verb lyken (or liken) signified 'to please,' and was used impersonally. We have, in fact, changed the phrase it likes me into I like, and so on throughout. Both senses are in Shak.; see Temp. iii. 1. 43, Hamlet, v. 2. 276. Chaucer has only the intrans. verb. 'And if you lyketh' = and if it please you; C. T. 779 (A 777); still preserved in the mod. phrase 'if you like.' 'That gliche lyken you' = that ought to please you; id. 13866 (B 2128). AS. lician, to please, rarely lician; Grein, ii. 182. The lit. sense is to be like or suitable for. = AS. lic, ge-lic, like; see LIKE (1). + Du. lijken, to be like, resemble, seem, suit; from ge-lyk, like; Icel. likr, to like; from likr, like; Goth. leikan, ge-leikan, to please; from ga-likes, like; MHG. lichen, ge-lichen, to be like; from ge-lich, like (G. gleich). Der. lik-ing, ME. lykyng, P. Plowman, B. xi. 20, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 271. Also well-liking = well-pleasing, Ps. xciii. 13, Prayer-book.

LIKEN, to consider as similar, to compare. (E. or Scand.) ME. liknen. 'The water is likened to the world'; P. Plowman, B. viii. 39, A. ix. 34. 'And lykenes hit to heven lynde' = and likens it to the light of heaven; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 500. But the orig. sense was perhaps intransitive, as in the case of Goth. verbs in -nan, and several Swed. verbs in -na; and the peculiar use and form of the word seem to be Scand. It is intrans. in Allit. Poems, B. 1064. = Swed. likna, (1) to resemble, (2) to liken; from lik, like; Dan. ligne, (1) to resemble, (2) to liken; from lig, like. See LIKE (1).

LILAC, a flowering shrub. (F. = Span. = Arab. = Pers.) 'The lilacine tree'; Bacon, Essay 46. Spelt lilac in Kersey, ed. 1715. = ME. lilac, Cot.; now spelt lilac. = Span. lilac, lila, a lilac. Of Oriental origin. = Arab. lilak, lilak (Devic). Derived from the Pers. lilaj, lilanj, or lilang, of which the proper sense is the indigo-plant; Rich. Pers. Diet. p. 1282. Here the initial l stands for n, and the above forms are connected with Pers. nīl, the indigo-plant; whence nīlak (dimin. form, whence Arab. lilak), bluish; Rich. Diet. pp. 1610, 1620. Cf. Skt. nīla-a, dark-blue, nīli, the indigo-plant. Named from the bluish tinge on the flowers in some varieties (Devic).

LILLIPUTIAN, diminutive, very small. (F.) 'The stairs are of lilliputian measurement'; Dickens, American Notes (1850), p. 33. Formed with suffix -ian, from Lilliput, the name of an imaginary country in Gulliver's Travels, inhabited by pygmies six inches high. Coined by Swift (1726).

LILT, to sing cheerfully. (Scand.) Cf. ME. lilling-horn, Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, 1223. The pp. lilted occurs in Early E. Allit. Poems, A. 1207. Connected with Norw. lilla, to sing in a high tone; OSwed. lylla, to lull to sleep (Rietz, s. v. lulla); Swed. lulla, Dan. lulle, to hum, to lull. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 163.

LILY, a bulbous plant. (L.—Gk.) ME. lilie; Chaucer, C. T. 15555 (G 87). AS. lilie, pl. lilian; Matt. vi. 28; Elfric's Gloss, Norman Herbarium. = L. lilium; Matt. vi. 28. Gk. leilyon, a lily; the change of Gk. ρ to l being in accordance with usual laws.

¶ The more usual Gk. name is σπινος, as in Matt. vi. 28. Der. lilt-ac-e-sous = L. lilicæus.

LIMB (1), a member of the body, branch of a tree. (E.) ME. lim, pl. limes; Chaucer, C. T. 4881 (B 461). AS. lim, pl. leomu; Grein, ii. 188; Icel. limr; Dan. and Swed. lem. Teut. types li-mom*, n.; li-moz*, m.; allied to AS. li-β, Goth. li-thus, a limb. See LAY figure. Cf. Lith. lėmb, trunk, stature.

LIMB (2), the edge or border of a sextant, &c. (L.) 'Limb, in mathematics, the outermost border of an astrolabe; . . . in astronomy, the utmost border of the disk or body of the sun or moon, when either is in eclipse'; Kersey, ed. 1715. Kersey also gives the form limbus. = L. limbus, a border, edging, edge. Cotgrave gives MF. limbe de bouteille, 'the mouth or brink of a bottle.' Doublet, limbo.

LIMBECK, the same as Alembo, q. v. Palsgrave has: 'Lem-byke for a stylatorie, lembic;' where lembic is a F. form.

LIMBER (1), flexible, pliant. (E.) Not found very early. 'With limber vows'; Wint. Tale, i. 2. 47. Richardson quotes an earlier and better example. 'Ne yet the bargeman, that doth rowe With long and limber oare'; Turberville, A Myrrour of the Fall of Pride. Cooper's Thesaurus has: 'Leutus, soft, pliant, limber' (1565). Perhaps allied to limp, flexible, pliant; or to prov. E. limnock, flexible, pliant. The suffix -er is adjectival, as in bitt-er, fu-er (= AS. fæg-er), &c.; see Mätzner, Engl. Gramm. i. 435. See LIMP (1).

LIMBER (2), part of a gun-carriage consisting of two wheels and a shaft to which horses are attached. (F.) Taken up from prov. E. 'Limbers, thills or shafts (Berkshire); Limmers, a pair of shafts (North)'; Grose's Prov. Eng. Glossary, ed. 1790; and see E. D. D. It appears that b is excrement, and the form limmers is the older one. β Further, limmer was formerly spelt limour (in 1480), and limmour, as in: 'The cartis stand with limmouris'; Douglas, tr. of Virgil, bk. ix. ch. 6, l. 23. In Douglas, Palice of Honour, st. 33, the form used is limmouris, pl. of limmour, for limmer. The spelling limours seems to be an F. variant of F. limons, pl. of limon, (the thill of a waine), which was mostly used in the pl.; Cot. Similarly, limmer may well represent F. limonier, as in 'Cheval limonier, a thill-horse.' Cot.

LIMBO, LIMBUS, the borders of hell. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, v. 3. 261. The orig. phrase was in limbo patrum, Errors, iv. 2. 32; or more fully, in limbo patrum, l. viii. v. 1. 67. = L. limbus (governed by the prep. in), abl. case of limbus, a border; see LIMB (2). 'The limbus patrum, in the language of churchmen, was the place bordering on hell, where the saints of the Old Testament remained till Christ's descent into hell'; Schmidt. The Ital. word is also limbo, derived (not from the ablative, but) from the acc. limbus of the same L. word. Cf. P. Plowman, B. xvi. 84. Doublet, limb (2).

LIME (1), viscous substance, bird-lime, mortar, alloy of calcium. (E.) The orig. sense is 'viscous substance.' ME. lym, liim, lyme, 'Lyme, to take with byrds' [to catch birds with], viscous; Lyne, or mortar, Calx; Prompt. Parv. p. 305. And see Chaucer, C. T. 16274 (G 866). AS. lim, bitumen, cement; Grein, ii. 188. + Du. lijm, glue, lime; Icel. lim, glue, lime, chalk; Dan. lim, glue; Swed. lim, glue; G. leim, glue; MHG. lim, bird-lime, + L. linus, mud, slime. β Teut. type limaz*, ldg. type leimos*, from LEI-*; of which the weak grade (li) appears in li-nere, to smear, daub; cf. Russ. lite, to pour, flow; cf. Skt. li, to melt, to adhere; allied to Skt. ri, to distil. See LOAM (which is allied). Der. lime, verb, Ancrén Riwe, p. 226, Hamlet, iii. 3. 68; lim-y; lime-kiln, Merry Wives, iii. 3. 86; lime-wood; lime-twigg, Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 180. Lime-rod, spelt lynarod, Chaucer, C. T. 14604 (B 3574).

LIME (2), the linden-tree. (E.) In Pope, Autumn, 25. A corruption of the earlier spelling line, or Linden-tree, or Lime-tree; Kersey, ed. 1715. 'In the lime-grove' (modern ed. lime-grove); Shak. Temp. v. 10. The change from line to lime does not seem to be older than about A. D. 1625. The form lime is in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731; Bacon has 'the lime-tree'; Essay 46. β Again, lime is a corruption of lind, the older name, by loss of final d. See LINDEN. Der. lime-tree.

LIME (3), a kind of citron. (F. = Span. = Arab. or Pers. = Malay.) First in 1638. 'Lime, a sort of small lemon'; Phillips, ed. 1706. = F. lime, a lime; Hamilton = Span. lima = Arab. limak (below); Pers. limē, a lemon, citron; Rich. Diet. p. 1282. = Malay limau, Javanese limo, a generic name for a lime or citron. And see LEMON. Dozy gives Arab. limak, a lime; see Devic.

LIME-HOUND, a dog led by a cord; a dog used for hunting the wild boar. (F.—L.; and E.) Lime-hound is short for liant-hound, a hound held by a liant or leash. 'The string wherewith wee leade a Grey hounde is called a lease, and for a hounde a hame.' Turberville, Booke of Hunting, ed. 1575, p. 240. See Croft's Gloss. to Sir T. Elyot's The Governour. Spenser has lime-hound; F. Q. v. 2. 25. = OF. liem; F. lien; see Littré, s. v. lien; and cf. Norm.

dial. lian, a tie, a cord. = L. ligamen, a fastening; see Lien. And see Hound. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 164.

LIMIT, to assign a boundary; a boundary. (F.-L.) The verb is in older (general) use in E. than the sb. limit, though really the derived word. MF. limiten, to limit. 'To limit us or assign us'; Chaucer, Tale of Melibee, Six-text, B 2956. [Hence the sb. limit-or, Chaucer, C. T. 209.] = F. limiter, 'to limit'; Cot. = F. limite, a limit; id. = L. limitem, acc. of limes, a boundary; akin to L. limen, a threshold. Prob. allied to L. limus, transverse (Bréal). Der. limit-ed, limit-ed-ly, limit-ed-ness, limit-less, limit-able; also limit-at-ion = F. limitation, 'a limitation' (Cot.), from L. acc. limitatiōnem.

LIMN, to illuminate, paint. (F.-L.) MF. limnen, a contracted form of luminen. 'Lymnyd, or lymnyd, as bookys'; Prompt. Parv. p. 317. 'Lymnoore, luminour, Alluminator, illuminator'; id. β. Again, luminen is short for enluminen, by loss of the prefix. Chaucer has enluminen = enlightened; C. T. 7909 (F. 33). = MF. enluminen, 'to illuminate, enlighten'; . . . also to sleek, burnish; also to limn; Cot. = Late L. infumigare; for L. illuminare, to enlighten; see ILLUMINATE. Der. limn-er = MF. luminor, as above, short for enluminor; 'Enluminer de livres, a burnisher of bookes, an illuminer'; Cot.

LIMP (1), flaccid, flexible, pliant, weak. (E.) 'Limp, limber, supple'; Kersey, ed. 1715. Scarce in books, but known to our E. dialects, and doubtless an old E. word. β. Allied words are perhaps 'Swiss lampig, lampelig, faded, loose, flabby, hanging,' and similar words, cited in Wedgwood. Also Bavarian lampfacht, flaccid, lampende Ohren, hanging ears (answering to E. lop-ears, as in 'a lop-eared rabbit'); limp, limp, a rag, a hanging shred; from the verb lampen, to hang loosely down; Schmeller, Nav. Dict. 1474. Cf. Skt. lanba, depending, lanbana, falling; from the verb lab, to fall, hang downwards. Der. limp-ness; cf. limber (1).

LIMP (2), to walk lamely. (E.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. iii. 2. 130; and in Levins (1570). Palsgrave has: 'limpe-hault, boiteux.' Not easily traced earlier, and the orig. form is uncertain. Allied to AS. limp-hælt, limp-halting, halting, lame, of which the earliest form is laempi-halt, Epinal Gloss., 589; cf. laemp-halt, Corpus Gloss., 1250. Allied also to MDan. limpe, to limp (Kalkar); MIIG. limphin, to limp. Possibly connected with LIMP (1), rather than (as some think) with LAME. ¶ We also find Low G. luppen, to limp (Bremen Wörterbuch); which seems to be connected with limp by gradation. So also Dan. dial. lumps, to limp; lumpen, lame.

LIMPET, a small shell-fish, which cleaves to rocks. (L.) Cotgrave explains OF. berdin by 'the shellfish called a limpette or a limpet.' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxii. c. 9, translates L. mituli by 'limpines.' ME. tempet, Durham Acc. Rolls (Surtess Soc.), p. 10 (1313). AS. tempedu, (properly) a lamprey. = Late L. temprida, for lampreda, late form of lampetra, a lamprey; see LAMPREY, of which limpet is a doublet. We find in Wülker's Gloss., 438, 17: 'temprida, tempedu;' where tempedu is the AS. form. See Notes on F. Etym., p. 164.

LIMPID, pure, clear, shining. (F.-L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Most pure and limpid juice'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. ii. c. 1. § 16. = F. limpide, 'clear, bright'; Cot. = L. limpidus, limpid, clear. Allied to L. lymphia, pure water; see LYMPH. Brugmann, i. § 102. Der. limpid-ly, limpid-ness.

LINCH-PIN, a pin to fasten the wheel on to the axle. (E.) Formerly also spelt linx-pin; see Kersey, ed. 1715; Coles, ed. 1684; Skinner, ed. 1671. [Linck appears to be a corrupted form, obviously by confusion with link.] The pl. linches in Will. of Shoreham's Poems, p. 109, means 'linch-pins.' AS. lysis, an axle-tree; Epinal Gloss., 8. = Du. luns, a linch-pin; whence lunzen, to put the linch-pin to a wheel; Low G. lunse, a linch-pin; Bremen Wörterbuch; G. lünse, a linch-pin. β. Cf. also OIG. lun, a linch-pin.

LIND, LINDEN, the lime-tree. (E.) Here (as in the case of asp-en) the true sb. is lind, whence lind-en was formed as an adjective, with the suffix -en as in gold-en, birch-en, beech-en. The true name is lind, or, in longer phrase, linden tree. Lind was in time corrupted to line, and later to lime; see LIME (2). ME. lind, ling; Chaucer, C. T. 2924 (A 2922). AS. lind, Grein, ii. 128. 'Seno vel tilia, lind'; Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Arborum. Hence the adj. linden (Grein, ii. 189), as in linden bord = the linden shield, shield made of lind. = Du. linde, linde-boom; Icel. lind; Dan. lind, lind-træ; Swed. lind; G. lunde, OIG. linta. Teut. type lëndā*; Idg. base lenda*; and the weak grade appears in Gk. λάρν, silver fir. Cf. Lith. lenta, a board.

LINÉ, a thread, thin cord, stroke, row, rank, verse. (L.; or F.-L.) In all senses, the word is of L. origin; the only difference is that, in some senses, the word was borrowed from L. directly, in other senses through the French. We may take them separately, as follows. 1. Line = a thin cord or rope, a thread, rope of a ship. ME. lyne; P. Ploverman, B. v. 355. AS. line, a cord; Grein, ii. 189. = L. linea, a string of hemp or flax, hempen cord; properly the fem. of adj. lineus, made of hemp or flax. = L. linum, flax. Prob. rather cognate with than borrowed from Gk. λινον, flax. [The G. lein, &c. are probably borrowed from Latin.] 2. Line = a verse, rank, row; Chaucer, C. T. 1553 (A 1551); P. Ploverman, B. vii. 110. = F. ligne, a line. = L. linea, a line, stroke, mark, line of descent; the same word as above. Der. line, verb, in various senses; to line garments is properly to put linen inside them (see LINEN); also lin-ing, lined, q.v., linear, q.v., linenge, q.v., lineament, q.v. And see linnet, linseed, linsey-woolsey, lint, de-linéal, a-line.

LINEAGE, race, family, descent. (F.-L.) ME. linage (without the medial e), Chaucer, C. T. 1552 (A 1550); Romance of Partenay, 5033; linage, Gower, C. A. i. 344; bk. iii. 1944. = F. lignage, 'a lineage'; Cot. [Here F. ne = F. gn.] Made with suffix -age (= L. -aticum) from F. lignur, a line. = L. linea, a line; see LINO.

LINEAL, belonging to a line. (L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 11. 12. = Lineally and in the genology; β. lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 17. = L. linealis, belonging to a line. = L. linea, a line; see LINO. Der. lineal-ly. Doublet, linear.

LINEAMENT, a feature. (F.-L.) 'In the liniamentes and favor of his visage'; Sir T. More, Works, p. 61 b. = MF. lineament, 'a lineament or feature'; Cot. = L. lineamentum, a drawing, delineation, feature. = L. lineare, to draw a line; with suffix -mentum. = L. linea, a line; see LINO.

LINEAR, consisting of lines. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. = L. linearis, belonging to a line. = L. linea; see LINO. Doublet, lineal, which is an older word. Der. linear-ly.

LINEN, cloth made of flax. (L.) Used as a sb., but really an adj., with adj. suffix -en as in wool-en, gold-en; the orig. sb. was lin, preserved in lin-seed. ME. lin, sb. linen, adj. The sb. is rare. 'The bondes . . . That were of ful strong lin' = the bonds that were of very strong flax; Havelock, 539. The adj. is common. 'Clothid with lynnun cloth . . . he lefte the lynnun clothing'; Wyclif, Mark, xiv. 51, 52. It was also used as a sb., as now. 'In lynnun yelothed' = clothed in linen; P. Ploverman, B. i. 3. = AS. līn, flax, linen; in comp. lin-wōrd, a linen garment; John, xiii. 6. Thence was formed the adj. linen, as in linen kragel = a linen cloth, John, xiii. 4. = L. linum, flax; cognate with Gk. λινον, flax. See LINO. And see linseed, linnet.

LING (1), a kind of fish. (E.) 'Lyng, sysshe'; Palsgrave. Spelt teenge in Prompt. Parv. p. 296; and see Way's note. Spelt teenge, Havelock, i. 832. Not found in AS., but answering to *Teut. lang-jung = L. long, long; i.e. 'the long one'. EFries. leng, leng-fisk. Halliwell. (Not AS.) = Icel. lyng, ling, heather; Dan. lyng; Swed. lyng, ling, heather; Swed. dial. ling (Kietz). Teut. type lingwo*; cf. Swed. lingon, the whortleberry.

LINGER, to loiter, tarry, hesitate. (E.) 'Of lingring doutes such hope is sprong, pardie'; Surrey, Itomus ed. mihl. i. 10; in Tottell's Miscellany, ed. Arber, p. 31. Formed by adding the infrequentative suffix -er or -r to the ME. lengen, to tarry; with further thinning of e to i before ng. This ME. verb is by no means rare. 'I may no longer leng' = I may no longer linger; P. Ploverman, B. i. 207. Cf. Will. of Palerne, 5421; Havelock, 1734. = AS. langan, to prolong, put off; Grein, i. 168; formed by the usual vowel change (of a to e) from AS. lang, long; see LONG. LINGUAL, pertaining to the tongue. (L.) A late word (with few exceptions); not in Todd's Johnson. Coined, as if from an adj. linguilis, from L. lingua, the tongue, of which the OL. form was dingua (see Lewis's Dict.); cognate with F. Tongue, q.v. Der. (from L. lingua) linguist, q.v., language, q.v.

LINK (1), a ring of a chain, joint. (Scand.) In Shak. Cor. i. 1. 73. Cf. 'Truth [truth] and mercy linked in a chain'; Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. ii. (How truth is preferred). = Olcel. hlenkr*, Icel. hlekkr (by assimilation); Dan. lænke; Swed. länk + AS. hlence (which would have given linch); as in the comp. sb. walkhlence, a slaughter-link, i.e. linked coat of mail, Grein, ii. 546. Teut. type Mankjoz*, m.; cf. also G. gelenk, a joint, link, ring; G. tenken, to turn, bend. Der. link, verb.

LINK (2), a torch. (Scand.) 'A link or torch.' Minshew's Dict., ed. 1627. 'Links and torches'; Shak. 1 Hen. IV, iii. 3. 48. 'I ynke, torches'; Palsgrave. Of obscure origin; but it is proper, the same as the word above, in the sense of 'length of rope'; cf. 'a link of sausages.' Such seems to be the sense in Shak. 2 Hen. IV, v. 1. 23: 'Now, sir, a new link to the bucket must needs be had.' Links for torches were made of handy lengths of rope.

LINN, a pool; also a cascade, torrent. (C.) Two words have been confounded: (1) AS. llyn, a torrent; Rushworth Gospels, John, xviii. 1; and (2) Gael. linne, Irish linn, W. llyn, a pool. See Notes on E. llym, p. 165.

LINNET, a small singing-bird. (F.-L.) ME. lynet, Court of Love, l. 1412. = OF. linette (Godefroy); F. linette, 'a linnet'; Cot. [So called from feeding on the seed of flax and hemp, as is clearly shown by similar names in other languages, e.g. G. hänfling, a linnet, from hanf, hemp, G. lein-flanke, a linnet (cited by Wedgwood), lit. a lin-finch, flax-finch.] = F. lin, flax. = L. linum, flax; see Linen, Line. ¶ The E. name is linnet, Scotch linnet; see Complaint of Scotland, ed. Murray, p. 39, l. 24. From AS. linetwige, a linnet; Ælfric's Gloss, Nomina Avium. This name is also (probably) from L. linum, flax. So also W. llynos, a linnet; from llyn, flax.

LINSEED, flax-seed. (Hybrid; L. and E.) ME. lin-seed; spelt lynn-seed in P. Plowman, C. xiii. 190; linseed (to translate OF. lynos) in Walter de Bibbesworth; Wright's Vocab. l. 156. From ME. lin = AS. lin, flax, borrowed from L. linum, flax; and E. seed. See Line, Linen, and Seed. Der. linseed-oil, linseed-cake.

LINSEY-WOOLSEY, made of linen and wool mixed. (Hybrid; L. and E.) Lysey-woleyse, linisterna, vel linostema; Cathol. Anglicum (1483). Used facetiously in Shak. All's Well, iv. 1. 13; Minshew (ed. 1627) has 'linise-woolse', i.e. of linen and woollen'. As if from ME. lin, linen; and E. wool, with -sey or -sye as a suffix twice over; see Linen and Wool. β. But linsey may represent Lindsey, near Kersey (Suffolk); see Kersey. In fact, Lindsey was formerly Lysey, Lysley, Laseley; Skelton has the form Lyse wolse; see further in the Supplement.

LINSTOCK, LINTSTOCK, a stick to hold a lighted match. (Du.) In Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 188; spelt linstock in Marlowe, Jew of Malta, v. 4. 4. 'Linstock, a carved stick (about half a yard) with a cock at one end to hold the gunner's match, and a sharp pike at the other, to stick it anywhere'; Coles' Dict., ed. 1684. Du. lontstok, 'a lint-stock'; Sewel. Du. lont, a match; and stok, a stick, for which see Stook + Dan. lunt-stok, a lint-stock; from lunte, a match, and stok, a stick; Swed. lunt-stake, from lunta, a match, an old bad book (fit to be burnt), and stake, a stick, candlestick. β. The derivation of Du. lont, Swed. lunt, is uncertain; but it would appear from Kilian that Du. lont, a rag, tatter, MDu. lontje, was also used in the same sense as lont, MDu. lontje. Perhaps lont arose from lontje; cf. M.Du. lontje, a match, rag, with MDu. lontje, a rag, tatter; and Swed. lunta, a match, with Swed. lumpor, rag (only used in the plural). See Three, s.v. lunta; and see Lump.

LINT, scraped linen. (F.-L.; or L.) 'Lyni, schayunge of lynen clothe, Carpas.' Prompt. Parv. p. 306. Spelt lynnet in Lanfranc, Chirurgie, p. 83; but lyn (flax) in Barbour, Bruce, bk. xvii. 612. Either from F. lin, flax, with F. suffix -et or -ette (cf. OF. linette, linned, in Godefroy); or perhaps borrowed directly from L. linteum, a linen cloth. = L. linteus, made of linen. = L. linum, flax. See Line, Linen. ¶ And see Du. lint in Franck.

LINTEL, the head-piece of a door or casement. (F.-L.) ME. lintel, lyntel; Wyclif, Exod. xii. 22. = OF. linel (see Littre), later F. linteau, 'the lintel, or head-piece, over a door'; Cot. = Late L. linellus, a lintel; which (as Diez suggests) stands for limitellus*, dimin. of L. limes (stem limit-), a boundary, hence a border; see Limit. Prob. confused with limen, a threshold. ¶ A similar contraction is found in Span. linde, from L. acc. limitem, a boundary.

LION, a large and fierce beast of prey. (F.-L. - Gk. - Egypt.)

In early use. In Layamon, 1463, we find leon in the earlier text, lion in the later. A still earlier form was leo, but this was borrowed from the Latin directly; see Leo. = OF. leon, lion. = L. lōnēs, acc. of leo, a lion. = Gk. λέων, a lion. Also Gk. Λαίωρα, for Λαίωρα*, a lioness; from Egypt. labai, lavai, a lioness; which was also the name of the hieroglyphic for L. Cf. Heb. lābi, a lion; also of Egypt. origin. See Notes on E. lrym, p. 165. We also find G. lōw, OHG. leo, lewo; Russ. lev; Lithuanian lėvas, lavas; Du. leuw; &c. Der. lion-ess, As You Like It, iv. 3. 115, from F. lionness; lion-hearted; also lion-ise, orig. to show strangers the lions which used to be kept in the Tower of London. See Capt. Smith, Works, ed. Arber; p. 872.

LIP, the muscular part forming each of the upper and lower edges of the mouth. (E.) ME. lippe, Chaucer, C. T. 128, 133. AS. lippa. 'Labium, upperward lippa' = upper lip; Ælfric's Gloss, in Voc. 157. 22. 'Labrum, nūbera lippe' = nether lip; id. + Du. lip; Dan. læbe; Swed. läpp; G. lippe, lippe; OHG. lefs, leffur. Further allied to L. lab-rum, lab-ium, the lip; Pers. lab, the lip, Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 511. See Brugmann, i. § 563. Perhaps allied to lambere, to lick (Bréal). The AS. lippa represents a Teut. type lep-jou*, m. Der. lip-ud; from the same root are lab-ial, lab-iate, lab-ent.

LIQUEFY, to make liquid. (F.-L.) Also 'to become liquid,' but this is a later sense. 'The disposition not to liquefy' = to become liquid; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 840. = MF. liquefier; but only found in Cot. as a pp.; he gives 'liquefié', dissolved, melted, made liquid.' β. The E. liquefy is formed by analogy with other words in -fy, which answers to F. -fier = L. facere, used in place of facere, to make. But in the intrins. sense the word corresponds to L. liquefieri, to become liquid, used as pass. of liquefacere, to make liquid. = L. lique, from liquere, to be fluid; and facere, to make. See Liquid and Fact. Der. liquefaction, Minshew, ed. 1627; allied to liquefactus, pp. of liquefacere.

LIQUESCENT, melting. (L.) Modern; in Todd's Johnson; and in Bailey, vol. ii. = L. liquescent, stem of pres. pt. of liquecere, to become liquid; inceptive form of liquere, to be liquid. See Liquid. Der. liquescent-y, de-liqueficient.

LIQUEUR, a cordial. (F.-L.) In Pope; Dunciad, iv. 317. A modern F. form of the older term LIQUOR, q.v.

LIQUID, fluid, moist, soft, clear. (F.-L.) 'The playne [flat] and liquide water.' Tyndal, Works, p. 265, col. 2. = F. liquide, 'liquid, moist, wet'; Cot. = L. liquidus, liquid, moist. = L. liquere, to be liquid or moist or clear. See Bréal. Der. liquid, sb., liquid-ity, liquid-ness; also liquid-ate, q.v.; liquor, q.v., liquefy, q.v.

LIQUIDATE, to make clear, clear or pay off an account. (L.) Bailey has liquidated, vol. ii. ed. 1727. 'Liquidate, to make moist or clear.' Blount, Gloss, 1681. = Late L. liquidatus, pp. of liquidare, to clarify, make clear. = L. liquidus, liquid, clear; see Liquid. Der. liquid-ation = F. liquidation; liquidat-or.

LIQUOR, anything liquid, moisture, strong drink. (F.-L.) The word is really F., but has been accommodated to the orig. L. spelling; yet we retain somewhat of the F. pronunciation, the qu being sounded as q (k). ME. licour, Chaucer, C. T. l. 3; spelt licur, Ancien Riwle, p. 164, l. 13. = AF. licur, Tristan, l. 136; F. liqueur, 'liquor, humor'; Cot. = L. liquor, acc. of liquor, moisture. = L. liquere, to be liquid; see Liquid. Doublet, liqueur.

LIQUORICE, the same as LIQORICE, q.v.

LIRA, an Italian silver coin. (Ital. - L.) First in 1617. = Ital. lira. = L. libra, a pound. Doublet, litra.

LISP, to pronounce imperfectly, utter feebly, in speaking. (E.) ME. lippen, lippen; Chaucer, C. T. 266 (Six-text, 264, where MSS. have lippen for lippen). AS. ulipian*, to lip; in u-ulipian, in Napier's Additions. = AS. ulipian, imperfect in utterance, lipping. Voc. 8. 29; also spelt ulip; Voc. 92. 11. + Du. lippen, to lip; Dan. læppe, to lip; Swed. läppa; G. lipsteln, to lip, whisper. β. An imitative word, similar to Whisper, q.v. Der. lip, sb.; lip-ing, ly.

LISSOM, pliant, agile. (E.) A contr. form of lithesome; from E. lithe, with suffix -some. See Lithe.

LIST (1), a stripe, or border of cloth, selvage. (E.) ME. list, list. 'With a brude liste' = with a broad strip of cloth; P. Plowman, B. v. 524. AS. liste = 'Lembus, list'; Corp. Gloss, 1228. Teut. type list-jon*, f. + Du. lijst, list, a border; G. leiste, list, border; OHG. list, whence Ital. lista, F. liste, Der. list (2).

LIST (2), a catalogue. (F.-G.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. i. 98, i. 2. 32. = F. liste, 'a list, roll, catalogue; also, a list, or selvage'; Cot. The older sense is the latter, viz. border; hence it came to mean a strip, roll, list of names. = OHG. list, G. leiste, a border; cognate with AS. liste, whence list, a border. See List (1).

¶ Thus list (1) and list (2) are the same word, but the latter is used in the F. sense. Der. list, verb, en-list.

LIST (3), gen. used in the pl. lists, q.v.

LIST (4), to choose, to desire, have pleasure in. (E.) In Shak.

1 Hen. VI, i. 5. 22. Often used as an impers. verb in older authors. ME. listen, lusten; 'if thee lust' or 'if thee list'—if it pleases thee; Chaucer, C. T. 1185; cf. l. 1054 (A 1183, 1052). AS. lystan, to desire, use impersonally; Grein, i. 200. Formed (by regular vowel-change from a to y) from AS. lust, pleasure; see LUST. 4 Du. lusten, to like; Icel. lusta, to desire; Dan. lyste; Swed. lysta; Goth. lustōn; G. gälisten. Teut. type lustjan-; from lustuz, sb. Der. list, sb., Oth. i. 1. 108. And see list-less.

LIST (5), an inclination (of a ship) to one side. (E.) A variant of lust, desire, inclination, which was formerly used in the same sense. 'The ship at low water had a great list to the offing'; T. James, Voy. (1633), p. 82 (N. E. D.). 'Lust of a ship'; Phillips (1658); prov. E. lust (E. D. D.). Cf. Dan. lyst, inclination. See LIST (4).

LIST (6), to listen. (E.) In Hamlet, i. 5. 22. ME. listen, lusten. 'Listeth, lordes'; Chaucer, Sir Thopas, l. 1. 'And lust hu ich con be bitelle'; Owl and Night, 263. AS. lystan, Grein, ii. 90. = AS. lyst, hearing, the sense of hearing, id. Teut. type hustiz*, idg. type hustis*; cf. Icel. lust, the ear; Skt. gr̥stis, hearing, obedience (Uhlenbeck). All from KLEUS*, extended form of KLEU*, to hear, whence L. clue-ere, Gk. κλέειν, Skt. gr̥u, to hear. See Loud.

LISTEN, to hearken, give ear. (E.) In Shak. Macb. iv. 1. 89; ii. 2. 29. We also find list, as above. So we also find both ME. lusten or listen, and lusten or listen. 1. 'Or lysteneth to his reson', P. Mowman, R. xiv. 307; where the Trinity MS. has listneth, ed. Wright, l. 9534. Here list (eth) stands for the older listneth, the e being inserted for greater ease of pronunciation, and still retained in mod. E. spelling, though seldom sounded. We further find the pl. t. lustenede, Layamon, 26357; and the pp. listened, id. 25128. This form lus (nen) is derived from an AS. form hlysmann* (see below) by an insertion of t, due to confusion with the closely allied LIST (5). AS. hlysmann, used in the same sense. The AS. hlysmann* is inferred from O. North. lyssa (for hlysmann*) in Matt. xiii. 18; cf. AS. hlysmann, to listen (Bosworth). Here lyssa represents a Teut. type hlysmann-*, and hlysmann represents a Teut. type hlysmann-, both from Teut. hly-, weak grade of hlew*, to hear; KLEUS* (above). Cf. Swed. lyssna, to listen; Fries. lystern, Westphal. lystern.

LISTLESS, careless, uninterested. (E.) The lit. sense is 'devoid of desire.' Not immediately derived from the verb list (see LIST (4)), but put in place of the older form lustless. We find lustless in Prompt. Parv. p. 307; but lustless in Gower, C. A. ii. 111; bk. iv. 3262. Formed from lust with the suffix -less. See Lust and -less. Cf. Icel. lystlauss, having no appetite, from lyst = lust, lust. Der. list-lessly, list-lessness.

LISTS, the ground enclosed for a tournament. (F.) Scarcely used in the singular. Used to translate OF. lies in the Rom. of the Rose, 4199; and most affected by the influence of that work. ME. listes, pl. sb., the lists, Chaucer, C. T. 63, 864. Really the F. lie, a stripe, border, which took up the further sense of limit or boundary; as in Eng. Gilds (E. T. S.), p. 44: 'Any brother or sister that duellen wy[h]outen the lystys of thre myle from the cyte.' See therefore LIST (1). β. Note also OF. lisce, lice (mod. F. lice), 'a list or tillyard'; Cot. Cf. Ital. liccia, a barrier, palisade, list; Span. liza, a list for tilting; Port. lipa, lipada, list, enclosed ground in which combats are fought; whence Low Lat. licia, s. pl., barriers, palisades; licia drelli, the lists. Hatzfeldt thinks this OF. lice may be derived from a Romanic type listen*, formed from OIIG. lista (G. leiste), a border. If so, it is closely related to E. list (1); and this explains the way in which the two were so readily confused.

LITANY, a form of prayer. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. letanie, Ancien Riwle, p. 20, 1. 4; altered to letanie, litany, to bring it nearer to the L. spelling.—OF. letanie, a litany; so spelt in the 13th century (Littré); mod. F. letanie, L. litania. = Gk. λαρεία, a prayer.—Gk. λαρεύειν, to pray.—Gk. λαρεύς, a suppliant; from λαρύ, supplication, prayer, allied to λαρομαι, λαρομαι, I pray, beg, beseech.

Der. litteral-ly, -ness; also litter-ar-y, Englished from L. litterārius, belonging to learning; and see Literature.

Shorter forms appear in Icel. litur, soft, L. lénis, gentle, len-tus, pliant; see Lenient. Der. lithe-ness, lissom = lithe-some. And see lenity, lenish, re-lent.

LITHE, foul, pestilential, of the air. (E.) 'Two Talbotts winged through the lithe skie'; 1 Hen. VI, iv. 7. 21. Also explained as 'yielding,' owing to the influence of lithe, which is unconnected; but see 'luther air' in P. Mowman, C. xvi. 220. ME. lithe, luther; AS. lyðre, evil, poor, bad (hence, dull). See Stratmann and E. D. D. Cf. G. liederlich, vicious.

LITHOGRAPHY, writing on stone. (Gk.) Modern. Coined from Gk. λίθo, decl. stem of λίθος, a stone; and γραφειν, to write. Der. lithograph-er, lithograph-ic; lithograph. Also lith-a, lith-ion.

LITIGATION, a contest in law. (L.—) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ion, from Late L. litigatio, a disputing. = L. litigare, to dispute. = L. lit-, stem of lis, strife, law-suit; and -ig-, weakened form of ag-ere, to drive, conduct (see Agent). β. The L. lis was in OI. stis (Festus). Der. litig-ate, a late verb, really due to the sb.; litigant = L. litigant-, stem of pres. pt. of litigare; also litigious, q. v.

LITIGIOUS, contentious. (F.—L.—) In old authors it also means 'debatable' or 'doubtful'; see French Select Glossary. Litigious = precarious; Shak. Pericles, iii. 3. 3.—F. litigieux, 'litigious, debatefull'; Cot.—L. litigiosus, (1) contentious, (2) doubtful.—L. litigum, strife; cf. litigare, to dispute; see Litigation. Der. litigious-ly, litigiousness.

LITMUS, a kind of dye. (Du.) Spelt litmusus-lew in Phillips, ed. 1706. It appears in AF. as lytemoise, Liller Albus, p. 238. Put for lakmose; prob. by association with the old E. word lit, to dye.—Du. lakmoe, a blue dye-stuff (Sewel). = Du. lak, lac; and moe, pulp. Hence also G. lakmuss, litmus. See Lac.

LITTER (1), a portable bed. (F.—L.—) ME. litere, Cursor Mundi, 13817; Wyclif, Isa. lxxv. 20. Spelt lytier in Caxton, Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 61, l. 1.—AF. litier, Livere de Reçs, 86; (OF. litier (F. litière), 'a horse-litter'; Cot.—Late L. lectaria, a litter.—L. lectus, a bed. Cf. Gk. λίτρον, a bed, λέγος, a couch.—L. and Gk. base LEGH, to lie; see Lie (1). Allied to Letern.

LITTER (2), materials for a bed, a heap of straw for animals to lie on, a confused mass of objects scattered about; &c. (F.—L.) Really the same word as the above; with allusion to beds of straw for animals, and hence a confused heap. Thus Cotgrave has: 'Litiere, a horse-litter, also litter for cattell, also old dung or manure.' See Litter (1). β. Hence also litter in the sense of 'a brood'; see the various senses of lytere in Prompt. Parv.; and cf. F. accoucher, and E. 'to be in the straw.' And see Wright, Vocab. p. 156. Der. litter, verb, Temp. i. 2. 282.

LITTLE, small. (E.) ME. litel, lutel (with one l); Chaucer, C. T. 492 (A 490); Havelok, 481; Layamon, 9124. AS. lytel, lytel, Grein, ii. 201. 4-OSax. luttill; Du. luttel, little, few; MHG. lützel; OIIG. luzzil; Teut. type luttillōz*. β. All from a base LIEUT, to deceive, in connexion with which we also find AS. lytig, deceitful, Ælfric's Colloquy, in Voc. 101. 2; also AS. lot, deceit, Grein, i. 194; and the Goth. luth, deceitful, lutha, dissembler, luthin, to betray. γ. Further, the Teut. base LIEUT meant orig. to stoop, to bow down (hence to creep, or sneak); as in AS. lutan, to stoop, 'lout', incline to; see Lout. Der. little-ness. δ. It is remarkable that the Icel. littill, Swed. liten, Goth. luthils, little, are unrelated; being from a base leit*. The forms less, least, are from a different source. But see Loiter.

LITTORAL, belonging to the sea-shore. (L.—) Spelt littoral in Kersey; littoral in Blount, ed. 1674. Merc Latin.—L. littoralis, better littoralis, belonging to the sea-shore.—L. litior, for litos*, stem of litus, the sea-shore.

Der. liturgi-c, liturgi-cal, liturgi-ist.

LIVE (1), to continue in life, exist, dwell. (E.) ME. liuen, liuen

(with u for v); Chaucer, C. T. 508 (A 506); Havelok, 355. AS. līfan; Grein, ii. 185; also libban, id. 179; where bō stands for f. lī līu, leven; also used as sb., with sense of 'life'; Icel. lífa, to be left, to remain behind, also to live; Dan. leve; Swed. leva; Goth. liban; l. leben, to live (whence leben, sb. life); MHG. leben, lepen, to live (also spelt liban, lijan); allied to b-leiben, MHG. beiben, OHG. b-līban, to remain, be left. From Teut. stem līb-, weak grade of leib-, to remain. β. The sense of 'live' is unoriginal; the older sense is to remain, to be left behind. See further under LIFE. Der. live-er, live-ing; and see live (2).

LIVE (2), adj. alive, having life, active, burning. (F.) 'Upon the next live creature that it sees'; Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 172. The use of this adj. is really due to an attributive use of live, aphetic form of alive, which is not a true adj., but a phrase consisting of a prep. and a dat. case; see ALIVE. β. The use as an adj. arose the more easily owing to the currency of the words live-ly and live-ish. The former is still in use, but the latter is obsolete; it occurs as lijfisch in Gower, C. A. iii. 93; bk. vii. 257. Der. live-stock.

LIVELIHOOD, means of subsistence. (E.) A. Cotgrave translates F. patrimoine by 'patrimony, birthright, inheritance, livelihood.' And Dryden speaks of a man 'Of so fair livelihood, and so large rent'; The Owl. The metre shows that the word was then, as now, trisyllabic. β. But it is a singular corruption of the ME. livelode, livelode, i.e. life-leading, means of living; due to confusion with livelihood in the sense of 'liveliness,' as used (quite correctly) in Shak. Venus, 26; All's Well, i. 1. 58. γ. Again livelode is better spelt lifode, as in P. Plowman, B. prol. 30. Cf. lyfode, lyfode, lynelode, or warysome, Donatium; Prompt. Parv. p. 308; indeed, we find livelode as late as in Levens, ed. 1570. An older spelling is in St. Marharte, ed. Cockayne, p. 20, l. 16, where we find lifode, meaning 'way of life,' lit. leading of life. δ. Late AS. līfald, course of life; Rule of St. Bennet, ed. Schröer, c. 1; p. 13, l. 24. Compounded of AS. līf, life; and AS. lād, a leading, way, also provisions to live by, Grein, ii. 150. Another sense of AS. lād is a course, as preserved in mod. E. lade. See LIFE and LODE.

LIVELONG, long-lasting, long as it is. (F.) 'The livelong night'; Mach. ii. 3. 65. Orig. lif-long, i.e. 'dear long'; but altered to live-long at the end of the 16th cent., where live represents the verb to live, the l being short. Sometimes understood as live-long (with long l) as if connected with life. Really from LIFE and LONG. β. Cf. 'Alle the līfe longe daye'; Soudan of Babylon, l. 832; 'Al that live longe nyht'; H. Lovelich, The Holy Grail, c. xxix. l. 319.

LIVELY, vigorous, active. (E.) A corruption of līfely. 'Lively, līfely, or gwyk, or fulle of lyf, Vivax.' Prompt. Parv. p. 308. Chaucer uses līfely in the sense of 'in a life-like manner,' C. T. A. 2087. AS. līflic. Compounded of LIFE and LIKE. Der. live-ness, in Holingshead, Conquest of Ireland, c. 9 (R.). Cf. lively, adv., in a life-like manner, Two Gent. iv. 4. 174; Chaucer (as above).

LIVER, an organ of the body, secreting bile. (E.) ME. liver (with u for v); Chaucer, C. T. 7421 (D 1839). AS. lifer, Grein, ii. 184; Du. lewer; Icel. lifr; Dan. lever; Swed. lever; G. leber, MHG. lebere, OHG. lepara, lipara. Cf. Russ. liver, the pluck (of animals); (from Teut.). Teut. type lībrā*, f.; cognate with Armenian leard, liver; but not with l. icur. Brugmann, i. § 520, 557 (2). Der. live-coloured; also live-wort, Prompt. Parv. p. 309.

LIVERY, a thing delivered, as e.g. a uniform worn by servants; a delivery. (F.-L.) ME. liveré (with u for v, and trisyllabic); Chaucer, C. T. A. 263. = AF. livrée (Britton); F. livrée, 'a delivery of a thing that's given, the thing so given, hence, a livery'; Cot. Properly the fem. of the pp. of livrer, to deliver, give. Cf. Ital. livrare, to deliver. = Late L. lībrāre, to give, give freely; a particular use of L. lībrāre, to set free; see LIBERATE. Der. livey-man; livey-stable, a stable where horses are kept at livery, i.e. at a certain rate or on a certain allowance; livey-ed. The word is fully explained in Spenser, View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 623, col. 2. and Prompt. Parv. p. 308.

LIVID, black and blue, discoloured. (F.-L.) 'Purple or livid spots'; Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 12, l. 31. = F. livide (Cot.) = L. lividus, leaden-coloured, bluish. = L. livere, to be bluish. Cf. W. lliw, Irish L. colour, hue. Brugmann, i. § 94. Der. lividness.

LIZARD, a kind of four-footed reptile. (F.-L.) ME. lesarde, Prompt. Parv. p. 298; luard, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 335. = OF. lesard, m., lesarde, f.; 'a lizard'; Cot. = L. lacerta, a lizard; also lacertus. Root unknown. Cf. ALLIGATOR.

LLAMA, a Peruvian quadruped. (Peruvian.) See Prescott, Conquest of Peru, c. v. 'Llama, according to Garcilasso de la Vega, is a Peruvian word signifying stock; see Garcilasso, Com. Real. parte i. lib. viii. c. xvi.' note in Prescott. But the Peruv. Dict. gives 'llama, camero de la tierra,' i.e. sheep of the country. Cf. 'Llamas, or sheepe of Peru'; Hakluyt, Voy. iii. 735.

LLANO, a treeless plain in S. America. (Span.-L.) Usually in the pl. llanos; spelt lanos in F. G., tr. of Acosta, b. iii. c. 20. = Span. llano (pl. llanos), a plain. = Span. llano, plain, flat. = L. planus, flat. See PLAIN.

LO, interj. see, behold. (E.) ME. lo, Chaucer, C. T. 3019 (A 3017). AS. lū, lo! Grein, ii. 148. β. Lo is gen. considered as equivalent to look; and we actually find a ME. lo (with close o), prob. from lō, short for AS. lōc, look thou! But this would have become loo in modern E., and is obsolete; though it may have affected the sense of the surviving form. The AS. lū is a natural interjection, to call attention. Cf. Gk. δαῖν, a loud cry, δαῖνέω, to utter a war-cry, L. lū-trāre, to bark; &c.

LOACH, LOCHE, a small river-fish. (F.) ME. loche; Prompt. Parv. p. 310. Also loche-fish, Stat. of the Realm, l. 355 (1357). = F. loche, 'the loach'; Cot. Cf. Norm. dial. loque, a loach, a slug (Moisy); Ital. locca, loccia, 'a cob, or gudgeon-fish'; Florio. Of unknown origin.

LOAD, a quantity carried, a burden. (E.) Most probably this word has been extended in meaning by confusion with the unrelated verb to lade. Load is common in Shakespeare both as a sb. and verb, but in ME. it is a sb. only, and is identical with LODE, q.v., notwithstanding the difference in sense. The AS. lād means only way, course, journey; but ME. lade has also the sense of 'burden.' An early example of this is 'hōrs and lade,' Ancrer Riwe, p. 268; cf. also earde-lode, a cart-load, in Havelok, l. 895. It should be particularly noticed, however, that the derived verb to lade is constantly used in prov. E. in the sense 'to carry corn'; and, in the Prompt. Parv. p. 62, we find: 'Cartyn, or leide wythe a carte, Carraue.' Chaucer has ylad - carried, Prologue, 530. 'Se genent carre . . . lade ladan,' the tenant shall carry loads'; Bireb, Cart. Saxon, iii. 102. Hence load = ME. lode = AS. lād, a derivative from the 2d grade of the verb līhan, to go, travel. See LODE, LEAD (1). Der. load, vb.

LOAD-STAR, LOAD-STONE, the same as Lode-star, Lode-stone.

LOAF, a mass of bread; also of sugar. (E.) ME. lof, loof. 'A pese-lof' - a loaf made of peas; P. Plowman, B. vi. 181; pl. loones (-loves), Wyclif, Matt. iv. 3. AS. līof, a loaf; Grein, ii. 79. = Icel. leifr; Goth. līniz; G. laib, MHG. leip. Cf. also Lithuanian klėpas, Lettish klāpas, bread; Russ. khleb, bread; prob. borrowed from Teutonic. β. Perhaps named from its 'rising,' when leavened; cf. AS. līfian, to rise high, NFries. līf, a loaf; MSwed. lof (Ihre). Der. loaf-sugar; loafy, loafy, lammis.

LOAM, a mixed soil of clay, sand, &c. (E.) ME. lan, lat, lane; Cursor Mundi, 11985; where one MS. has ele (clay). AS. lām; Grein, ii. 153; Du. leem; G. lehm, OHG. leim. β. Teut. types laimon*, laimon*; from the base la-, and grade of li- (> li-*). Also in lim, lime, to which loam is closely allied. See LIME (1). Also akin to Icel. leir, loam (Teut. type lai-son*). Der. loam-y, ME. lumi, Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 47, l. 28.

LOAN, a lending, money lent. (Scand.) ME. lone, Chaucer, C. T. 7445 (D 1861); P. Plowman, B. xx. 284. This corresponds to an AS. lān, but we only find lān, Grein, ii. 163; Elfric's Homilies, ii. 176, last line. We once find lān-lād for lān-lād, Kemble, Cod. Dipl. iii. 165; from Norse. = Icel. lān, a loan; Dan. laan, a loan; Swed. lån. Cognate with AS. lēn, a loan (whence E. lend, q.v.); Du. leen; G. lehn. β. These words answer to Teut. types laihuan*, laihuan*, n.; from laihwa-*, and grade of the verb appearing in Goth. laihuan, to lend (Luke, vi. 34). AS. lān, for līhan, to lend, give (Grein, ii. 187). Icel. lji, to lend, G. leihen, OHG. līhan. γ. The Teut. base leikw* answers to Idg. leikw*, whence the L. linguare (pt. t. liqui-), to leave; which is closely related to Gk. leivō, Skt. rick, to leave; Oldish lec-in, I leave. ¶ Quite distinct from AS. lān, Icel. laan, G. lahn, a reward; see LUORE. Der. loan-d, q.v.

LOATH, disliking, reluctant, unwilling. (E.) ME. loth (opposed to loef, dear, willing), Chaucer, C. T. 1839 (A 1837); Havelok, 261. AS. lōð, hateful (very common), Grein, ii. 150. = Icel. lōðr, loathed, disliked; Dan. lød, loathsome; Swed. lød, odious; OHG. leit, odious; orig. mournful. β. All from a Teut. type laihōz*, mournful, in which -hōz is prob. a suffix. Allied to G. leiden, to suffer; but prob. not to AS. līhan, to travel (pt. t. līð), as usually said (Kluge). Der. loath-ly = AS. lōðlic, Grein, ii. 151; loathe, verb = AS. lōðian, Elfric's Hom. ii. 506, l. 24; loath-ing, sb., ME. lokyng, Prompt. Parv. p. 316; loath-some, ME. lothsum, Prompt. Parv. p. 314, spelt lathsum, Cursor Mundi, 23229 (Gott. MS.), where the suffix -some = AS. -sum as in win-some, also loath-some-ness.

LOBBY, a small hall, waiting-room, passage. (Low L. -G.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 161, iv. 3. 39. Bacon (1553) has: 'Our recluses neuer come out of their lobbis.' Reliques of Rome, 53. [Hence we may suppose that it was a monastic term, and was taken up into E. directly from the Low L.] = Low L. lobia, a portico, gallery, covered way, Ducange; also spelt lobium. Also laubia; as if from a Tent. type laubja*.—MIG. laube, an arbour, a bower, also an open way to the upper story of a house. The latter sense will be at once intelligible to any one who has seen a Swiss châlet; and we can thus see also how it easily passed into the sense of a gallery to lounge or wait in. The same word as mod. G. laube, a bower. So called from being formed orig. with branches and foliage.—MIG. laub, laup, OIG. laup, mod. G. laub, a leaf; cognate with E. leaf, q.v. Doublet, lodge.

LOBE, the flap or lower part of the ear, a division of the lungs or brain. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) In Cotgrave.—F. lobe, 'the lap or lowest part of the ear, also a lobe or lappet of the liver'; Cot.—Late L. lobum, acc. of lobus, not given in Ducange, but it may (I suppose) be found in old works on medicine as a transliteration of the Gk. word; Cooper's Thesaurus (1565) has lobus.—(Gk. λοβός, a lobe of the ear or liver; allied to L. legula, the lobe of the ear. Brugmann, i. § 667. Der. lob-ate, mod. and scientific; lobed.

LOBSTER, a kind of crustacean. (L.) ME. lopstere, loppester, loppister. 'A loppyster or a crabbe'; Voc. 624. 12; 'Hic polypus, loppister'; id. 642. 22. AS. loppestre; Voc. 181. 2; a corruption of an earlier form lopus; Voc. 30. 36. β. The word had no sense in AS., lopus being a mere corruption of L. locusta, meaning (1) lobster, (2) locust; see LOCUST. Hence the entry: 'Locusta, lopus'; in Voc. 30. 36.

LOCAL, belonging to a place. (F.—L.) Spelt local in Frith, Works, p. 139, last line.—F. local, 'locality'; Cot.—L. localis, local.—L. locus, a place; see LOCUS. Der. local-ly, local-ise, local-is-ation, local-ity, Mount's Gloss., ed. 1674; also loc-ate, q.v.

Der. lock, verb, ME. locken, locken, Chaucer, C. T. 5899, D 317; (observe that this verb is a secondary formation from the sb., and not to be confused with the old strong verb lūken, lūken = AS. lūcan, now obsolete, of which the pp. locken occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 14881, B 4065); also lock-er, a closed place that locks = ME. lokere, Prompt. An obscure word; perhaps allied to prov. E. log, ME. logge, a long stick, a pole. The prov. E. log also means a tree-trunk. Cf. E. elog. Der. log-cabin, log-hut; log-man, Temp. iii. 1. 67; logg-et, a small log (with dimin. suffix -et, of F. origin), Ben Jonson, Tale of a Tub, A. iv. sc. 5, Puffy's 2d speech; logg-ets, another spelling of logg-ets, the name of a game, Hamlet, v. 1. 100; log-wood, so called because imported in logs, for which reason it was also called black-wood, as appears from Kersey's Dict. and the Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 9, cited in Wedgwood; also log (2), q.v.; logger-head, q.v.

Der. logarithmic, -ic, -al, -ic, -al, -ly.

LOGGER-HEAD, a dunce; a piece of round timber (in a whale-boat) round which a line is passed to make it run more slowly. (E.) In Shak. It means a blockhead; I. L. L. iv. 3. 204. The word evidently means much the same as log-head and is a similar formation to block-head; the difficulty is to account for the syllable -er. However, the prov. E. logger means a clog fastened to a horse's leg, to hamper its movements. See Log (1) and Head.

LOGIC, the science of reasoning correctly. (F.—L.—Gk.) MF. logike, Chaucer, C. Also logo-machy, a strife about words = Gk. λογομαχία, I Tim. vi. 4, from Gk. λόγος, for λόγος, and μάχημα, I fight or contend. From the same Gk. source we have numerous words, as ana-logue, apo-logue, cata-logue, deca-logue, dia-logue, ec-logue, epi-logue, mono-logue, pro-logue; also syn-log-ism; and apo-arithm; also ana-logy, apo-logy, etymo-logy, eu-logy; and all scientific terms in -logy, such as bio-log, concho-log, &c. See Lumber.

LOITER, to delay, linger. (Du.) 'Loiter and gne a-begging,' Tyndal's Works, p. 217, col. 1; see Trench, Select Glossary, where the orig. bad sense of the word is noted; and see Palsgrave. Parv. p. 311. = (Du.) and (MDu.) loiteren, to linger, loiter, trifle, waver; also MDu. loiteren, to delay, linger, act negligently, deceive, waver, vacillate (Kilian, Oudemans); cf. MFlemish lutsen, with the same senses (Kilian); WFlem. lutteren, to totter (De Ho); Norw. lutra, to loiter. Perhaps allied to Lout. Der. loiter-er.

LOLL, to lounge about lazily. (E.) ME. lollen: 'And wel loselicche lollith there' = and veridly he lounges there; P. Plowman, B. xii. 213. 'He that lollith is lame, other his leg out of ioynte, Other meymed in som membre' = he who lounges is lame, or his leg is out of joint, or he is maimed in some member; id. C. x. 215. See also id. Kilian also gives lollebancke, a sleeping-bench, as a Zealand word. The older sense was prob. to 'dole,' to sleep, hence to brood over the fire, to lounge about. It appears to be allied to lull, i. e. to sing to sleep; see Lull. Der. loll-er; and see Lollard.

LOLLARD, a name given to the followers of Wyclif. (MDu.) The history of the word is a little difficult, because it is certain that several words have been purposely mixed up with it. 1. In the first place, the ME. word most commonly in use was not lollard, but loller = one who lolls, a lounger, an idle vagabond. 'Ismele a loller in the wind, quod he'; Chaucer, C. T. 12913 (B. 1173). That 'lounger' is the true sense of this form of the word, is clear from a passage in P. Plowman, C. x. 188–218, the whole of which may be consulted. The most material lines are: 'Now kyndelicly, by Crist, both such called lollers. As by englysch of our eldres of olde menne techyng; He that lollith is lame other his leg out of ioynte Other meymed in som membre,' i. e. such fellows are naturally called lollers in the English of our forefathers; he that lolls about is lame, or broken-jointed, or maimed; see Loll. 2. At the same time, the name lollard was also in use as a term of reproach; and this was a MDu. term, Latinised as Lollardus. It had been in use before Wyclif. Ducange quotes from Johannes Hocsemius, who says, under the date 1399: 'Eodem anno quidam hypocrite gyrovagi, qui Lollardi sive Deum laudantes vocabantur, per Hannoniam et Brabantiam quasdam mulieres nobiles deciperunt;' i. e. In this year certain vagabond hypocrites, called Lollards or God-praisers, deceived certain noblewomen in Hainault and Brabant. He adds that Trithemius says in his Chronicle, under the date 1315: 'ita appellatos a Gualtero Lohard, Germano quodam.' This latter statement makes no difference to the etymology, since Lohard as a surname (like our surnames Fisher, Baker, or Butcher) is precisely the same word as when used in the sense of 'God-praiser.' The lit. sense is 'a singer,' one who chants. = MDu. lollaerd (1) a number of prayers or hymns (L. missator), one who hums; (2) a Lollard; Kilian, Oudemans. This is a mere dialectical variation of a form lull-ard, formed regularly from the MDu. lullen (also lollen), to sing, hum, with the suffix -ard as in E. drunk-ard, slugg-ard, &c., denoting the agent. This MDu. lullen is our E. word lull, q.v. Hexham has: 'loi, or lule, a harmonious sound.' 8. Besides the confusion thus introduced, it was common to compare the Lollards to tares, by help of a bad pun on the L. lolia, tares; this has, however, nothing to do with the etymology. See my note on Chaucer, C. T. B 1173, in the Prioresses Tale, &c. (Clarendon Press). ¶ Since loll and lull are allied words, it makes no very great difference to which verb we refer loller and Lollard; still loller = loll-er, and Lollard = lull-er.

LONE, solitary, retired, away from company. (E.) Not in early use; the word does not appear in Minshew or Levins, and I find no example much earlier than Shakespeare, who has: 'a poor lone woman;' 2 Hen. IV. ii. 1. 35. It probably was at first a colloquial or vulgar word, recommended by its brevity for more extended use. It is known to be a short form of alone, as has generally been explained by lexicographers; even Shakespeare brings it in as a pun: 'a lone loan for a poor lone woman to bear.' Observe: 'I go alone, Like to a lonely dragon;' Cor. iv. 1. 30. Todd cites a slightly earlier instance: 'Moreover this Glycerie is a lone woman;' Kyffin, transl. of Terence, ed. 1588; but Palsgrave has 'lone, only, seul,' and see P. Plowman, B. xvi. 20. See Alone. β. Other examples of loss of initial a occur in the words menad, purtenance, limbeck, vanguard. Der. lone-ly, Cor. iv. 1. 30; lone-li-ness, Hamlet, iii. 1. 46; also lone-some, spelt lonesom in Skinner, ed. 1671; lone-some-ness; also lone-ness: 'One that doth weare himself away in lone-ness,' Fletcher, Faithful Shepherdess, A. i. sc. 2 (Amarillis).

LONG (1), extended, not short, tedious. (E.) ME. long, Northern lang; Chaucer, C. T. 3021 (A 3019); Pricke of Conscience, l. 632. AS. lang, lang; Grein, ii. 156. + Du. lang; Icel. langr; Dan. lang; Swed. lång; Goth. luggers (= langers); G. lang; L. longus. Brugmann, i. § 642. Der. long, adv.; long-boat, long-measure, long-run, long-sight-ed, long-stop, long-suffering. Also a long (1), a long (2), and be-long, verb (see N. E. D.). Also (from L. longus) long-evity, q.v., long-itude, q.v. Also length, q.v.; ling (1), q.v.; ling-er, q.v., lunge, q.v. Cf. lumber (1).

LONG (2), to desire, yearn; to belong. (E.) Often used with for or after. Very common in Shak. ME. longen, longien. 'Than longen folk to goon on pilgrimages' = then people desire, &c.; Chaucer, C. T. 12. AS. langian, impers. vb. with acc. of person. 'Langað þu áwaht,' dost thou desire ought? 'Hæleð langode' = the heroes longed; Grein, ii. 157. [Distinct from langian, to grow long.] + OSax. langōn, impers.; Icel. langa, impers. and pers.; OHG. langōn, impers. Cf. G. verlangen, to long for. Not allied to long (1), but rather to G. gelingen, to succeed, prosper; to AS. lungre, quickly; and Gk. λαμπρός, light, nimble. See Kluge; and Brugmann, i. § 684. But the N. E. D. connects it with long (1). Der. long-ing, sb.; long-ing, adj.; long-ing-ly.

LONGEVITY, length of life. (L.) 'In longevity by many conceived to attain unto hundreds' [of years]; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, B. iii. c. 9. § 1. Spelt longevitie in Minshew, ed. 1627. Coined, by analogy with F. words in -ité (= E. -ity), from L. longævitas, long life. = L. long, stem of longus, long; and ævitas, full form of the word commonly written etās, age. See Long and Age.

LONGITUDE, lit. length; distance in degrees from a given meridian. (F.—L.) 'Longitude and latitudes'; Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, Prolog. l. 57. = F. longitude. = L. longitúdo (gen. longitudinis), length, long duration; in Lat. L. longitude. = L. longi, for longo, decl. stem of longus, long; with suffix -itudo. See Long. Der. longitudin-al (from stem longitudin-); longitudinal-ly.

LOO, a game at cards. (F.) Spelt lu in Pope, Rape of the Lock, c. iii. l. 62 (l. 350). Formerly called Lanterloo (Engl. Cycl. Suppl.). 'Pam in lanterloo;' Farquhar, Sir Harry Wildair, ii. 2 (1701). = F. lanteurel or lanturru, interj. nonsense; fiddlestick! fudge! (Hamilton); also a game at cards, jeu de la bête (i. e. loo); see Littre and Hamilton. [The more usual F. name for loo is mouche.] β. The expression was orig. the refrain of a famous vaudeville in the time of Cardinal Richelieu (died 1642); hence used in order to give an evasive answer. As the expression is merely nonsensical, it admits of no further analysis.

LOOBY, a simpleton, a lubber. (E.) ME. loby, Rich. the Redeles, ii. 170. Allied to LUBBER, q.v.

LOOF, another spelling of LOUF, q.v.

LOOK, to behold, see. (E.) ME. loken, lokien; Chaucer, C. T. 1067. AS. lūcan, to look; see, Grein, ii. 192. +OSax. lōkan, to look; cf. prov. G. lügen, to look out, OHG. luōgen, MHG. luogen, to mark, behold. Brugmann, i. § 421 (7). Der. look, sb., ME. loke, Chaucer, C. T. 3342; look 1 interj.; look-er, look-out, look-ing, look-ing-glass.

LOOM (1), a machine for weaving cloth. (E.) In Spenser, Mulipotmos, l. 272. ME. lome, a tool, instrument; P. Plowman, C. vi. 45; and see Prompt. Parv., p. 312. The pl. lomen=implements for tilling the soil, occurs in the Ancien Riwle, p. 384. AS. gelōma, a tool, implement, Alfred, tr. of Bede, iv. 28, ed. E. F. T. S., p. 366, l. 23; cf. AS. lōma, a tool, implement, utensil; Voc. 549. 9. The mod. E. loom has the sense of ME. welōme, a weaving loom; see Test. Eboracensis, i. 191; Records of Nottingham, ii. 22 (1404).

LOOM (2), to appear faintly or at a distance. (Scand.) The orig. sense is to glimmer or shine faintly. Rare; and usually used of a ship. 'Looming of a ship, is her prospective appearance or shew. Hence it is said, such a ship looms a great sail, i.e. she appears or seems to be a great ship;' Kersey's Dict. ed. 1715. So also Skinner, ed. 1671, who adds: 'she looms but small, i.e. looks small. The orig. sense may have been 'to come slowly towards,' answering to EFries. lōmen, Swed. dial. lōma, to move slowly; cf. MHG. lōmen, to be weary, from the adj. lōmi, slack. Kilian has MDu. lōne, slow, inactive. From Teut. base lōm-, and grade of lām-, as in E. lame. See LAME, LOON (2). Der. loom-ing, sb.

LOON (1), LOWN, a base fellow. (E.) Spelt loon in Macbeth, v. 3. 11; looun in Oth. ii. 3. 95. The latter passage is 'he called the tailor loon,' cited from an old ballad. In the Percy Folio MS., ed. Hales and Furnivall, ii. 324, l. 52, the line appears as: 'therefore he called the tailor cloonne.' Lowl. Sc. looun, used frequently by Dunbar (see Small's Glossary); see looun in E. D. D. Cf. MDu. loen, 'homo stupidus'; Kilian.

LOON (2), a water-bird, diver. (Scand.) A corruption of the Shetland name loom; see Gloss. of Shetland Words by T. Edmondston; Phil. Soc. 1866.—Icel. lōmr, a loon; Swed. and Dan. lōm; Norw. loom. Prob. from the tame or awkward motion of such birds on land; cf. Swed. dial. lōma, EFries. lōmen, to move slowly; see LOOM (2). For derogatory use of the names of birds, cf. booby, gull, goose, owl, &c.

LOOP, a bend, a bend in a cord leaving an opening. (C.) Spelt loupe in the Bible of 1551, Exod. xxvi. 4. 5. The ME. loupe is also used in the sense of 'loop-hole'; but it is prob. the same word, denoting a small hole in a wall shaped like a loop in a piece of string. In this sense it occurs in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 288; and Romance of Partenay, l. 1175. The pl. loups, loops, occurs in the allit. Troy-book (see Glossary). Palsgrave has: 'Loupe in a towne-wall, creneau; Loupe to holde a button, fermeau.' G. Douglas has loups, Fm. bk. v. ch. 5. 66; and loupit, looped, id. 13. Jamieson has Lowl. Scotch loops, the windings of a river. The word appears to be Northern, and borrowed from Gaelic.—Gael. lūb, a bend, loop, noose, winding, meander; lūib, a fold, corner, or angle, a turn of a stream, a bending of the shore; Macleod. Cf. Irish lūb, a loop, bow, staple, plait, fold, thong, meander; and note the sense of 'thong' in Cath. Anglicum, which has: 'a loupe, Amentum.'—Gael. and Irish lūb, to bend; cf. Irish lūbha, bent (Windisch). And see Macbain. Der. loop, verb; loop-ed, full of holes, K. Lear, iii. 4. 31; loop-hole, Shak. Lear, 1. 383, the older term being ME. loupe, as above; loop-hol-ed. But the N. E. D. connects loop-hole with Du. loopen, MDu. lūpen, to lark (hence, to spy).

LOOSE, free, slack, unfastened, unconfined. (Scand.) ME. laus, loose, Chaucer, C. T. 4064 (A 4064); where the Camb. MS. has lous, and the Petworth MS. has laus. Spelt looun, looser, in the Ancien Riwle, p. 228, note d. a. The form laus is Scand.; from Icel. laus (Swed. lōm, lōn); it is the Norse equivalent of ME. laus, false; see Prompt. Parv. p. 298. The latter is from AS. lās, (1) loose, (2) false; cognate with Icel. laus, loose, vacant, Dan. and Swed. lās, loose. +OSax. lōm, MDu. loos, (1) loose, (2) false (Oudemans); the mod. Du. separates the two senses, having loos, loose, and loos, false. Further cognate words appear in Goth. laus, empty, vain; G. lo, loose. Teut. type lausaz*; from laus*, and grade of Teut. lausan-*, to lose. See LOSE; and see LOOSEN. See Notes on E. Etym., p. 173. Der. loose-ly, loose-ness. Note that -less (AS. lās) is the commonest suffix in E.; see -less. And see LEASING.

LOOSE, LOOSEN, to make loose, set free. (E.) The suffix -en is due to analogy with words like lengthen, strengthen, and has been added. ME. loosen, loosenen, loosenen; where the final n merely marks the infinitive mood, without having the causal force which is implied by the final n at present. 'The bondis of alle weren loosed' = the bonds of all were loosed; Wyclif, Acts, xvi. 26. From the adj. above. +OSax. lōsan, 'to make free.' So also Du. lossen, to loosen, release; Icel. leysa, to loosen; Swed. lösa; Dan. fåse; G. lösen; Goth. lausjan; all from the adjective.

LOOT, plunder, booty. (Hindi.—Skt.) A modern term, imported from India.—Hindi lūt (with cerebral ṣ), loot, plunder. The cerebral ṣ shows that an r is elided.—Skt. lūtram, short form of lūptam, booty, spoil.—Skt. lup, to break, spoil; the neut. pp. lūptam is also used in the sense of 'booty,' like the deriv. lūptam; see Benfey, p. 798. = REUP, to break; whence L. rumper, G. rauben, and E. rob. See Rob, Rapture. Cf. Horn, Pers. Dict., § 608. ¶ Thus loot = that which is robbed. Der. loot, verb.

LOOVER, the same as LOUVER, q.v.

LOP, to maim, to cut branches off trees. (E.) In Levins, ed. 1570; and in Shak. Cymb. v. 4. 141. Spelt loppe in Calgrave. Ducange quotes loppare as an Anglo-Latin word; Birch (Cant. Saxon. iii. 240) has 'at loppede thorne'; as if from an AS. verb loppian, to lop. Der. lop, sb., small branches cut off, Henry VIII, i. 2. 96. And see glib (3), left.

LOQUACIOUS, talkative. (L.) In Milton, P. L. x. 161. A coined word, formed by adding -ious to L. loquac-, stem of loquax, talkative. [Prob. suggested by the sb. loquacity, which had previously been introduced into the language from F. loquacité, 'loquacity'; Cot. Loquacity occurs in Minshew, ed. 1627. = L. loqui, to speak. Der. loquacious-ly, ness. Also loquac-ity, from F. loquacité, which from L. acc. loquacitatem. From the same root are col-loquial, e-loqu-ence, ob-loquy, soli-loquy, ventri-loqu-ist; also (like L. pp. locuti-us) al-locuti-ion, circum-locuti-ion, e-locuti-ion, inter-locuti-ion, pro-locutor.

LORD, a master, ruler, peer. (E.) ME. lowerd (= loverd), Havelok, l. 96; gen. contracted to lord, Chaucer, C. T. 47. AS. hlāford, a lord; Grein, ii. 80. Fuller form hlāfweard (misprinted hlāfweard), Ps. civ. 17 (ed. Thorpe). β. Thus the word is a compound, and the former syllable is AS. hlāf, a loaf. It also appears that -ord stands for weard, a warden, keeper, master; whence hlāfweard = loaf-keeper, i.e. the master of the house, father of the family. See Loaf and Ward. The simple word weard is used nearly synonymously with the comp. hlāfweard; and cf. hardweard, a treasure-keeper, lord (Grein). Der. lord, verb (gen. used with it), 2 Hen. VI, iv. 8. 47; lord-ed, Temp. i. 2. 97; lord-ing (with dimin. suffix -ing), Wint. Ta. i. 2. 62 = ME. lauerd-ing, Layamon, 27394; lord-l-ing (with double dimin.), Bp. Hall's Satires, b. ii. sat. 2, l. 12 = ME. lourrd-l-ing, Layamon, 12664, later text; lord-ly = ME. lorde-liche, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 302; lord-li-ness, Shak. Ant. v. 2. 161; lord-ship = ME. lordeship, P. Plowman, B. iii. 206.

LORE, learning, doctrine. (E.) ME. lore, Chaucer, C. T. 529, 4424 (A 527, B 4). [The final e is unessential, and due to the frequent use of the oblique cases.] AS. lōr, lore; gen. dat., acc. lōre; Grein, ii. 158. +Du. leer, doctrine; G. lehre, MHG. lære, OIG. lēr (whence Dan. lære). Teut. type laizō*, f.; cf. Goth. laizjan, to teach; laisneis, doctrine. From laiz*, and grade of leisan-*, to trace out. See further under Learn.

LOREL, a variant of LOSEL, q.v.

LOGNETTE, an opera-glass. (F.) F. lognette. = F. logner, to spy.

LORIKEET, a small lory. (Malay; with Span. suffix.) From lory, q.v.; with dimin. suffix -keet, borrowed from parakeet.

LORIMER, a maker of hits and spurs. (F.—L.) Also loriner; both forms are in Blount's Gloss. (1681). 'Lorimer that maketh byttes'; Palsgrave.—OF. lorenier, lorenier (Godefroy); F. lormier.—OF. lorain, rein, bridle, bit.—Late L. lōrānum, a rein, bit.—L. lōrām, a thong.

LORIOT, the golden oriole. (F.—L.) 'Loriot, a bird otherwise called a witwail'; Kersey, ed. 1715. = F. loriot, 'the bird called a witwail, yellowpeake, highway'; Cot. Corruptly written for loriot, loriot, the prefixed l being the def. article (= L. ille). Cotgrave has: 'Oriol, a heighway, or witwail'; also spelt loriot, id. The latter form is the same as E. Oriole, q.v.

LORN, old pp. of the verb to lose, (E.) See LOSE, Forlorn.

LORY, a small bird of the parrot kind. (Malay.) In Webster. Also called lury, and (better) nary, nury.—Malay lōri, a bird of the parrot kind, also called nāri; Marsden's Malay Dict., p. 311. Nāri, the lury, a beautiful bird of the parrot kind, brought from the Moluccas; id. p. 350.

LOSE, to part with, be separated from. (E.) The mod. E. lose appears to be due to confusion between three ME. forms, viz. (1) loesen, (2) lōsen, (3) lēsen. 1. Loesen is recorded in Struttman, p. 405; it occurs in the sense 'to be lost,' or 'to perish,' as in O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 117, li. 28, 35; and in Layamon, 20538, it is used exactly in the sense of 'lose'. — AS. losian, to become loose, to escape, Grein, ii. 194. From los, weak grade of lōsan, to lose. 2. ME. lōsen, to loose, set free, is from the adj. lōs, loose, loose; see LOOSE. 3. The ME. lōsen, more commonly lōsen, is in Struttman, at p. 394. This is the verb which invariably has the force of 'lose', but it should rather have produced a mod. E. lesse. It is a strong verb, with pt. lēt, and pp. lōren, lōrn; see Chaucer, C. T. 1217, 3536; P. Plowman, B. v. 499. AS. lōsan, to lose; pt. lēt, pp. lōren; only used in comp. for-lōsan, to lose entirely, Luke, xv. 4, 9; Grein, i. 328. +Du. lōzen, only in comp. ver-lōzen, to lose; pt. verloor, pp. verloren; G. lieren, only in comp. ver-lieren, pt. t. verlor, pp. verloren; Goth. lōsan, only in comp. fra-lōsan, to lose, Luke, xv. 8, with which cf. fra-lōsan, to perish, 1 Cor. i. 18. β. All three forms are from different grades of the Teut. verb lōsan*, to lose; pt. *t. lōs, pp. lōsan*. From the Teut. base LEUS*, to lose, become loose (Fick, iii. 273). This base is an extension of LEU*, to set free, whence Gk. λύω, to set free, release; L. luere, to set free. A still older sense, 'to set free by cutting a bond,' is suggested by Skt. lā, to cut, clip; Benfey, p. 799. ¶ Note the double form of the pp., viz., lōt, lōrn; of which lōt (= lōt-ed) is formed from ME. lōten; but lōrn (= lōrn-en) is the regular strong pp. of lōsan = AS. lōsan. Der. los-er, los-ing; from the same Teut. base are loose, vb., also spelt loose, q. v.; loose, adj.; loose, q. v.; loose, for-loose; loose, q. v. From the root LEU we also have solve, solution, ana-ly-sis, para-ly-sis, palys.

LOSEL, LOREL, a worthless fellow, a scamp. (F.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, ii. 3. 109. ME. lovel, P. Plowm. B. vi. 124; also lorel, id., vii. 136. Cf. AS. losian, to perish. From Teut. lōs*, weak grade of leusan*, AS. lōsan, to lose, of which the pp. was lō-en (for older lōs-en); whence loer-eh. See LOSE (above). The sense is 'devoted to perdition'; for the suffix, cf. AS. was-ol, watchful.

LOSS, a losing, damage, waste. (F.) ME. los, Chaucer, C. T. 4447 (B 27). AS. los, destruction; in los uordun, i. e. perished, Ælfred, tr. of Ælfric, lib. v. c. 9 (or c. 10). ONorumb. los, Matt. vii. 13 (Lindisfarne MS.). From Teut. lōs*, weak grade of leusan*, AS. lōsan, to lose; see LOSE.

LOT, a portion, share, fate. (E.) ME. lot, a share; Rich. Cœur de Lion, 4262, in Weber's Met. Romances. AS. lot; Matt. xxvii. 35, Luke, xxiii. 34; also lōt, Grein, ii. 90. The AS. lot, n. (Teut. type lōtan*) is from klut, the weak grade of Teut. klōtan*, AS. klōtan, to cast lots, a strong verb. +Du. lot, a lot; loten, to cast lots; Icel. klut, a part, share; from the strong verb klīta, to obtain by lot; Dan. lot, a lot; Swed. lott, a lot; lotta, to cast lots. Cf. also G. los, a lot; losen, to cast lots; Goth. klauts, a lot, Mark, xv. 24; from Teut. klōtan*, and grade of klōtan* (above). Der. lot, vb.; lot-er-y, q. v.; al-lot, q. v.

LOTH, reluctant; the same as Loath, q. v.

LOTION, a washing, external medicinal application. (L.) 'Lot-ion, a washing or rinsing.' Mount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ion, from L. lūtio, a washing; cf. lūtus, pp. of luare, to wash; see LAVER. Bruggmann, i. § 352 (3).

LOTO, LOTTO, the name of a game. (Ital.—Teut.) Modern; the spelling lotto is the correct Ital. spelling; lotto is a F. form of the Ital. word.—Ital. lotto, a lot, lottery. Of Teut. origin; cf. OHG. hlōz (G. loos), a lot; see LOT.

LOTTERY, a distribution by lot or chance. (Ital.—Teut.) In Levins, ed. 1570; and in Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 2. 32, ii. 1. 15.—Ital. lotteria, lotteria, 'a lottery'; Torriano (1688).—Ital. lotto (above). ¶ The F. loterie is borrowed from Italian, but is in much later use; thus it is omitted by Cotgrave, and Sherwood's index to Cotgrave only gives balotage, sort, as equivalent words to F. loterie.

LOTUS, the Egyptian water-lily. (L.—Gk.) 'Lotus, or Lotus, the lotus-tree.' Kersey, ed. 1715. Minshew, ed. 1627, speaks of the lotus-tree or lotus-tree. It is spelt lotus by Chapman, tr. of Odyssey, ix. 163.—L. lūtus, lūtus.—Gk. λῶτος, a name given to several shrubs; (1) the Greek lotus; (2) the Cyrenean lotus, an African shrub, the eaters of which were called Lotophagi = Lotus-eaters, from Gk. φάγειν, to eat; (3) the lily of the Nile; see Liddell and Scott. Der. Lotophagi; lotus-eater.

LOUD, making a great sound, noisy. (E.) ME. loud; more common in the adv. form loudly = loudly; Chaucer, C. T. 674, 15339 (A 672, B 4523). AS. lūd, loud, Grein, ii. 88. +Du. luid; G. laut, OHG. lūd. β. Teut. type hlūdōz*, for hlūdōs* (with accent on o); allied to the lg. type hlūdōz* (with weak grade klū) as seen in L. clutus, in comp. in-clutus, renowned; Gk. κλυτός, renowned; Skt. gruta, heard, from gru, to hear, Gk. ἀκλῆν. ¶ KLEU, to hear. Bruggmann, i. § 100, 113. Der. loud-ly, loud-ness; from the same root is cl-ent.

LOUGH, a lake. (Irish.) The written Irish form of loch. = Irish loch, a lake, lough, arm of the sea; see Loch.

LOUNGE, to loiter about, move about listlessly. (F.—L.) In Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671; not before 1508. 'A very flourishing society of people called loungers, gentlemen whose observations are mostly itinerant.' The Guardian, no. 124, dated Aug. 3, 1713. The verb seems to have been suggested by the term lūngis, defined in Minshew, ed. 1627, as meaning 'a slimme, a tall and dull slangam, that hath no making to his height; and even as late as in Kersey, ed. 1715, we find lūngis explained as 'a drowsy or dreaming fellow.' It was once a well-known term, and occurs in Decker's Satiro-mastix; Beaumont and Fletcher, Knight of the Burning Pestle, Act ii. sc. 3, speech 1; Lyly's Euphues and his England, ed. Arber, p. 321; and the Play of Misogonus, written about 1550; see Nares and Halliwell.—F. lūngis, 'a lūngis; a slimme, slow-back, dreaming lūngis [idle fellow], drowsie gangrill; a tall and dull slangam, that hath no making to his height, nor wit to his making; also one that being sent on an errand is long in returning.' Cot. Cf. Norm. dial. longis, or saint-longis, a dolt, a slow fellow (Moisy). β. Littre supposes that the sense of lūngis was due to a pun, having reference to L. longus, long; see LONG. For, strictly, Longis was a proper name, being the OF. form of L. Longinus, or Longinus, the name of the centurion who pierced the body of Christ. This name Longinus first appears in the Apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus, and was probably suggested by the Gk. λόγγος, a lance, the word used in John, xix. 34; hence the Picard form longin, with the sense of F. lūngis. See my note to P. Plowman, C. xxi. 82. See the word Lunge, which is certainly due to L. longus. Der. lounge-er.

LOUSE, the name of an insect. (E.) ME. lous, pl. lys or lis; P. Plowman, B. v. 197, 198. AS. lūs, as a gloss to L. pediculus; Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Insectorum; the pl. form was lys-+Du. luis; Dan. luis, pl. lys; Swed. luis, pl. lūs; Icel. lūs, pl. lys; G. luis, pl. lūs. All from Teut. lūs*, fem. Cf. W. lleuen, a louse; Stokes-Fick, p. 256. Der. lous-y, lous-i-ness; louse, v.

LOUT, a clown, awkward fellow. (E.) The lit. sense is 'stooping' or 'slouching.' In Levins; and in K. John, ii. 509, iii. 1. 220. Sidney has: 'this loutish clown'; Arcadia, b. i. (R.). From the old verb lūt, to stoop, bow: 'he humbly louted'; Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 44. ME. louten, to stoop, bow down; Chaucer, C. T. 14168 (B 3352); P. Plowman, B. iii. 115. AS. lūtan, to stoop, str. vb.; pt. t. lūt; Grein, ii. 197. +Icel. lūta, to bow down; whence lūt, adj. bent down, stooping, which may have suggested our modern lout; Swed. luta, to lean; Dan. lute, to stoop. Teut. type lūtan*, pt. *t. lūt, pp. lutanōz*. Der. lout-ish, lout-ish-ness, lout-er.

LOUVER, LOOVER, an opening in the roofs of ancient houses. (F.—Teut.) ME. louer, Prompt. Parv. p. 315; see Way's note. He cites: 'A loouer, or tunnell in the rooffe, or top of a great hall, to avoid smoke, fumarium, spiramentum'; Barcl. Also in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 288; Romance of l'artemay, 1175. In the latter passage we find: 'At louers, lowpes, archers had plente. To cast, draw, and shete, the difference to be'—it (the town) had plenty of archers at openings and loop-holes, to cast, draw (bow), and shoot.—OF. louier, a louver; see Godefroy, who has louier, louier, lower, with three instances in which it is used to translate Late L. lūdium.—Romanic type lūdarium*, adj. form due to Late L. lūdium, a louver. (For the intercalated v, cf. F. pouvoir, from OF. pooir = Span. poder.) β. The orig. sense was prob. an opening over a fireplace; from Icel. hlōð, n. pl. a hearth, a fireplace; ult. allied to Icel. hlaba, to laide, to pile, build up. See Lade. (See Academy, Dec. 1894.)

LOVAGE, an umbelliferous plant. (F.—L.) In Levins, ed. 1570, and in Cotgrave. Spelt louche in Palsgrave, and ab. 1400, in Henslow's Medical Works of 14th cent., p. 8. l. 18. From OF. levesche (mod. F. livèche), 'common lovage, Lombardy lovage,' Cot.; spelt livesche, livesche, livesche, livesche in Godefroy; cf. livesche, as in Voc. 555, 11, whence the E. form. Cf. Ital. levistico, lovage.—L. Ligusticum, lovage, a plant indigenous to Liguria; whence its name.—L. Ligusticus, belonging to Liguria.—L. Liguria (prob. formerly Ligusia*), a country of Cisalpine Gaul, of which the principal town was Genoa, the modern Genoa. Similarly, we have Etruscan from Etruria [Etrusia?].

LOVE, affection, fondness, attachment. (E.) ME. love (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 1137, 1161 (A 1135, 1159). AS. lufu, love; Grein, ii. 196. From the weak grade (lūb*) of Teut. base leub-+Goth. lūbō*; OHG. luba; cf. G. liebe, OHG. liupa, love; Russ. liubov, love; Skt. lūbha-, covetousness, lūbh, to desire. Closely allied to Lief. (¶ LEUBH.) Der. love, verb, ME. louen (= luven, older forms louien, luuien, AS. lufgan, lufan, Grein, ii. 195; also lov-able, lov-er (Chaucer, C. T. LOW (1), inferior, deep, mean, humble. (Scand.) ME. low, pl.

lowe; Chaucer, C. T. 17310 (H 361); older spellings lowh, Ancren Riwle, p. 140, l. 2; lah, Ormulum, 15246, loogh (in the comp. blough=below), Allit. Poems, B. 116. From Icel. lāgr, 3rd (pt. pl.) stem of liggja, to lie. See Lie (1). Der. low-ness, P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, l. 513; low-ly, Chaucer, C. T. 99, low-li-ness; low-er, verb—to make or become more low, formed from the comparative of the adj. (cf. better), Shak. Ant. i. 2. 129; low-church, low-land, low-lander, low-spirited. Also be-low (= by low).

LOW (3), a hill. (E.) In place-names, as Laid-low, Bart-low, Trip-low. AS. lāw, a hill, a slope; also spelt klāw, Grein, ii. 81. It also means a mound, a grave.—Goth. lāw, a grave, tomb; allied to Goth. lains, a hill. From Teut. base lhai-, and grade of lhei- (Idg. KLEI), to incline, slope. Hence it is related to L. clivus, a hill; climare, to lean; and G. lean, verb. See Lean (1).

LOW (4), flame. (Scand.) In Burns, The Weary Pund o' Tow, l. 10. ME. lojhe, Ormulum, 16185.—Icel. logi, a flame; NFries. lowe (Ouzten); MDan. loge, Dan. lus. From Teut. luh*, weak grade of leuh-* (Idg. LEUK), to shine; allied to L. lux; see Lucid.

LOZENGE, a rhombus; a small cake of flavoured sugar, &c., orig. of a diamond shape. (F.—Prov.—L.) Formerly spelt lozenge; and esp. used as an heraldic term, to denote a shield of a diamond shape; see Romaine of the Rose, l. 893, where the OF. word is also lozenges. The word lozenges in Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, 1317, is prob. the same word.—OF. lozenge, lozenge, 'a lozenge, a little square cake of preserved herbs, flowers, &c.'; Cot. Mod. F. losange; Prov. losange (Mistral).—OProv. lauza, Prov. lauzo (Gascon lauzo), a square stone, a tomb-stone (Mistral); Low L. lauza, lauza, the same. Allied to Span. lauza, a tomb-stone (Pineda).—L. acc. lapidem, from nom. lapis, a stone, also a tomb-stone, grave-stone. See Lapidary. ¶ See N. and Q. 9 S. x. 84. The phonology is quite regular; the L. d, between two vowels, becomes OFrov. z, mod. Prov. s, as in L. laudāre, to praise, OProv. lauzar, mod. Prov. lauza. With Span. lauze < L. lapidem, compare Span. raudo, rapid < L. rapidum. But lauza may represent an adj. form lapidea*. Cf. also Span. losa, a flag-stone, marble-slab, a square stone used for paving; whence losar, to pave; OF. lauze, Port. lousa, a flat-stone, a slate for covering roofs; all from Prov. Thus the word meant grave-stone, square slab; and finally a flat square cake.

LUBBER, a clumsy fellow, dolt. (E.) ME. lobre, lobur, P. Plowman, A. prol. 52; B. prol. 55; where some MSS. have loby. Palsgrave has: 'I lubber, I playe the lubber.' We find similar forms in Du. lobbes, a booby; Swed. dial. lubber, a thick, clumsy, lazy man (Rietz); lubba, the same, from lubba, v., to be slow or dull; MDu. lobben. 'a lubbard, a clown'; Norw. lubba, one of round thick figure, lubben, short and thick. Cf. W. llob, a dolt, lubber; llabi, a stripping, looby; Pomeranian lobbe, a lubber; EFries. lobbe, lob, a flashy lump. Shak. has lob, Mids. NL Dr. ii. 1. 16, which is exactly the W. word; also to lob down = to droop, Hen. V. iv. 2. 47. Der. lubber-ly, Merry Wives, v. 5. 195. And see lump.

LUBRICATE, to make smooth or slippery. (L.) Used by Ray, On the Creation, pt. ii. (K.) Kersey, ed. 1715, has lubricitate, to make slippery. The adj. lubrick occurs in Cotgrave to translate F. lubrique; and the sb. lubricity, for F. lubricité.—L. lubricatus, pp. of lubricare, to make slippery.—L. lubricus, slippery (whence F. lubrique). Allied to Slip, q.v. Der. lubricant-ion, lubricat-ory; also lubricity—F. lubricité, as above.

LUCE, a fish, prob. the pike. (F.—L.) 'Luce, fische, Lucius.' Prompt. Parv.; and see Chaucer, C. T. 352 (A 350).—OF. lus, 'a pike'; Cot.—L. lucius, a fish, perhaps the pike. It is probable that luc in Shak. Merry Wives, i. 1. 16, means a louse, by a pun upon the word; see note in Schmidt.

LUCID, bright, shining, clear. (L.) 'Lucid firmament;' Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, l. 1259. [There is no MF. lucide in Cot.; the E. word was taken directly from Latin.]—L. lucidus, bright, shining.—L. lūcere, to shine; L. lūc-, stem of luc, light. From LEUK* or REUK*, to shine; whence also Skt. ruç-, to shine, ruç-, light, Gk. λευκός, white, &c. Der. lucid-ly, lucid-ness, lucid-i-ty. Also luci-fer, Chaucer, C. T. 14005 (B 3189), from L. luci-fer (bringer of light, morning-star), from L. luci-, decl. stem of luc, and fer-re, to bring. Also lucifer, Ben Jonson, Epigram 76, l. 8, from L. lūcent-, stem of pres. pt. of lūcere, to shine. Also lucubration, q.v. From the same root we have lu-nar, lu-min-ous, lu-min-ary, e-lu-cid-ate, il-lu-min-ate, limn, pel-lu-cid, lu-s-trat-ion, il-lu-s-trate, trans-lu-cent, lu-natic, lustre (1), lynx. And see Light (1).

LUCK, fortune, chance, good hap. (MDu.) 'Lukke and good happe;' Caxton, Hist. of Troye, leaf 216, back, l. 7. Not found in AS.—Du. luk, geluk, good fortune, happiness.—MHG. gelücke, good fortune; whence G. glück (for gelück). Prob. allied to G. locken, MHG. locken, OHG. lōkin, to entice, allure, decoy; cf. the Shetland word luck, to entice, to entreat (Edmondston). The EFries. luk, Swed. lycka, Dan. lykke, are all from G. Der. luck-y, Much Ado, v. 3. 32; luck-ly, luck-i-ness, luck-less, luck-ess-ly, ness.

LUCKE, gain, profit. (F.—L.) ME. luere, Chaucer, C. T. 16870 (G 1462).—F. luere.—L. lucrum, gain. Allied to Irish luach, value, price, wages, hire; G. lohn, a reward; Gk. λίστα, booty; Russ. lof, catching of prey, lovite, to capture. All from LEU*, to win, capture as booty; Fick, i. 755. Der. luc-at-ise, from F. lucratif, 'lucrative', Cot. < L. lucrātium, from lucratus, pp. of lucrari, to gain, which is from lucrum sb.; also lucrative-ly, ness.

LUCUBRATION, a production composed in retirement. (L.) 'Lucubration, a studying or working by candle light;' Phillips' Dict. ed. 1706. Coined, in imitation of F. words in -tion, from L. lūcubrātio, a working by lamp-light, night-work, lucubration.—L. lūcubrāre, to bring in lamps, to work by lamp-light.—L. lūcubrum, a faint light (Isidore); formed from lūc-, stem of luc, light. See Lucid, Light (1).

LUDICROUS, laughable, ridiculous. (L.) 'Some ludicrious schoolmen;' Spectator, no. 191, l. 1. Formed (like arduous, &c.) immediately from L. lūdicrus, done in sport; by change of -us to -ous.—L. lūdi-, for ludo, decl. stem of lūdus, sport.—L. lūdare, to play. Root unknown. Der. ludicrous-ly, ness; also (from lūdare), al-lude, col-lude, e-lude, de-lude, inter-lude, pre-lude; and (like pp. lūsus), al-lu-sion, col-lu-sion, de-lu-sion, il-lu-sion.

LUFF, LOOF, to turn a ship towards the wind. (E.?) The pp. loofed is in Shak. Ant. iii. 10. 18. 'To loof, usually pron. to luff;' Phillips' Dict. ed. 1706. Shak. prob. took the word from North's Plutarch, since we find 'he was driven also to loof off to have more room' in the description of the battle of Actium; see Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 212, note 1. The verb answers to Du. loven, to luff, to keep close to the wind. B. But the verb is due to an older sb., found in ME. more than once. This is the ME. lof, a 'loof', the name of a certain contrivance on board ship, of which the use is not quite certain. We find it in Layamon, ll. 7859, 9744; the pl. being loves (= loves), 20949, 30922; see Sir F. Madden's remarks in vol. iii. p. 476 of his edition; and cf. OF. lof, loef, loof in Godefroy, used in the same sense. See also Richard Cœur de Lion, l. 71; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, C. 106; Ancren Riwle, p. 104, l. 1 (though this passage is of doubtful meaning). The word seems to have had different senses at different times; thus the mod. Du. loef is 'weather-gage', like mod. E. luff; but Kilian explains the MDu. loef by scalms, i.e. a thole-pin. In Falconer's Marine Dict. we find loef explained as 'the after-part of a ship's bow'; whilst in Layamon and other passages in ME. we find (as Sir F. Madden says) that it is 'applied to some part of a ship, the agency of which was used to alter its course.' Sir F. Madden quotes from the Supplement to Ducange, s.v. dracena, which L. word is used as equivalent to E. loof, and explained by gubernaculum. The reader should consult Sir F. Madden's note. The word was certainly, as Mr. Wedgwood remarks, 'a timber of considerable size, by which the course of the ship was directed.' It was not, however, what we now call a rudder. C. In my opinion, the passages in which the word occurs go to prove that it was orig. a kind of paddle, which in large ships became a large piece of timber, perhaps thrust over the after-part of a ship's bow (to use Falconer's expression) to assist the rudder in keeping the ship's head right. D. In any case, we may perhaps infer that the orig. sense was 'paddle'; and the word may be an English one, though we may have also be-borrowed the word, in the 16th century, from the cognate Du. loef. Cf. also Dan. lof, luff, weather-gage; loof, to luff; Swed. lof, weather-gage; but these may have been borrowed from Dutch. We find, however, the cognate Bavarian laffen, the blade of an oar, flat part of a rudder (Schmeller). These words are further to be connected with Icel. lōfi, the flat hand, Goth. lōfa, the flat hand, palm of the hand, the Lowland Scotch form being loof. M. Recapitulating, we may conclude that the flat or palm of the hand was the original loof which, thrust over the side of the primitive canoe, helped to direct its course when a rude sail had been set up; this became a paddle, and, at a later time, a more elaborate piece of mechanism for keeping the ship's head straight; which, being constantly associated with the idea of the wind's direction, came at last to mean 'weather-gage', esp. as in the de loof houdend, to keep the luff, de loof afwijnen, to gain the luff, te loof windward; &c. A similar idea is seen in L. palma, (1) the palm of the hand, (2) the blade of an oar. The verb is from the older sb. N. Napier's Collection of Glosses contains the entry: 'Redimicula, lūfasi'; 5241; otherwise, lūf is unrecorded. We must not connect Du. loof, luff, with Du. lucht, air; nor with our own word loft. Dor. a-loof, q. v.

LUG, to pull, haul, drag. (Scand.) 'To lugga, trahere, vellere;' Levins. The old sense was 'to pull by the hair.' In Gower, iii. 148 (bk. vii. 1892), we have: 'And be the chin and be the cheke She luggeth him right as his life,' i. e. she pulls him by his beard and whiskers as she pleases. So also: 'to-lugged of manye'—pulled by the hair by many people; P. Plozman, B. ii. 216.—Swed. lugga, to pull by the hair; cf. Swed. lugga, the fore-lock; Norw. lugga, to pull by the hair; lugga, the hair of the head. β. Perhaps a variant (with h for g) appears in Low G. luken, to pull, esp. to pull by the hair; Brem. Worterbuch, iii. 97; cf. prov. E. louk, to weed, pull up weeds (see loukers—weeders, in Halliwell), from AS. lucan, str. vb., to pull up weeds; cf. Dan. luge, the same. 'Ceorl of his acere lych yfel weod monig'—a peasant lugs many an evil weed out of his field; Ælfred's tr. of Boethius, met. xii. 28. Dor. lugg-æge (with F. suffix -age), Temp. iv. 231. And see LUGSAIL. Gr. The alleged AS. geluggean, due to Sommer, is unauthorised.

LUGSAIL, a sort of square sail. (Hybrid; Scand. and E.) 'Lugsail, a square sail hoisted occasionally on a yard which hangs nearly at right angles with the mast;' Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. [It does not mention lugger, which appears to be a later word; the Dan. luggar, Du. logger, a lugger, may be borrowed from E.] Apparently from the verb to lug, it being so easily hoisted by a mere pull at the rope which supports the yard. Dor. lugg-er, a ship rigged with lugsails; unless the derivation runs the other way; in which case the lugsail is named from the lugger, which may be from Du. logger, 'slow ship,' from Du. log, EFries. lug, slow. (Uncertain.)

LUGUBRIOUS, mournful. (L.) Spelt lugubrosus and lugubrious in Kersey, ed. 1715; but lugubrosus only in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Suggested by L. lūgubris, mournful.—L. lūgus, to mourn. Cf. Gk. λυγρός, sad; prob. also Skt. ruj, to break, bend. Dor. lugubrious-ly, -ness.

LUKEWARM, partially warm, not hot. (E.) 'Leuke warme or blodde warme;' Palsgrave. Luke means 'tepid,' and can correctly be used alone, as by Sam Weller in Dickens, Pickwick Papers, ch. 33: 'let me have nine penn'orth o' brandy and water luke.' It is sufficient to trace this word alone. ME. leuk, leuke, luke, warm, tepid. 'Als a leuke bath, nouthur hate ne calde;'—as a tepid bath, neither hot nor cold; Pricke of Conscience, l. 7481 (Harl. MS.). 'Tha blod com forð luke'—the blood came forth warm; Layamon, 27557. Not in AS. Cf. Du. leuk, lukewarm; EFries. lūk, luke, tepid, weak, slack. Root uncertain; see Du. leuk in Franck. ¶ Distinct from the older word lew, with the same sense, but perhaps affected by it. 'Thou art lew, nether cold nether hoot;' Wyclif. Rev. iii. 16, where one MS. has lew. This lew is closely allied to AS. hlēo, kleow, a shelter, a place that is protected from cold wind, &c., allied to the mod. E. lee; see LEE. Dor. luke-warm-ly, luke-warm-ness.

LULL, to sing to rest, quiet. (E.?) ME. lullen, Chaucer, C. T. 8429, 9697 (E 553, 1823). Earlier, in Walter de Bibbesworth, l. 9; in Wright, Vocab. i. 143. Not in AS. Swed. lulla, to hum, to lull; Dan. lulle, to lull; MDu. lullen, to sing in a humming voice, sing to sleep; Oudemans; WFlem. lullen, the same; De Bo. β. Purely an imitative word, from the repetition of lu, lu, which is a drowsier form of the more cheerful la! la! used in singing. Cf. G. lallen, to lisp as children do, to babble (lit. to say la la); so also Gk. λαλεῖν, to speak. Dor. lull, sb.; lull-a-by; and see lull, lull-ard, lilt.

LUMBAGO, pain in the loins. (L.) In Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706. —L. lumbago (a rare word), pain in the loins.—L. lumb-us, the loin. See LUMBAR.

LUMBAR, belonging to the loins. (L.) 'Lumbar or Lumbary, belonging to the loins;' Phillips, ed. 1706.—L. lumbāris, adj., only found in the neut. lumbāre, used as sb. to signify 'apron;' Jerem. xiii. 1 (Vulgate).—L. lumbus, the loin. Cf. AS. lenden, pl. the loins, Matt. iii. 4; Du. lendenen, s. pl.; Swed. länd, Dan. lænd, the loin; G. lende, the haunch. Root unknown. Brugmann, i. § 360. Dor. (from L. lumbus) lumb-ago; also loin, q. v.

LUMBER (1), cumbersome or useless furniture. (F.—G.) See Trench, Select Glossary, where we find: 'The lumber-room was orig. the Lombard-room, or room where the Lombard banker and broker stowed away his pledges. . . . As these would naturally often accumulate here till they became out of date and unserviceable, the steps are easy to be traced by which the word came to possess its present meaning.' So in Webster, Northward Ho, A. v. sc. 1: 'for though his apparel lie i' the Lombard,' 'To put one's clothes to lumber, pignori dare;' Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671. 'Lombardaer, an usurer or broker, so called from the Lombards . . . hence our word lumber, which signifies refuse household stuff. Lombard is also used for a bank for usury or pawns;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; so also in Fuller, Church Hist., III. v. 10. Minshew, ed. 1627, gives Lumbar, Lombar, or Lombard, 'a bank for usury or pawns.' He also gives: 'Lumber, old baggage of household stuff, so called of the noise it maketh when it is removed, lumber, lumber, &c.;' and if any reader prefer this fancy, he may do so; see LUMBER (2). But, on the other hand, Butler uses lumber to mean 'money for pledges;' as: 'The lumber for their proper goods recover;' Upon Critics, l. 94. And the word had reference to quite small articles; as 'a brasse ladle, and other lomber;' Unton Inventories, p. 27. 'A panne of brasse, with other lomber;' Will of R. Morton (1488); pr. by E. M. Thompson. β. The Lombards were early known as lenders of money on pawn; see P. Plozman, C. vii. 241, l. v. 242, and the note.—F. Lombard, 'a Lombard;' Cot.; OF. Lombart, a usurer (Godefroy). (It also formerly meant a pawnbroker's shop; Littre).—Late L. Loungobardus, Langobardus; for G. Langbart, Long-beard; a name given to the men of this tribe (Littre). See Long and Beard. ¶ Or the sb. may have been originally due to the verb to lumber, to rumble, to move heavy furniture, make a noise thus; cf. lumber, v., in Palsgrave, and Swed. dial. lomra, to roar. See N. E. D. The word may have been influenced by both sources. See LUMBER (2). Dor. lumber-room.

LUMBER (2), to make a great noise, as a heavy rolling object. (Scand.) 'The lumbering of the wheels;' Cowper, John Gilpin, st. 6 from end. 'I lumber, I make a noise above ones head, je fais bruit. You lumbered so above my head I could not sleep for you;' Palsgrave. 'They lumber forth the lawe;' Skelton, Colin Clout, l. 95. A frequentative verb of Scand. origin; preserved in Swed. dial. lomra, to resound, frequent, of lujmma, or ljomma, to resound, thunder; from lujmma, a great noise; Rietz. [Similarly lumber (with excrement b) stands for lumm-er, where -er is the frequentative suffix.] β. The Swed. lujmma is cognate with Icel. Mjóm, a sound, tune, voice; but differs from AS. Myn, a loud noise (Grein), in the suffix and quantity. The Goth. klumma means 'hearing;' Mk. vii. 35. y. Swed. lujmma, Icel. Mjóm, Goth. klumma, are from the Teut. base kleu-*, to hear; ¶ KLĒU. See Loud.

LUMINARY, a bright light. (F.—L.) 'O radiant Luminary;' Skelton, Prayer to the Father of Heaven, l. 1.—OF. luminarie (Littre); later luminare, 'a light, candle, lampe;' Cot.—L. lūmināre, a luminary, neut. of lūmināris, light-giving.—L. lūmin-, stem of lūmen (= 'lū-men'), light. Cf. L. lūcere, to shine; see Lucid. And see Luminous.

LUMINOUS, bright, shining. (F.—L.) 'Their sunny tents, and houses luminous;' Giles Fletcher, Christ's Triumph after Death; ii. st. 31.—F. lumineux, 'shining;' Cot.—L. lūminōsus, luminous.—L. lūmin-, stem of lūmen, light; see Luminary. Dor. luminous-ly, -ness. Also (from L. lūmen) lumin-ar-y, il-lumin-ate. See Lucid. ¶ Perhaps taken directly from Latin.

LUMP, a small shapeless mass, clot. (Scand.) ME. lompe, lumpe; 'a lompe of cheese'—a lump of cheese; P. Plozman, C. x. 150. Of Scand. origin; cf. Swed. dial. lump, a piece heven off a log (Rietz); Norweg. lump, a block, knop, stump (Aasen). β. Allied words are Du. lomp (MDu. lompe), a rag, tatter, lump; Du. lomp, clumsy, dull, awkward; EFries. lump, clumsy, thick, vile, lumpy; Swed. and Dan. lumpen, shabby, mean. Perhaps allied to lūmp (2) by gradation; cf. Dan. dial. Lump, Low G. lumpen, to limp. Dor. lump-ing; lump-ish, Two Gent. iii. 2. 62; lump-y, lump-fish. Also lunch, q. v.

LUNAR, belonging to the moon. (L.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. [The older word was lunary, used by Cot. to tr. F. lunaire.]—L. lūnāris, lunar.—L. lūna (< 'lūnānā'), the moon, lit. light-giver. Cf. L. lūcere, to shine; see Lucid. Brugmann, i. § 218. Dor. (from L. lūna) lun-ate, i. e. moon-shaped, crescent-like; lun-at-ion, in Kersey, ed. 1715; lun-at-ic, q. v.; lun-ette, in fortification, a small work gen. raised before the courtin in ditches full of water; Phillips = F. lunette, dimin. of F. lune, the moon. Also inter-lunar.

LUNATIC, affected with madness. (F.—L.) ME. lunatick, P. Plozman, C. x. 107; used as sb. id. B. prol. 123.—F. lunatique, 'lunatick;' Cot.—L. lūnāticus, insane; lit. affected by the moon, which was supposed to cause insanity.—L. lunātus, moon-like.

= L. luna, the moon; see Lunar. Der. lunacy, Hamlet, ii. 2. 49, iii. 1. 14.

LUNCH, a lump, large piece of bread, &c. (Scand.) 'Lunches, slices, cuts of meat or bread;' Whitby Glossary. Minshew (ed. 1627) mentions lunch, as being equivalent to 'gobbet, or pecee.' 'Cheese an' bread .. in lunches;' Burns, Holy Fair, st. 23. Kietz has Swed. dial. lunk, a ball of flour in broth. The word is a variant of lump; as with bunch, hunch, are variants of bump and hump; see those words. Similarly lunch, lunk, to limp. And see Lump. Der. lunch-son, q.v.

LUNCHEON, LUNCH, a slight meal between breakfast and dinner. (Scand.) Lunch, in the modern sense, seems at first to be an abbreviation of luncheon, though we shall trace the latter back to lunch in the sense mentioned in the article above. Cotgrave translates OF. caribot by 'a luncheon, or big piece of bread, &c.,' also OF. horion by 'a dust, cuff, rap, knock, thump, also, a luncheon, or big piece.' 'A lunch, or a luncheon of bread;' Gazophylacium Anglicanum (1686). We may suspect the spellings lunch-ton, lunch-son, to be merely literary English for lunch-in. 'A huge lunshin of bread, i.e. a large piece;' Thoresby's (Yorkshire) Letter to Ray, 1703 (E.D.S. Gloss. B. 17, p. 103). And this lunch is probably nothing but lunching, with n for ng. At any rate, luncheon, luncheon, or lunchin, is nothing but an old provincial word, and a mere extension of lunch, a lump, without, at first, any change of meaning. It was easily extended to mean a slight meal, just as we now say 'to take a snack,' i.e. a snatch of food. Quite distinct from Nuncheon, q.v. Der. lunch, verb.

LUNE, a leash; as, the lune of a hawk. (F.-L.) 'Lunes, or small thongs of leather;' Strutt, Sports, bk. i. c. 2. § 9. Prob. a variant of ME. loigne, the same; Rom. Rose, 3882.—OF. loigne, longue, a lune.—Late L. longia, a thong; formed from L. longus, long; see Long. Cf. MF. longe, 'a hawk's lune or leash;' Cot.

LUNG, one of the organs of breathing. (L.) Gen. in the pl. lungs. ME. lunge (sing.). Gower, C. A. iii. 100; bk. vii. 405; lungs (pl.), id. iii. 99; bk. vii. 452. Also longes, pl.; Chaucer, C. T. 2754 (A. 2752). AS. lungen, fem. sing.; pl. lungena. 'Pulmo, lunges;' Voc. 160. 34; lungena, 306. 18. + Du. long, s. pl., lunges, lights; Icecl. lungun, neut. sing.; usually in pl. lungun; Dan. lung, s. pl. lunges; Swed. lunga; G. lungun, pl. β. Allied to AS. lungre, quickly (orig. lightly). Grein, ii. 196; also to F. light (2), which is allied to Gk. laxus. Skt. laghu, light; see Light (2). Thus the lungs are named from their lightness; indeed, they are also called lights. Finally, lungs, light, lowly are all from the same root. Cf. also Russ. legion, lung, as compared with Russ. legiti, light; Port. leves, lights, from leve, light. Brugmann, i. § 691. Der. lung-wort, AS. lungumwort, Gloss. to Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms.

LUNGE, a thrust, in fencing. (F.-L.) In Todd's Johnson; formerly longe, used by Smollett (Johnson). 'I have my passes, ... My longes;' Dekker, Wonder of a Kingdom, A. i. sc. 1; spelt longes, Butler, Hud. pl. iii. c. 1. 159. The E. a lunge is a mistaken substitute for F. allonge (formerly also allonge), 'a lengthening,' Cot. So named from the extension of the body in delivering the thrust.—F. allonger (formerly alonger), to lengthen; cf. Ital. allongare, allungare, to lengthen (Florio). Compounded of F. à (L. ad) and longäre*, only in comp. é-longäre, to lengthen; see Elongate.

LUPINE, a kind of pulse. (F.-L.) The pl. is both lupines, and lupins in Holland, tr. of Pliny, bk. xxii. c. 25. ME. lupines, pl., Lanfranc's Chirurgie, p. 88. l. 20.—F. lupin, 'the pulse lupines;' Cot.—L. lupinus, a lupine, kind of pulse; neut. of lupinus, wolfish, though the reason of the name is not apparent; perhaps 'because it exhausts the soil' (Webster).—L. lupus, a wolf; see Wolf.

LURCH (1), to lurk, dodge. (Scand.) Merely a variant of lurk, due to a palatalised pronunciation; see Lurk. It means to lie in wait, lurk; Merry Wives, ii. 2. 26. Der. lurch-er, 'one that lies upon the lurch, or upon the catch, also a kind of hunting-dog,' Phillips, ed. 1706; 'false lurchers;' Roy, Rede Me, ed. Arber, p. 98, l. 7.

LURCH (2), the name of a game. (F.-L.) The phr. 'to leave in the lurch' was derived from its use in an old game; to lurch is still used in playing cribbage. 'But rather leave him in the lurch;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3. l. 1151. The game is mentioned in Cotgrave.—F. louchre, 'the game called Lurch, or a Lurch in game; il demoura louchre, he was left in the lurch;' Cot. He also gives: 'Ourchre, the game at tables called lurch.' β. This suggests that louchre stands for Pouchre, the initial l being merely the def. article; but this is doubtful, as we find also Ital. lureio, 'the game lurch;' Torriano. γ. Apparently from OF. louchre, deceived, duped (Godefroy).—Bavar. lurzen, to deceive; lurz, left (of the hands), perverse, beaten at draughts; Schmeller, i. 1503. Der. lurch-v., to cheat, rob; see Corioliannus, s. 1. 105.

LURCH (3), to devour; obsolete. (F.-L.) Bacon says that proximity to great cities 'lurcheth all provisions, and maketh every thing dear;' Essay xlv, Of Building. That is, it absorbs them, lit. gulps them down. 'To lurch, devour, or cate greedily, Ingratito;' Baret, Alvearie. 'Lurcher, an exceeding eater;' Falsgrave. Perhaps a peculiar use of lurch (2), as if to devour before others. Cf. 'I lurchte, as one dothe his fellows at meate with etyng to hastily;' Falsgrave. But influenced by Ital. lurcare, to lurch or devour greedily; Torriano; Late L. lurcare, to devour greedily; L. lurcare, the same; L. lurco, a glutton.

LURCH (4), a sudden roll sideways. (Scand.?) Not in Todd's Johnson. 'A lee lurch, a sudden jerky roll of a ship to the leeward, as when a heavy sea strikes her on the weather side;' Cent. Dict. A sea term. Of obscure origin; but probably due to lurch (1) in the sense of to stoop or duck like one who skulks or tries to avoid notice. See Lurch (1).

LURE, a bait, enticement, decoy. (F.-G.) ME. lure, Chaucer, C. T. 17021 (H 72). The pp. lured, enticed, occurs in F. Plowman, B. v. 439; cf. Chaucer, C. T. 5997 (D 415). A term of the chase; and therefore of F. origin.—OF. loerre, loire (see Littré), later leurre, 'a faulconer's lure;' Cot.—Teut. type lithrom*, n.; as in MIIG. luder (G. luder), a bait, decoy, lure. Der. lure, vb.

LURID, wan, gloomy. (L.) 'Lurid, pale, wan, black and blew;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—L. luridus, pale, yellow, wan, ghastly. Prol. allied to Gk. χλωρος, green (Pretwitz); see Chlorine.

LURK, to lie in wait, skulk, lie hid. (Scand.) ME. lurken, lurken, Chaucer, C. T. 16126 (G 658); F. Plowman, B. i. 216. Of Scand. origin.—Norw. turka, to sneak away, to go slowly; Swed. dial. turka, to do anything slowly; EFries. lurken, to shuffle along. β. The -k appears to be a suffix; cf. Norw. and Swed. turra, 134. turra, to lurk, outwit, G. tauera, to lurk. See Lower (2). Doublet, lurch (1); perhaps lurch (4).

LURY, the same as Lory, q.v.

LUSCIOUS, delicious, very sweet, fulsome, nice. (F.-L.?) Also spelt luscious, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 1. 54; and in Skinner. Wedgwood cites from Falsgrave: 'Fressful or luscious, as meate that is nat well seasoned or that hath an unpleasant sweetness in it, fude.' 'The strong may eate good luscious meate;' Drant, tr. of Horace, bk. ii. sat. 4. (1566). It seems to be formed from prov. F. lush, sweet, juicy, abundant, said of vegetation (E. D. D.). β. Possibly influenced by ME. lucius, variant of lucius, short for delicious; as in 'with lucius drinks;' Robson, Three Met. Romances, p. 17; cf. 'with lucius drinks;' id. p. 38. So also: 'lucious quails;' Bp. Hacket, Cent. of Sermons, fol. p. 515. And it may also have been influenced by ME. luscus, pleasant. 'How lush and lusty the grass looks;' Temp. ii. 1. 52. See Lush. Der. lusciousness.

LUSH, fresh, luxuriant, juicy, said of vegetation. (F.-L.) 'Then green and voyd of strength and lush and foggy is the blade;' Golding, tr. of Ovid, Metam. xv. leaf 182 (1603). Cf. Tempest, ii. 1. 52. A parallel form to lush, relaxed, tender, soft and watery (E. D. D.). And see N. E. 1.—MF. lasche, 'slack, flagging, weak,' Cot.—MF. lascher (F. lischer), to slacken.—Late L. lascäre*, for l. lasäre, to slacken.—L. lascus, lax; see Lax.

LUST, longing desire. (F.) The old sense is 'pleasure.' ME. lust, Chaucer, C. T. 192. AS. lust, pleasure; Grein, ii. 196. + Du. lust, delight; Icecl. lust, lust; Dan. lyst; Swed. lust; Goth. lustus; G. lust. Allied to Skt. lask, to desire; Gk. ἀλαστος. Brugmann, i. § 518 (2). Der. lust, verb, K. Lear, iv. 6. 166, the older form being list = AS. lystan; lust-y, ME. lust-y, Chaucer, C. T. 80; lust-ily, lust-ness; lust-ful, Ayenbite of Inwyty, p. 80; lust-ful-ness, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 21; list-ness (= lust-ness), Gower, C. A. ii. 111, bk. iv. 3262; Prompt. Parv. p. 307; list-ness-ness.

LUSTRATION, a purification by sacrifice, a sacrifice. (L.) 'The doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. i. c. 11. sect. 12. Formed, by analogy with F. words in -tion, from L. lustratio, an expiation, sacrifice.—L. lusträre, to purify.—L. lustrum, an expiatory sacrifice. See Lustre (2).

LUSTRE (1), splendour, brightness. (F.-Ital.-L.) 'Lustre of the diamante;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 73c. Spelt luster in Minshew, ed. 1627.—F. lustre, 'a luster, or gloss;' Cot.—Ital. lustro, 'a lustre, a glasse, a shining;' Florio; cf. Late L. lustrum, a window; lit. a place for admitting light; connected with lusträre, to enlighten, illumine. β. This verb lusträre appears to be quite distinct from lusträre, to purify; for which see Lustre (2). It is prob. formed from a lost adjective lustrus*, shining, an abbreviation of luc-strus*; in any case, it is to be connected with lucäre, to shine; see Lucid. Der. lustr-ous, All s Well, ii. 1. 41; lustrous-ly; lustr-ess; also lustring, q.v.

LUSTRE (2), LUSTRUM, a period of five years. (F.-L.) Spelt lustrum in Minshew, ed. 1627; which is the L. form. In Du Wes, Sup. to Falsgrave, p. 1078, we find the pl. lustres, both E. and F.—OF. and F. lustre, 'a term of . . . fifty months;' Cot.—L. lustrum, an expiatory offering, a lustration; also a period of five years, because every five years a lustrum was performed. β. The orig. sense is 'a washing or purification; connected with L. luere, to cleanse, purify, and lustrare, to wash; see Lave. Der. lustr-al, adj.; lustr-alion, n. v.

LUTE (1), a stringed instrument of music. (F.—Prov.—Span.—Arab.) ME. lute, Chaucer, C. T. 12400 (C 466). It is not easy to say how the word came to us; but prob. it was through the French, viz. OF. lute = Prov. luto = Span. luto = Arab. al 'ūd (below). The forms are: OF. lute, pl. lutes (Hatzfeld); MF. lut (Cot.), mod. F. lute; Prov. luto, Span. luto, Port. luto, luto, luto, also MDu. lute (Kilian), Dn. luit, Dan. lut, G. lute. β. The Port. form luto clearly shows the Arab. origin of the word, the prefix al- being the Arab. def. article, which in other languages appears merely as an initial l. The sb. is Arab. 'ūd (with initial ain), wood, timber, the trunk or branch of a tree, a staff, stick, wood of aloes, lute, or harp; Rich. Dict. p. 1035, col. 1. Der. lute-string, Much Ado, iii. 2. 61; and in Palsgrave.

LUTE (2), a composition like clay, loam. (F.—L.) Chaucer has enluting, Six-text, Group G, l. 766, on which see my note. We also find the pp. luted, i.e. protected with lute; see Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 99; Massinger, A Very Woman, iii. 1. 38. OF. lut, 'clay, mould, loam, dusting;' Cot.—L. lutum, mud, mire; lit. that which is washed over or washed down.—L. luere, to wash, lave; see Lave. Der. lut-ing.

LUTESTRING, a lustrous silk. (F.—Ital.—L.) In Skinner, ed. 1671. 'The price of lutestring;' Spectator, no. 21. A curious corruption of lustring or lustrine. Lustring or Lustrine, a sort of silk; Kersey.—F. lustrine, lustring; Hamilton.—Ital. lustrino, lustring (a shining silk), tinsel; Meadows. β. So called from its glossiness.—Ital. lustrare, to shine.—L. lustrare, to shine; see Lustrare (1). β. Distinct from lute-string under lute (1).

LUXATION, dislocation. (F.—L.) In surgery.—F. luxation, 'a luxation; a being out of joint;' Cot.—L. luxātiō, acc. of luxatio, a dislocation.—L. luxare, to dislocate.—L. lux, adj., out of joint. Cf. Gk. λυγέ, bent sideways, oblique. Brugmann, ii. § 635. Der. luxate (Davies); from pp. luxat-us.

LYM, a lime-hound. (F.—L.) In Shak., K. Lear, iii. 6. 72. Short for lime-hound, q. v.

LYMPH, a colourless fluid in animals. (L.) A shortened form of lymphā, the older term. 'Lymphā, a clear humour;' Kersey, ed. 1715.—L. lymphā, water, lymph; also, a water-nymph. β. The spelling with y is due to a supposed derivation from the Gk. λυφή, a nymph, which is false. The word is rather to be spelt limphā, limpa, and to be connected with L. limpidus, clear; see Limpid. Brugmann, i. § 102, 763 (b). Der. lymph-at-ice, Evelyn's Diary, Jan. 10, 1677; from F. lymphatique (Cot.), L. lymphaticus.

LYNCH, to punish summarily, by mob-law. (E.) Not from John Lynch (Haydn), but from Charles Lynch, his brother, a Virginia planter (1736-96), who 'undertook to protect society . . . in the region where he lived, on the Staunton river, by punishing with stripes or banishment such lawless or disaffected persons as were accused.'—Cent. Dict. The name Lynch is from AS. hinc, a ridge of land; see Link (1). Der. lynch-law.

M

MACADAMISE, to pave a road with small, broken stones. (Hybrid; Gael. and Heb.; with F. suffix.) 'Macadamising, a system of road-making devised by Mr. John Macadam, and published by him in an essay, in 1819,' &c.; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Macadam—son of Adam; from Gael. mac, son; and Heb. ādām, a man, from the root ādām, to be red.

MACARONI, MACCARONI, a paste made of wheat flour. (Ital.—L.) 'He doth learn to make strange sauces, to eat anchovies, macaroni, bovelli, fagioli, and caviare;' Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, A. ii (Mercury). 'Macaroni, gobbets or lumps of boiled paste,' &c.; Minshew, ed. 1627.—Mital. macaroni, 'a kind of paste meate boiled in broth, and drest with butter, cheese, and spice;' Florio. The mod. Ital. spelling is maccheroni, properly the plural of maccherone, used in the sense of a 'macaronic' biscuit. β. Of somewhat doubtful origin; but prob. to be connected with Mital. maccare, 'to bruise, to batter,' i.e. to pound; cf. Ital. macco, 'a kind of dish made of beans boiled to a mash;' Torriano.—L. macc-, base of macerare, to macerate. See Macerate. γ. Thus the orig. sense seems to have been 'pulp'; hence anything of a pulpy or pasty nature. Der. Macaron-ic, from F. macaronique, 'a macaronick, a confused heap or huddle of many several things' (Cot.); so named from macaroni, which was orig. a mixed mess, as described by Florio above. Cf. Ital. maccherone, 'Macaronics;' Baretti. The name macaroni, according to Haydn, Dict. of Dates, was given to a poem by Theophilus Foienigo (otherwise Merlinus Coccaius) in 1509; macaronic poetry is a kind of jumble, often written in a mixture of languages. And see macaroon. Macaroni, a fop, a dandy, belongs here. Garrick has 'rake and macaroni;' Bon Ton, A. i. sc. 1 (Sir J. Trolley). Florio has: 'macaroni, a gul, a dolt, a loggerhead;' so that the E. word for 'fop' should have ended in -e. See the long extract under macaroni in Davies, Suppl. Glossary.

MACARON, a kind of cake or biscuit. (F.—Ital.—L.) In Alburnazar, A. ii. sc. 3 (Davies). Formerly macaron, as in Cotgrave.—F. macaron; pl. macarons, 'macarons, little fritter-like buns, or thick losenges, compounded of sugar, almonds, rose-water, and musk, pounded together and baked with a gentle fire; also (the same as) the Ital. macaroni;' Cot.—Ital. macarone, a macaroon. See further under Macaroni. β. The sense of the word has been somewhat altered.

MACAW, a kind of parrot. (Brazil.) Gay has mockaw, The Toilette, l. 9. Spelt macaw by Willughby, Ornithologia (1676), p. 73; but macaw by Charleton, Onomasticon (1668), p. 66.—Brazil. macao; see Macaw in Newton, Dict. of Birds.

MACE (1), a kind of club. (F.—L.) In early use. ME. mace, King Alsaunder, 1907.—AF. mace, Stat. Realm, i. 231; OF. mace, mache (Burguy), mod. F. mace, a mace.—*L. mata, a beetle, only preserved in the dimin. mateola, a beetle, mallet; Pliny, 17. 18. 29. Körtling, § 6000. Der. mace-bearer.

MACE (2), a kind of spice. (F.—L.—Gk.) A pl. form maces occurs in Sir T. Eliot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 10; cf. 'item, in maces;' Earl of Derby's Expedition, 1392-3; p. 221, l. 25.—AF. maces, Liber Albus, p. 230.—F. mace, 'the spice called mace;' Cot.; OF. maceis, maceis, maceys (Godefroy); so that the E. form should be maces, sing., not plural. β. The etym. is very obscure; the L. maceis or maceis (gen. maccidis) is a doubtful word, the name of a fictitious spice in Plautus (Lewis). It is possible that the F. maceis was confused with OF. maceor, of which Cot. says that it 'is not mace, as many imagine, but a reddish, aromatic, and astringent rind of a certain Indian root.' This OF. maceor is the word concerning which we read in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xii. c. 8, that 'the macir is likewise brought out of India; a reddish bark or rind it is of a great root, and beareth the name of the tree itself.' Cf. L. macir, i.e. 'macir,' Pliny:—Gk. μακρ; doubtless a borrowed word from the East.
A 3

MACERATE, to soften by steeping, to soak. (L.) In Spenser, Virgil's Gnat, l. 94.—L. maceratus, pp. of macerare, to steep; a frequentative from a base mac-; from an Idg. base mak*. Dor. macerat-ion.

MACHICOLATION, an opening in the floor of a projecting gallery of a tower, for pouring down molten lead and the like. (Low L.) Coined from Late L. machicolare, to provide with machicolations; cf. MF. macheoulis, macheoulis, 'the stones at the foot of a parapet (especially over a gate) resembling a grate, through which offensive things are thrown upon assailants'; Cot. Of uncertain origin; perhaps from MF. mache-, as in MF. mache-rave, 'a turnip-eater,' Cot., and other words, but here meaning 'bruising' or 'killing'; and OF. colais, MF. colais, adj., gliding, or as sb., a groove; L. type colāticus*, from colāre, to strain; see Cullis and Portuallis. Here mache- (F. mache-) is from the OF. macher, macher, to chew, also used in the sense of to crush, to murder (see OF. macher in Godefroy). Hence it may mean 'a groove for crushing foes.' The OF. macher is from L. masticare; see Masticato.

MACHINE, a contrivance, instrument. (F.—L.—Gk.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 2, 174; first in 1549.—N. machine—L. machina, Gk. μηχανή, a device, machine; cf. μηχάνω, means, contrivance. β. From the base μηχ, and grade of the Idg. MACHI*, Teut. MAG, to have power, whence also the E. verb may; Curtius, i. 416. See May (1). Der. machine-er-y, machin-ist, machin-ette, from L. machinātus, pp. of machināre, to contrive, with the from the sb. machina; machin-at-ion, K. Lear, i. 2, 122, v. 1, 46; AF. machinacion, Stat. Reulm, i. 342 (1353); machin-at-or.

MACKEREL, the name of a fish. (F.—L.—?) ME. mackerel, Havelok, 758.—OF. mackerel, in Neckam's Traité de Utensilibus; Wright's Vocab. i. 98, l. 1; mackerelle, Liber Albus, p. 235. (Mod. F. maquereau.) From Late L. maquerellus; of unknown origin. ¶ The suggestion in Mahn's Webster, that the F. maquereau, a mackerel, is the same word as OF. maquereau, a pandar (Cotgrave), from 'a popular tradition in France that the mackerel, in spring, follows the female shades, which are called vierges or maids, and leads them to their mates,' is one which is open to doubt. It may be that the story arose out of the coincidence of the name, and that the name was not derived from the story. The etymology of OF. maquereau, a pandar, is from the Teut. source preserved in Du. mackelaar, a broker, pandar, from Du. makelen, to procure, bring about, frequentative form of maken, to make.

MACKINTOSH, a waterproof overcoat. (Gael.) From the name of the inventor.

MACROCOSM, the whole universe. (Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706; and in Howell's Letters, vol. i. let. 34. (1621). ME. macrocosm, Lydgate, Assembly of Gods, 995. Spelt macrocosmus in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Coined from Gk. μακρο-, for μακρός, long, great; and κόσμος, the world. See Microcosm.

MACULATE, to defile. (L.) Used as a pp. in The Two Noble Kinsmen, ed. Skeat, v. 1, 134.—L. maculatus, pp. of maculāre, to spot.—L. macula, a spot; a dimin. form. Der. maculat-ion. Shak. Troil. iv. 4, 66; im-maculate, q.v. And see mail (1).

MAD, insane, foolish. (E.) The vowel was at first long. ME. mad, spelt maad in Li Beau Disconus, l. 2001, in Ritson's Met. Romances, vol. ii.; made in The Seven Sages, ed. Wright, 2091. Cf. maidschipe = madness; Ancren Riwle, p. 148, l. 1. The ME. mad is from AS. (ge-mædd), maddened, shortened to (ge-mædd [cf. ful]), pp. of ge-mædan, to madden, to drive mad. Cf. AS. ge-mæd, mad, Corpus Gloss. 2105. + OSax. ge-mad, foolish; OHG. ga-meit, gi-meit, vain; Icel. meidd, pp. of meiða, to maim, hurt; Goth. ga-meids, bruised, maimed; Luke, iv. 19, xiv. 13, 21. β. Thus the Teut. sense appears to be 'maimed.' Teut. type maibōz*, Idg. type maibōs*, pp. from the root MEI, to change; cf. L. mutare, to change; see Mutable. ¶ Not connected with Ital. matto, mad (see Mate (2)); nor with Skt. matla-s, mad (pp. of mad, to be drunk). Der. mad-ly, mad-ness; also ME. madden, to be mad, Wyeliff, John, x. 20 (obsolete); also madd-en, to make mad, for which Shak. uses the simple form mad, Rich. II, v. 5, 61, &c.; mad-cap (from mad and cap). K. John, i. 84; mad-house; mad-man, L. L. v. 2, 338; mad-wort.

MADAM, my lady, a lady. (F.—L.) In early use. ME. madame, King Alisaunder, 269.—F. madame = ma dame, my lady.—L. ma domina, my lady. See Dame. Doublet, madonna.

MADDER, the name of a plant. (E.) ME. madir, mader (with one d); Prompt. Parv. AS. mædere, in Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 337; cf. feld-madder, field-madder, Cor. 300. 10.—Icel. maðra; Du. mado, mae. Cf. Skt. madhura, sweet, tender; whence fem. madhurā, the name of several plants (Benfey). See Mead (1).

MADIRA, a sort of wine. (Port.—L.) In Shak. I Hen. IV, i. 2, 128. So named from the island of Madeira, off the N. W.

coast of Africa. The name is Port., and signifies that the island was well-wooded.—Port. madeira, wood, timber. Cf. Span. madera (the same).—L. mātrā, stuff, wood, timber; see Matter (1). See Dicz, p. 465; also Hakluyt, Voy. vol. ii. pt. 2, p. 7.

MADMOISELLE, miss; lit. my damsel. (F.—L.) Milton, Apology for Smeectymnus, speaks slightly of 'grooms and madamoiselles' (R.). Spelt madamoiselle, Caxton, Blanchardyn, ch. 16.—F. mademoiselle, spelt madamoiselle in Cotgrave.—F. ma, my; and demoiselle, formerly damoiselle, a damsel. See Madame and Damsel.

MADONNA, my lady, Our Lady. (Ital.—L.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 5, 47.—Ital. madonna—L. ma, my; and domna, lady.—L. ma, my; and domna lady, dame. See Dame. Doublet, madams.

MADREPORE, the common coral. (F.—Ital.—L. and Gk.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson.—F. madrepore, madrepore—Ital. madrepore, explained in Meadows as 'a petrified plant.' β. Of somewhat uncertain origin; but prob. the first part of the word is Ital. madre, mother, used in various compounds, as madre-selva (lit. mother-wood), honeysuckle, madre-bosco (lit. mother-bush), wood-bine (Florio), madre perla, mother of pearl (Florio); from L. matrem, acc. of mater, mother; see Mother. γ. The part pore appears to be from the Gk. ωπός, a light, friable stone, also a stalactite. Hence madre-pore = mother-stone, a similar formation to madre perla (lit. mother-pearl). ¶ If this be right, it has nothing to do with F. madré, spotted, not with pore. But it has certainly been understood as connected with the word pore, as shown by the numerous similar scientific terms, such as catenipora, tubipora, dentipora, gennipora, &c.; see the articles in Engl. Cycl. on Madrepheylia and Madreporena. It does not follow that the supposed connexion with pore was originally right; it only shows that this sense was substituted for that of the Gk. ωπός. In fact, the Ital. poro (ωπός) was misunderstood as representing L. porus in 1599; N. E. D.

MADRIGAL, a pastoral song. (Ital.—L.—Gk.) 'Melodious birds sing madrigals,' Marlowe, Passionate Shepherd; cited in Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 1, 18, 23.—Ital. madrigale, pl. madrigali, madriali, 'madrigals, a kind of short songs or ditties in Italian'; Florio. It stands for mandrigale*, and means 'a shepherd's song'; cf. mandriale, mandriano, 'a herdsman, a grasper, a drover'; also madrigale; Florio.—Ital. mandra, 'a herd, drove, flocke, folde'; Florio.—L. mandra, a stall, stable, sty.—Gk. μάνδρα, an inclosure, fold, stable.—Skt. mandurā, a stable for horses; prob. from mand, to sleep. ¶ The suffix -gale = L. -calis. Perhaps through F. madrigal.

MENAD, a priestess of Bacchus. (Gk.) From Gk. μαῖνᾱδ, stem of μαῖναι, mad, raving; as sb., a female Bacchanal.—Gk. μαῖνομαι, I am mad, I rave; allied to μαῖνα, madness; see Mania.

MAGAZINE, a storehouse, store, store of news, pamphlet. (F.—Ital.—Arab.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 816. Spelt magasan, Hakluyt, Voy. ii. pt. 1, p. 234.—MF. magazin, 'a magazin,' Cot.; mod. Dict. p. 1366. Cf. also khizāna, a magazine, treasure-house; from khazn, a laying up in store; id. pp. 609, 610. Der. magazine, vb., to store; North, Examen, 1740, p. 222.

Cf. maked in Wright's Vocab. i. 255, col. 1, to translate L. tarinus [misprint for tarmus] or simax [= L. cimex]. Maggot is an AF. perversion of ME. madokk, a maggot; see Voc. 594, 3; Lanfranc's Chirurgie, p. 44, l. 18; Henslow, Medical Words of the 14th Cent. p. 141; also madok, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 326. A dimin. from AS. maga, maju, a worm; Voc. 122, 3; 205, 8.—Du. made; G. made, OHG. madu; Goth. matha, a worm. Cf. Icel. maðkr, a maggot; Dan. madgik, madike, a maggot. See Mawkish. Der. maggot-y.

MAGI, priests of the Persians. (L.—Gk.—Pers.) In P. Plowman, C. xxii. 85. Borrowed from L. magi, Matt. ii. 1 (Vulgate).—Gk. μαγοί, Matt. ii. 1; pl. of μαγός, a Magian, one of a Median tribe (Herod. i. 101), hence, an enchanter, wizard, juggler. Properly, one of the priests or wise men in Persia who interpreted dreams, &c. (Liddell). β. From O'Pers. magu- (nom. magus). Pers. mugh, mūgh, one of the Magi, a fire-worshipper; Horn, § 984; Rich. Dict. p. 1527. Der. mag-ic, q.v. ¶ It is interesting to note that the word magus, which Sir H. Rawlinson translates by 'the Magian,' occurs in cuneiform characters in an inscription at Behistan; see Schlichter, Indogerm. Chrestomathie, p. 151; Nineveh and Persepolis, by W. S. W. Vaux, ed. 1851, p. 405.

T. 15578 (G 110). — F. magnanimité, 'magnanimity'; Cot. — L. magnanimitatem, acc. of magnanimitas, greatness of mind. — L. magn-, stem of magnus, great; and animi-, for animus, the mind; with suffix -itas. See Magnate and Animus.

MAGNATE, a great man, noble. (L.) A late word; not in Todd's Johnson. From Late L. magnātus, acc. of magnus, a prince (Judith, v. 26). — L. magn-, stem of magnus, great. β. L. magnus is cognate with Gk. μέγας, great, Skt. mahant-, great, and L. nuch; see Much. ¶ Magnate is a Hungarian and Polish use of the L. word; the F. magnat (in Littre, but little used), is more strictly, due to the pl. magnatus = L. magnificus. For derivatives from L. magnus, see Magnitude.

MAGNESIA, the oxide of magnesium. (Late L.—Gk.) The name magnesia, apparently formerly applied to manganese, occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 16923 (G 1455), and in Ben Jonson's Alchemist, Act ii (Surl). Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Coined from some supposed resemblance to the mineral called by a similar name in Gk., from *L. prov. E. maggoty-pie; and madge, meaning (1) an owl, (2) a magpie. The prefixes Mag, Magot, Maggoty (like Madge) are various forms of the name Margaret; cf. Robin as applied to the red-breast, Jenny to the wren, Philip to the sparrow. Mag may be taken to be short for Magot = F. Margot, which is (1) a familiar form of F. Marguerite, and (2) a name for the magpie. — F. Margot, for Marguerite. — L. margarita, a pearl. — Gk. μαργαρίτης, a pearl, a word of Eastern origin; cf. Pers. murwārid, a pearl; Kich. Dict. p. 1306; Skt. mañjari, a pearl. 2. Indian origin; but from what dialect is unknown.

MAHOUT, an elephant-driver. (Hind.) The mahout of his elephant had been pulled off his seat; ¶ Thackeray, Vanity Fair, ch. iv. — Hind. mahūwat, an elephant-driver (Forbes). And see Yule.

MAID, MAIDEN, a girl, virgin. (F.—L.) 1. Mayde occurs in Rob. of Glouc. p. 13, l. 297. It is not common in early ME., and is, practically, merely a corruption of maiden, by the loss of final n, rather than a form derived from AS. maeo or maeoð, a maiden (Grein, ii. 216). 2. The usual early ME. word is maiden or meiden, Ancrén Riwele, pp. 64, 166. AS. maegen, a maiden (Grein, ii. 216); also mæden, Mark, v. 41; later text, maide. β. AS. maglen, cognate with OHG. magatīn, is formed from maeoð (for maeoð) by adding the suffix -in (cf. L. -inus); see March, A. S. Gram. art. 228. γ. Maegoð is cognate with Goth. magatins, a virgin, maid (= G. magoð), where the suffix -ins answers to the Idg. suffix *-i-*so. The base mag- is allied to Goth. mag-us, a boy, a child, Luke, ii. 43; also to Icel. mógr, a boy, youth, son. 6. The orig. sense of magus is 'a growing lad,' one increasing in strength; from the Teut. base MAC, to have power, whence also nicht, nain. See May (1). See Stokes-Fick, p. 198. Der. maiden-lood = AS. maidenhād, Grein, ii. 216; also spelt maiden-head = ME. meidenhead or maydenhead, Gower, C. A. ii. 230, bk. v. 3068, which is a mere variant of maiden-head; maiden-ly, Mids. Nr. Dr. iii. 2. 217; Skelton, Garden of Laurel, l. 865; maiden-li-ness; maiden-hair; also maid-child, Levit. xii. 5.

MAIL (BLACK), a forced tribute. (Scand.) Mail is a Scottish term for rent. Jamieson cites the phr. burrow-mailles, duties payable within boroughs, from the Acts of Jas. I. c. 8 (A. D. 1424). Black-mail is mentioned in the Acts of Jas. VI. c. 21 (1567), and in the Acts of Elizabeth, an. 43, cap. 13, as a forced tribute paid to moss-troopers; see Jamieson and Blount. Spelman is right in supposing that it meant black rent or black money, a jocose allusion to tribute paid in cattle, &c., as distinct from rent paid in silver or white money; Blount shows that the term black money occurs in 9 Edw. III. cap. 4, and white money is not uncommon. Blount also cites the term black-rents. A Northern form. — Icel. mál, speech, law-suit, agreement; máli, agreement, payment. Cognate with AS. maþel, mál, a meeting, speech; Goth. mahtā, a meeting-place.

(D1132). = AF. makaym, Liber Albus, p. 288; OF. makhain (Godefroy); MF. makhain, 'a maim, or . . . abatement of strength . . . by hurts received'; Cot. Defences the verb makhain, 'to maim'; id. Cf. Ital. magna, a defect, blemish; whence magnanari, to spoil, vitiate. β. OF uncertain origin; Bret. machañ, mutilation (whence machañ, to maim, mutilate), is borrowed from F. (Thurneysen). Some derive the Ital. word from OHG. mann, a man, and kamjan*, to mutilate, from the OHG. adj. kam, maimed (Körting). In the OF. form, the prefix is me-; see Mis- (2). Der. main, verb.

MAINOUR. (F.-L.) In the phr. 'taken with the mainour', or later, 'taken in the manner'; see 1 Hen. IV. 4. 347. See note to Manner. We find pris ov mainoure (where ov = F. avec), Stat. of the Realm, i. 30, an. 1275. Mount, in his Nomolexicon, explains mainour as meaning 'the thing that a thief steals'; and 'to be taken with the mainour, as 'with the thing stoll about him, flagrante delicto'. It is lit. 'with the manoeuvre, and therefore refers rather to the act than the thing'; see Cotgrave, s.v. flagrant; E. Webb, Travels, 1590, ed. Arber, p. 28. The Anglo-F. mainour, also mainour (Stat. See Malice and Habit. ¶ The usual derivation is that given by Diez, who imagined F. malade to answer to male aptus; there appears to be no authority for the phrase, which (like ineptus) would mean 'foolish' rather than 'ill'. See Körting, § 5833.

MALAPERT, saucy, impudent, ill-behaved. (F.-L.) The true sense is 'ill-skilled', 'ill-bred'. In The Court of Love, 737 (after A. [The OF. apert, 'open, evident', is a different word, and der. from L. apertus, open; but the OF. apert and apert were much confused, as, e.g. in Godefroy, though kept apart by Cotgrave.] ¶ By a complete confusion of L. apertus and expertus, we find OF. expert used in the sense of 'open'. More, Works, p. 941 b; and in Dictionaries of the Philosophers, pr. by Caxton, fol. 11 b, l. 18. = L. malefactorē, acc. of malefactor, an evil-doer. = L. male, adv., badly; and factor, a doer, from facere, to do. MALISON, a curse. (F.—L.) In early use. ME. malison, spelt malison in Havelok, 436.—AF. malicoun, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 234; OF. malison, in Godefroy. A doublet of malediction, just as benison is of benediction; see Malediction and Benison.

MALL (2), the name of a public walk. (F.—L.) Preserved in the name of the street called Pall Mall, and in The Mall in St. James's Park. In Pope, Rape of the Lock, v. 133. 'To walk in the Mall'; Parsons, Wapping Old Stairs, l. 9. Named from MF. pale-maille, 'a game wherein a round bow bowle is with a mallet struck through a high arch of iron,' &c. A representation of the game is given in Knight's Old England, vol. ii. fig. 2152.—Mltal. palamaglio, 'a stick with a mallet at one end to play at a wooden ball with; also, the name of such a game'; Florio. See my Notes on E. Etym., p. 204; s. v. Pall-mall.

MALLARD, a wild drake. (F.—L.) ME. malard. Malarde*, anar; Prompt. Parv.—OF. malard, also maslard, 'a mallard, or wild drake'; Cot. Formed with suffix -ard (of G. origin); and certainly from OF. masle (mod. F. maile), male; see Male. β. The suffix -ard (= Goth. hardus, G. hart, hard) was much used in forming masculine proper names, to give the idea of force or strength; hence it was readily added to OF. masle, producing a form masl-ard, in which the notion of 'male' is practically reduplicated. See Intro. to Hatzfeld, Etym. Dict. § 147. γ. As this etymology, given by Diez, offers some difficulty, Hatzfeld suggests that Malar (Malard in Godefroy) was a proper name, playfully given to the bird; and that this name is from OHG. Madal-hard, a proper name cognate with AS. Matelheard (Birch, Cart. Saxon, i. 280). And in fact the ME. form mauldard, 'mallard' occurs in the Liber Cure Curorum, p. 27. But it represents the OF. mauldard, i. wild duck (Godefroy), f. of maulard; from AF. madle, male, variant of OF. masle (above). For AF. di = OF. di, cf. medlar, medley.

Formed with suffix -able from obs. L. malleare*, to hammer, of which the pp. malleatus occurs.—L. malleus, a hammer; see Mall (1). Der. malleabili-ty, malleable-ness (see Locke, On Hum. Underst.

'single entrance'.—Gk. μῶν-η, fem. of μῶν, single; εμβασία, entrance, from εἰν, in, βαίω, to go. Cf. Span. malvasia, Ital. malvasia, malvesy. ¶ The second m in Malmsey is due to the form Monemvasia.

See Spinster.

MALTREAT, to treat ill. (F.—L.) 'Yorick indeed was never better served in his life; but it was a little hard to maltreat him after'; Sterne, Tristram Shandy, vol. ii. c. 17, not far from the end.—F. maltraiter, to treat ill. Cf. Ital. maltrattare, to treat ill.—L. male, adv., ill, badly; and tracere, to treat, handle. See Malice and Treat. Der. maltreat-ment, MF. maltraitement, 'hard dealing'; Cot.

MALVERSATION, fraudulent behaviour. (F.—L.) 'Mal-versation, ill conversation, misdeameour, misuse'; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.—F. malversation, 'misdeameour'; Cot. Regularly formed (with suffix -ation) from F. malverser; Cot. gives malverser en son office, to behave himself ill in his office.—L. male, adv., badly; and versari (pp. versatus), to dwell, be engaged in, from versare, frequentative form of vertere, to turn. See Malice and Verser.

MAMALUKE, MAMELUKE, an Egyptian light horse-soldier. (F.—Arab.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 279 f. Also in Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, l. 476; see Spec. of Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 143, and the note.—MF. Mamaluq, 'a Mameluke, or light-horseman'; Cot. [Cf. Span. Mameluco, Ital. Mamaluco.] They were a corps of slaves.—Arab. mamālūk, a purchased slave or captive; lit. 'possessed'.—Arab. root malaka, he possessed; Rich. Dict. pp. 1494, 1488.

MAMMA, an infantine term for mother. (E.) Seldom found in books, except of late years; it occurs in Prior's poems, entitled 'Venus Mistaken,' and 'The Dove.' 'The babe shall now begin to tattle and call her Mamma'; Lily, Euphues, ed. Arber, p. 129. In Skinner and Cotgrave it is spelt mam; Cot. gives: Mammam, the voice of infants, mam. Skelton has mammy, Garl. of Laurel, l. 974. The spelling mamma is doubtless pedantic, and due to the L. mamma; it should rather be mama, as it is merely a repetition of ma, an infantine syllable. It may also be considered as an E. word; most other languages have something like it. Cf. MF. mammam, cited above, mod. F. maman; Span. mama, Ital. mamma, Du. mama,

G. mama, mámme, memma, all infantine words for mother; also W. mam, mother, L. mamma, mother, Gk. máma, Russ. mama, &c. ¶ We have no evidence against the borrowing of the word from French; still it was most likely, not so borrowed. Brugmann, ii. § 179, 947.

MAMMALIA, the class of animals that suckle their young. (L.) Modern and scientific; not in Johnson. Formed from L. mammilla, belonging to the breasts. = L. mamma, the breast. β. There is a doubt whether the word is the same as L. mamma, mother; if it be, we may consider it as of infantine origin; see above. γ. Brugmann separates them (i. § 587), and explains this mamma as mad-ma*, from mad-ere, to be wet; cf. Gk. μαῖος (< mað-yos*), μαῖός (< mað-rós*), breast; mað-ieu, to flow away. Der. mammalian; we also use mammal as a convenient short term for 'one of the mammalia.'

MAMMILLARY, pertaining to the breasts. (L.) 'The mammillary teats.' Dr. Robinson, Endoxa (ed. 1658), p. 51; Todd's Johnson. Coined from L. mammilla, adj. formed from mammilla, a teat, dimin. of mamma, a breast. See MAMMALIA.

MAMMON, riches, the god of riches. (L. — Gk. — Syriac.) In A. V. Matt. vi. 24; Luke, xvi. 9. = L. mammōna, Matt. vi. 24 (Vulgate). = Gk. μαμωνά; ibid. = Syr. mammōnā; a word which often occurs in the Chaldee Targums of Onkelos and later writers, and in the Syriac version, and means 'riches.' Dict. of the Bible. Cf. Heb. matnām, a hidden treasure; from matnam, to hide (t = teth).

MAMMOTH, an extinct species of elephant. (Russ. — Tatar?) 'An entire mammoth, flesh and bones, was discovered in Siberia, in 1799.' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. — Russ. mamant, a mammoth. — Siberian mammont. 'From Tatar manma, the earth, because the Tungus and Yakoots believed that this animal worked its way in the earth like a mole;' Webster. But it does not appear that there is any such Tatar word. See N. and O. 9. S. xi. 286.

MAN, a human being. (F.) MF. man, Chaucer, C. T. I. 43. AS. manu, also mon; Grein, ii. 105. † Du. man; Icel. maðr (for manur*); also man; Swed. man; Dan. mand (with excrement d); Goth. manus; G. mann; [the G. mensch = mannisch, i. e. mannish, human]. Allied to Skt. man, Vedic manus, a man. β. Connected by some with Skt. man, to think; see MIND. But it is unlikely that the orig. sense could have been 'thinker.' Der. man-child, Gen. xvii. 10; man-ful, 1ylgate, Complaint of the Black Knight, st. 60; man-ful-ty, Two Gent. iv. 1. 28; man-ful-ness; manhood, Chaucer, C. T. 758 (A 756); man-of-war, I.uke, xxiii. 11; man-kind, q. v.; man-ly, ME. manlich, P. Plowman, B. v. 260, from AS. manlic, man-like, see Grein, ii. 211; man-li-ness; man-slaughter, ME. man-slaughter, Cursor Mundi, 25772; man-slay-er, ME. mansler, Trevisa, iii. 41, l. 8, Wyclif, John, viii. 44. Also manu, vb., Rich. II, ii. 3. 54. Also man-like, Antony, i. 4. 5; man-ly, adv., Mach. iv. 3. 23; mann-ish, As You Like It, i. 3. 123, Chaucer, C. T. 5202 (B 782); man-queller, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 1. 58, Wyclif, Mark, vi. 27; man-ik-in, q. v.

MF. manycle, Wyclif, Ps. cxlix. 8, earlier text; where the later text has manicle. = AF. manicle, Vie de St. Auban; OF. manicle, pl. manicles, 'manicles, hand-fetters, or gypes;' Cot. = L. manicula, dimin. of manus, a long sleeve, glove, gauntlet, manacle, handcuff. = L. manus, the hand; see MANUAL. Der. manacle, vb., Temp. i. 2. 461.

MANAGE, government of a horse, control, administration. (F. — Ital. — L.) Orig. a sb., but now superseded by management. 'Wanting the manage of unruly jakes;' Rich. II, iii. 3. 179. = MF. manage, 'the manage, or managing of a horse;' Cot. Mod. F. manège. = Ital. maneggio, 'a business, a managing, a handling, . . . an exercise;' Florio. Particularly used of managing horses; the mod. Ital. maneggio means 'a riding-school.' The lit. sense is 'a handling;' the word being formed from maneggiare, 'to manage, handle.' = Ital. mano, the hand. = L. manum, acc. of manus, the hand; see MANUAL. Der. manage, vb., to handle, Rich. II, iii. 2. 118; maneg-er, l. 1. L. i. 2. 188; manage-able, manage-able-ness; manage-ment (a coined word), used by Bp. Hall in a Fast Sermon, April 5, 1628 (K.). Doublet, manège, from mod. F. manège. ¶ Not to be confused with ME. menage, a household, K. Alisaundre, 2087, from OF. maisonage, MF. mesnage ('ot.), mod. F. ménage; this OF. maisonage stands for maison-ager, extended from F. maison, a mansion; see MANSION. (Scheler.)

MANATEE, a sea-cow, a dugong. (Span. — Carib.) The word occurs in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 404; spelt manate in R. Eden, ed. Arber, p. 231, l. 2 (1555). = Span. manatí, a sea-cow; also written manato. A West Indian word; spelt manatouin in Raymond Breton's Dictionnaire Caribé-François; Auxerre, 1665; p. 349. ¶ The Malay name is dugong, s. v.

MANCIEB, a loaf of fine wheaten bread. (F. — L. ¶) 'Of breade

. . the most excellent is the manchet,' v. r. 'manchet;' Harrison, Desc. of England, l. k. ii. ch. 6. ME. manchete, Liber Cure Cucorum, p. 53. β. The word seems to refer to quality; and, if so, is prob. different from Norm. dial. manchette, bread made in the shape of a crown, and also called couronne; i. e. of an annular shape; Moisy, Robin; prob. from manchette, 'a cuff or hand-ruff;' Cot.; which is also annular. Dimin. of manche, a sleeve. = L. manica, a sleeve; from L. manus, the hand; see MANICULE.

MANCHINELLE, a W. Indian tree. (F. — Span. — L.) 'Manchinel-tree, a tree that grows wild in the woods of Jamaica, the fruit of which is as round as a ball.' Phillips, ed. 1706. Spelt manchinel, W. Dampier, New Voy. (1699), iii. 67; manicell, Capt. Smith, Works, p. 905. = F. manicelle (Hatzfeld). [Mahn gives Ital. manicella, but it must be modern, and borrowed from Spanish; the name, like many W. Indian words, is certainly Spanish, not Italian.] = Span. manzanillo, a little apple-tree; hence, the manchinel tree, from the apple-like fruit; dimin. of Span. manzana, an apple, also a pommel. Cf. Span. manzanal, an orchard of apple-trees. = L. Mativna, neut. pl. of Mativnus, adj.; we find Mativna mala, and Mativna poma, applied to certain kinds of apples. The adj. Mativnus, Matian, is from L. Matius, the name of a Roman gens (Lewis).

MANCIPLE, a purveyor, esp. for a college. (F. — L.) Not obsolete; still in use in Oxford and Cambridge. ME. maniple, Chaucer, C. T. 569 (A 567). Ital. manipolo, 'a slave, vassal, subject, captive, maniple, farmer, bailly, &c.; Florio. = L. manipulum, a slave, org. possession, property, lit. a taking in the hand; see Maine, Ancient Law, p. 317. (f. L. manipuli, decl. stem of manepo, a taker in hand. = L. man-, base of man-us, the hand; cap-, weakened form of capo, base of cap-ere, to take. See MANUAL and CAPIVE).

MANDARIN, a Chinese governor of a province. (Port. — Malay — Skt.) Not a Chinese, but a Malay word; brought to us by the Portuguese. In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 395; and in E. Grimston], tr. of Acosta, 1604, p. 370. = Port. mandarin, a mandarin. = Malay (and Hindi) mantri, 'a counsellor, minister of state; ferdana mantri, the first minister, viz.: Marsden, Malay Dict., p. 334. = Skt. mantrin, a counsellor; mahā-mantrin, the prime minister. = Skt. mantra, a holy text, charm, prayer, advice, counsel. Formed with suffix -tra, from Skt. man, to think, mind, know; cf. Skt. man-tu, man-tr, an adviser. = √MEN, to think; see MIND. (See Yule.)

MANDATE, a command, order, charge. (F. — L.) In Hamlet, iii. 4. 204. = MF. mandat, 'a mandate, or mandamus, for the pre-ferment of one to a benefice.' Cot. = L. mandatum, a charge, order, commission. = L. mandatus, pp. of mandare, to commit to one's charge, enjoin, command. β. Lit. 'to put into one's hand,' from man-, base of manus, the hand, and dare, to give. [So also maneps = a taker by the hand; from man and capere, to take.] See MANUAL and DARE (r). Brugmann, i. § 580 (2, b). Der. mandat-ory. Doublet, maundy, in the term Maundy Thursday, q. v. From L. mandare are also counter-mand, com-mand, de-mand, re-mand, com-mend, re-com-mend, commodore. MANDILION, a soldier's cloak. (Ital. — Span. — Arab. — L.) See examples in Nares. = Ital. mandiglione, 'a mandillion, souldier's iacket;' Florio. = Span. mandil, a coarse apron. = Arab. mandil, a table-cloth, towel, mantle. = L. manile, a napkin.

MANDOLIN, a kind of guitar. (F. — Ital. — Gk.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. 'Lutes and mandolins;' T. Moore; Oh! come to me when daylight sets; l. 7. = F. mandoline, a mandolin. = Ital. mandolino, dimin. of mandola, a kind of guitar (there were several kinds). Mandola is a corruption of mandora (cf. F. mandore), and, again, this is for bandora = Ital. bandora. See further under Banjo.

MANDRAKE, a narcotic plant. (AF. — L. — Gk.) In Gen. xxx. 14, where the Bible of 1551 has pl. mandragoras. Also mandrake in Palsgrave. ME. mandragore, Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 19, l. 613. AS. mandragora, Cockayne's Leechdoms, l. 244. Mandrake (also spelt mandrage in Minshew) is the AF. mandrake, also mandrage (Bozon); a shortened form of mandragora, the form used by Shak. in Oth. iii. 3. 330. Cf. OF. mandragore, Ital. mandragora, Span. mandragora. = L. mandragoras, gen. -ae; Gen. xxx. 14. = Gk. μανδραγώρας, the name of the plant; of uncertain origin.

MANDREL, the revolving shank in which turners fix their work in a lathe. (F. — L.) 'Manderil, a kind of wooden pulley, that is part of a turner's leath.' Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. Corrupted from F. mandrin, a punch, a mandrel (Hamilton). β. Marked by Littre as of unknown origin; but prob. derived from a L. type mandar-* inum, allied to Ocean mamphur, (apparently) a mandrel or part of a lathe (Lewis). Cf. also Icel. mándull, handle of a handmill; Lith. mentur, something that twirls; Skt. mantha-s, a churning-stick, manthana-s (the same), from math, manth, to churn. See Brugmann, i. 55 571, 580 (2, b), 757.

MANDRILL, a kind of baboon. (E.) Nares, s.v. Drill, shows that mandrill occurs in Smith's Voyage to Guinea (1744), who thought the animal was so called from its likeness to a man. Compounded of E. man, and drill, 'a large overgrown ape or baboon.' Blount's Gloss. The origin of drill or drill is unknown; perhaps allied to MDn. drillen, 'to goe, trot, or run up and downe,' Hexham; whence also E. drill, v. See Drill in Nares, and in the N. E. D.

MANE, long hair on the neck of a horse, &c. (E.) ME. mane, King Alisaunder, 1957. AS. manu, mane; Erfurt gloss, (1182.) Icel. min (gen. manor, pl. manar), a mane; Swed. and Dan. man: Du. man (Sewel); MDu. mane (Hexham); G. mähne, OHG. mana. Cf. W. myngen, a horse's mane, myng, a mane; from mun, the neck. So also Irish mang, a mane, muine, a collar (W. mynei, the hame of a horse-collar) from Irish muin, the neck. Hence E. mane is plainly connected with Skt. manya, the tendon forming the nape of the neck; and with L. monile, a necklace (Stokes-Fick, p. 216).

MANGGE, the control of horses; see Mangege.

MANGANESE, the name of a metal. (F.-Ital.-L.-Gk.) The metal was discovered in 1774 (Littre). But the term is much older, otherwise used. 'Manganese, so called from its likeness in colour and weight to the magnes or loadstone, is the most universal material used in making glass.' Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674.—MF. manganes, 'a certain mineral which, being melted with glass, amends the colour thereof.' Cot.—Ital. manganes, 'a stuff or stone to make glasses with; also a kind of mineral stone.' Florio. β. A perverted form of mangnesia, also written mangnesia. See Cent. Dict., and Schade, p. 1395; and see Magnesia. Palsgrave has mangnet for magnet.

MANGEL, the scab or itch in dogs, &c. (F.-L.) Minshew, ed. 1627, gives 'the mange' as sb., and mangie as adj. Cf. 'a mangy dog,' Timsen, iv. 3. 371; 'In wretched beggary And mangy misery,' Skelton, How the Doughty Duke of Albany, &c., ll. 137, 138. But earlier, the sb. is mangie, as in 'the mangie, or the scurvie,' in E. G., tr. of Acosta, p. 465. ME. manicue (— manjuw); see N. E. D.—OF. manjue, mange; cf. mod. Norman manjüre, Guernesey manjue (Moisy).—OF. manjuier, manjier, F. mangier, to cat. ['The MF. sb. for 'mange' is mangecou.] See further under Manger. Der. mangi-ness.

MANGEL-WURZEL, a variety of beet. (G.) For mangold-wurzel, also sometimes used.—G. mangold-wurzel, beet-root.—G. mangold, MHG. mangolt, beet, derived by Schade from the personal name Mangolt; and wurzel, root, allied to Wort (1).

MANGER, an eating-trough for cattle. (F.-L.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 1139 l. MF. maungeur, Cath. Anglicum (1483).—OF. mangeure (Godefroy); F. mangeure, 'a manger'; Cot.—F. manger, to eat.—L. manducare, to eat.—L. manducūs, a glutton.—L. mandere, to chew. See Mandible.

MANGLE (1), to render maimed, tear, mutilate. (F.-G.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 538 f.—AF. mangler, to maim (Godefroy); for mahangler, to maim, Langtoft, i. 254. Frequent form of OF. makaigner, to maim.—OF. makaing, a maim, a hurt; see Maim. Der. mangler.

MANGLE (2), a roller for smoothing linen; vb., to smooth linen. (Du.—Late L.—Gk.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. 'A movement capable of being applied to mangles and calenders.' Ann. Reg. (1799), p. 399. Borrowed from Dutch; cf. Du. mangelen, to roll with a rolling-pin; linnen mangelen, to roll linen on a rolling-pin; mangelstok, a rolling-pin (Sewel); een mangelstok, 'a smoothing role, or a battle-dore' (Hexham). The corresponding Ital. word is mangano, 'a kind of presse to presse buckram'; Florio. Both Du. and Ital. words are modifications of Late L. manganum, mangona, a very common word as the name of a military engine for throwing stones; see Mangonel. The mangle, being worked with an axis and winch, was named from its resemblance to the old war-engine; sometimes it was reduced to an axis or cylinder worked by hand. The Ital. mangano also means 'a mangonel.'—Gk. μύριον, a machine for defending fortifications; also, the axis of a pulley. See Prellwitz.

MANGO, the fruit of an E. Indian tree. (Span.—Port.—Malay.—Tamil.) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 350.—Span. mango.—Port. manga.—Malay manigga, 'the mango-fruit, of which the varieties are numerous'; Marsden's Dict., p. 327. Formerly mangkū (see Yule).—Tamil mān-kūy, i.e. mān-fruit, or fruit of the tree called māmaram, i.e. mān-tree (from mām and maram, wood, tree); cf. Catamaran (Yule).

MANGONEL, a war-engine for throwing stones. (F.—Late L.—Gk.) ME. mangonel, in a MS. of the time of Edw. II; Polit.

Songs, ed. Wright, p. 69.—AF. mangonel, Langtoft, i. 494; OF. mangonel, later mangoneus, 'an old-fashioned sling or engine, &c.'; Cot.—Late L. mangonellus, dimin. of mangona, manganum, a war-engine.—Gk. μύριον; see Mangle (2).

MANGOSTEEN, a fruit. (Malay.) Formerly mangostan.—Malay mangustan (C. P. G. Scott); manggesta (Marsden).

MANGROVE. (Hybrid; Malay and E.) 'A sort of trees called mangroves.' Eng. Garner, vii. 371 (ab. 1689). My belief is that the second syllable is nothing but the E. word grove, and has reference to the peculiar growth of the trees, which form a close thicket of some extent. Again, the tree is sometimes called the mangle (F. mangle, from Span. mangle); so that mangrove may well stand for mang-grove or 'grove of mangles or mangles'. The syllable mang may be due to the Malay name for the tree, viz. manggi-manggi; see Pijnappel's Malay-Dutch Dict. p. 133. β. On the other hand, the Span. mangle, a mangrove, appears to be of S. American origin (Yule). Cf. Brazil. mangue, Hist. Nat. Brasil, i. 113.

MANIA, madness, frenzy. (L.—Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. [ME. manic, Chaucer, C. T. 1376, is from F. manic, 'madness'; Cot.]—L. mania.—Gk. μᾶνία, madness, frenzy. β. The orig. sense is 'mental excitement'; cf. μῦρος, mind, spirit, force; Skt. manu-, anger, fury. See Mind. Der. mania-r, split maniac in Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674, from F. manique, 'mad,' Cot.; as if from a Lat. maniacus*. Hence maniacal.

MANIFEST, evident, apparent. (F.—L.) ME. manifest, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 10, l. 104.—F. manifeste, 'manifest'; Cot.—L. manifestus, evident. β. The lit. sense is (probably) 'struck by the hand,' hence, palpable.—L. mani-, for manu-, from manus, the hand; and -festus = -fatus, pp. of obs. verb fendere*, to strike, occurring in the comp. dē-fendere, of-fendere; cf. in-fensus, in-fensus, hostile.—Gk. μᾶνιος, to strike; see Defend (Bréal). And see Manual. Der. manifest-ly, manifest-ness; manifest, vb., ME. manifesten, Chaucer, Boeth. bk. ii. pr. 7, l. 31; manifest-ation; also manifesto, q. v.

MANIFESTO, a written declaration. (Ital.—L.) 'Manifesto or evidence'; Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 17. § 5.—Ital. manifesto, sb., a manifesto.—Ital. manifesto, adj., manifest.—L. manifestus; see Manifest.

Du. manneke, by alteration of the suffix. Formed, with double dimin. suffix -ken, from Du. manne, for man, a man. See Man. Cf. G. männchen, from mann.

MANIOC, the cassava-plant. (Port.—Brazil.) Better spelt mandioc.—Port. mandioca (Span. mandioca in Pineda).—Brazil. mandioca, the root of the cassava-plant. Cp. 'mandiaba, maniaba, cujus radix mandioca vocatur;' Hist. Brasil, ii. 65. It is spelt mandiuhoca in the same, l. 52. Granada gives the Guarani name as mandiôg.

MANIPLE, a handful; small band of soldiers, a kind of priest's scarf. (F.—L.) 'Our small divided maniples, i.e. hands of men; Milton, Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 48, l. 6. Also manypule, a scarf; Supp. to Palsgrave, p. 1068, l. 31.—MF. manipule, 'a fistful'; Cot.—L. manipulus, a handful; hence, a wisp of straw, &c. used as an ensign; and hence, a company of soldiers under the same standard, a band of men.—L. mani-, for manu-, for manus, the hand; and -pulus, lit. filling, from the weak grade (ps) of the root pl-*, to fill; cf. L. plenus, full, and AS. full. See Manual and Full. Der. manipulate, q. v.

MANIPULATE, to handle. (L.) A modern word; not in Johnson; the sb. manipulation (but not the verb) was added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. The verb was prob. suggested by the sb. manipulation, which appears in F. in 1716. Even the sb. is quite a coined word, there being nothing nearer to it than the L. manipulātum, by troops, an adv. formed from manipulus, a troop. The word manipulate should mean 'to fill the hands' rather than merely to use them. Altogether, the word has little to recommend it on etymological grounds; but it is now well established. Perhaps the suffix has been confused with that of inter-polate. Der. manipul-ation, -ive, -or.

MANITO, a spirit, a fetish. (Algonkin.) 'Gitche Manito, the mighty;' Longfellow, Hiawatha, xiv. From the Algonkin manitu, manito, a spirit, a demon (Cuq).

MANKIND, the race of men. (E.) ME. mankinde, Gower, C. A. ii. 83; bk. iv. 2443. The final d is excrement, the older form being mankin, Ormulum, 799. AS. mancynn, mankind; Grein, ii. 207.—AS. man, a man; and cynn, kind, race; see Man and Kind.

MANNA, the food supplied to the Israelites in the wilderness of ARABIA. (L.—Gk.—Heb.) In A. V. Exod. xvi. 15; Numb. xi. 7; Deut. viii. 3; etc.—L. manna, Deut. viii. 3 (Vulgate); but in Exod. xvi. 15 the Vulgate has manhu, and in Numb. xi. 7 it has man.—Gk. μᾶνα.—Heb. mān, manna. β. Two explanations are given: (1) from Heb. mān hu, what is this? from the enquiry which the Hebrews made when they first saw it on the ground, where mān is the neuter interrogative pronoun; see Exod. xvi. 15. But this is a popular etymology; since mān is not Hebrew, but Aramaic (Gesenius). And (2) that the sense of mān is 'it is a gift' (cf. Arab. mann, beneficence, grace, favour, also manna, Rich. Dict. p. 1495). See Gesenius, Heb. Dict. (1883), p. 468.

MANER. way, fashion, habit, sort, kind, style. (F.—L.) In early use. ME. manere, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 51, l. 30. —AF. manere, Stat. Realm, i. 27 (1275); OF. maniere, 'manner'; Cot. Mod. F. manière; properly 'habit'. Orig. fem. of OF. manier, adj. manual, easily managed (Godefroy); allied to OF. manier, 'to handle, hand, manage, wield'; Cot.—Late L. type manirius*, for L. manūrius, handy.—L. manus, for manus, the hand; see MANUAL. Der. manner-ly, in Skelton, who wrote a poem called Mannerly Margery Mylk and Ale; manner-li-ness; un-manner-ly, Hamlet, iii. 2. 364; manner-ism. ☞ The phrase to be taken in the manner (a law phrase) is a corruption of to be taken with the mainour; the L. phrase is cum manuoperis captus. Here mainour is the same word as manœuvre, q.v. See manure in Croft's gloss. to Sir T. Elyot's Gouvernour. And see MAINOUR.

MANŒUVRE. dexterous management, stratagem. (F.—L.) Introduced into E. in the 18th cent. Added to Johnson's Dict. by Todd, who cites it from Burke, but without a satisfactory reference. —F. manœuvre, a manoeuvre, properly a work of the hand.—Late L. manuopera (more commonly manopera), a working with the hand. [Cf. Span. manobra, handiwork; manobrar, to work with the hands, manoeuvre; Ital. manovra, the working of a ship; manovrare, to steer a ship.—L. manū operari, to work with the hand.—L. manū, abl. of manus, the hand; and operari, to work, from opera, work. See MANUAL and OPERATE. Der. manœuvre, vb., manœuvre, Doublet, manure.

Plowman, B. v. 595.—OF. manoir, 'a mansion, manor, or manor-house'; Cot.; formerly also spelt manoir (Godefroy). Properly 'a place to dwell in'; from OF. manoir, manoir, to dwell (Godefroy)—L. manire, to dwell, remain; see MANSION. Der. manor-house, L. L. i. 1. 208; manor-seat; manor-al.

MANSE. a clergyman's house, in Scotland. (L.) 'Manse, a habitation, a farm'; Blount's Law Lexicon, ed. 1691. An old law term.—Late L. mansa, a farm.—L. mansa, fem. of mansus, pp. of manire, to dwell; see MANION.

MANSION. a large house, dwelling-place. (F.—L.) ME. mansyon, Chaucer, C. T. 1976 (A 1974).—OF. mansyon, a dwelling-place; Burguy.—L. mansiónem, acc. of mansio, a stopping, a place of alod; cf. mansus, pp. of manire, to dwell.—Gk. μᾶνα, to stay, remain; allied to μᾶνα, staying, steadfast.—MEN, to remain. Der. mansion-house; mansion-ry, Macb. i. 6. 5; from L. manere are also manse, manor, permanent, remain, remnant. And see manial, manerie, message.

MANTLE. a shelf over a fire-place. (F.—L.) Hardly used except in the comp. mantel-piece and mantel-shelf; formerly used in the comp. mantle-tree, which occurs in Cotgrave, s.v. mantenu. In old fire-places, the mantle slopes forward like a hood, to catch the smoke; the word is a mere doublet of MANTLE, q.v. 'Mantylire of a chimney, manteau d'une cheminée'; Palgrave. ☞ The difference in spelling between mantel and mantle is an absurdity. Der. mantel-piece, shelf.

MANTLE. a cloak, covering. (F.—L.) Better spelt mantel, as it is the same word as that above. In early use. ME. mantel, Layamon, 14755, 15274. [Cf. AS. mantel, a mantle, Pa. cviii. 28.] —OF. mantel (Godefroy), later manteau, 'a cloak, also a mantle-tree of a chimney'; Cot.—L. mantellum, a napkin; also, a means of covering, a cloak (in a figurative sense); cf. L. mantile, mantile, a napkin, towel. A shortened form appears in the Late L. mantum, a short cloak, used by Isidore of Seville, whence Ital. and Span. mantó, F. manité, a mantle. For the origin, see Brugmann, i. §§ 134, 483 (7). Der. mantle, vb., to cloak, cover, Temp. v. 67; also mantle, vb., to gather a scum on the surface, Merch. Ven. i. 1. 89; mantel-et (with dimin. suffix), 'a short purple mantle, . . . in fortification, a moveable pent-house'; Phillips, ed. 1706, from F. mantel, 'a little mantle, a moveable pent-house'; etc. Cotgrave. MANTUA. a lady's gown. (Ital.) Seldom used except in the comp. mantua-maker, a lady's dressmaker. 'Mantoe or Mantua gown, a loose upper garment, now generally worn by women, instead of a straight body'd gown'; Phillips, ed. 1706. 'By th' yellow mantos of the bride'; Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1. 700. Manto is from Ital. (or Span.) mantó, a mantle, or even from F. mantau; but Mantua gown must refer to Mantua in Italy, though this connexion seems to have arisen from mere confusion. As to Ital. mantó, see MANTLE.

MANUAL. done by the hand, suitable for the hand. (F.—L.) We recognize it as a F. word from its use after its sb., in such phrases as 'sign manual', or 'seal manual'; the spelling has been conformed to the L. vowel in the final syllable. Shak. has seal manual, Venus, l. 516. Formerly spelt manuel, as in Cotgrave. Cf. 'syne manuelli', sign manual; Fifty Eng. Wills, ed. Furnivall, p. 83, l. 18 (1428).—F. manuel, 'manuel, handy, of the hand'; Cot.—L. manuālis, manual.—L. manu-, for manus, the hand. β. The sense of manus is 'the measurer'; formed (with suffix -nu-) from mz*, weak grade of ME*, to measure, whence also Skt. mā, to measure, a verb which when used with the prep. nis, out, also means to build, cause, create, compose; cf. also Skt. māna-, sb., measuring, measure; Brugmann, ii. § 106. Der. manual, sb., a hand-book; manual-ly. From L. manus we also have nan-acle, man-age, man-acle, man-egg, man-i-fest, man-i-ple, man-i-pul-ate, man-u-er, man-u-ere, man-u-er; man-u-facture, man-u-mit, man-u-script, a-man-u-ensis; also man-i-tain, a-man-ic-ate, quadru-man-ous, &c.

Coined from Latin.—L. manū, by the hand, abl. of manus; and factura, a making, from facere, to make. See MANUAL and FACT. 'to release from one's power', or 'send away from one's hand'.—L. manū, abl. of manus, the hand; and mittere, to send. See MANUAL and MISILE. Der. manumission, from F. manumission, 'a manumission or dismissing' (Cot.), from L. manumissionem, acc. of manumissio, a dismissal, formed like the pp. manumissus.

MANURE. to enrich with a fertilizing substance. (F.—L.) The old sense was simply 'to work at with the hand.' 'Arable land, which could not be manured [tilled] without people and families, was turned into pasture'; Bacon, Inver VII, ed. Lumby, p. 70, l. 26. 'Manured with industry'; Oth. i. 3. 328. Cf. manure in G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil, bk. iv, ch. f. 1. 72. See French Select Glossary. Manure is a contracted form of manœuvre; see MANŒUVRE and INURE. All from a Teut. type managaz*. Further allied to Irish minic, Gael. minig, W. mynych, frequent, Russ. mnogie, pl. many.

MAP. a representation of the earth, or of a part of it. (F.—L.) The oldest maps were maps of the world, and were called map-monde, as in Gower, C. A. iii. 102; bk. vii. 550. This is a F. form of the L. name mapa mundi, which occurs in Trevisa, i. 27, and in the corresponding passage of Higden's Polychronicon. β. The original sense of L. mapa was a napkin; hence, a painted cloth. According to Quintilian, it is a Punic word. See MAPKIN.

MAPLE. the name of a tree. (E.) ME. maple, mapul; Chaucer, C. T. 2925 (A 2923). AS. mapul-der, the maple-tree; 'Acer, mapulder', Voc. 138. 15; we also find mapolder, a maple, Mapulder-stede, now Maplestead (in Essex), in Thorpe's Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, pp. 146, 493; and Kemble has Maples barus in his index. Hence the AS. name is mapul, mapel; cf. mapel-trēow, Birch, Cart. Saxon. i. 290. The Icel. möppur is borrowed from E.

The etymology is much disputed; see Scheler and Körtling. Bugge suggests a Late L. form maladus*, from L. malus, evil; whence maraud by dissimilation.

MARAVEDI, a small coin, less than a farthing. (Span.—Arab.) In Minshew, ed. 1627. = Span. maravedi, the smallest Span. coin. Called in Port. both marabito and maravedim. MARCH (2), to walk with regular steps, as a soldier. (F.—L? G?) In Spenser, F. Q. v. io. 53. = F. marcher, 'to march, go, pace; Cot. β. Of disputed origin; a good suggestion is Scheler's, who sees in it the notion of regular beating (cf. E. 'to be on the beat', 'to beat time'), and connects it with L. marcus, a hammer, whence a verb marciare*, to beat, could easily have arisen in Late L., and would well express the regular tramp of a marching host. γ. Otherwise, from F. marche, a frontier, from OHG. marka, cognate with AS. maere; see MARCHE (1). Cotgrave has: 'marche, . . . a march, frontier, . . . a march, marching of soldiers.' Franck admits association with AS. grēfa, for which see REEVE (2). Der. markgravis, from Du. markgravin, where -in is a fem. suffix. See MARQUIS.

AS. meare, fem. a boundary. — OSax. marka; Du. mark; G. mark, fem., OHG. marca; Goth. marka, a confine, coast. So also Icel. mörk, f., a forest; orig. a boundary. Teut. type marki*, f. Allied to L. margo, a mark; margin; Zend. meretu, Pers. marz, a border; Irish muig, a mark, province. See Mark (1). The sense of 'boundary' suggested that of 'mark to indicate a boundary'. Doublet, march (1). Cf. margin. MARK (3), the name of a coin. (Scand.) The Old E. mark was valued at 13s. 4d. ME. mark, Chaucer, C. T. 12324 (C 390). AS. mare; i. e. mare goldes = 1 marc of gold, Diplomatarium Aevi Saxon., ed. Thorpe, p. 379. — Icel. mörk; Dan. and Swed. mark, a mark — G. mark, a certain weight of silver, viz. 8 oz.; also a coin. β. Perhaps a particular use of Mark (1), as denoting (1) a fixed weight, and (2) a fixed value. Cf. the use of token to denote a coin.

MARKET, a place of merchandise. (F.—L.) In early use. ME. market, Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 16, l. 491. Late AS. market, Birch, Cart. Saxon. iii. 582; l. 23. — OF. market*, NF. variant of market (Roland, 1150), mod. F. marché. Cf. Walloon markî, Prov. mercatz (Hartsch), Ital. mercato, Span. mercado, a market. — L. mercātum, acc. of mercātus, traffic, trade, also a market (whence also G. markt, Du. markt, Icel. markaðr, &c.). — L. mercātus, pp. of mercāri, to trade. Closely connected with L. merx, merchandise. See Merchant. Doublet, marl. Der. market-able, Temp. v. 266; market-cross, town. And see merchant.

MARL, a rich earth. (F.—L.) ME. marle, marl, Trevisa, ii. 15; see Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 236, ll. 25, 27. Dissyllabic in marle-pit, Chaucer, C. T. 3460. — OF. marle, merle, marle, now spelt marle; cf. Picard and Walloon marle, Gascon marle; and see Littré, s. v. marne. Cot. has the derivative marliere, 'a marle-pit'. — Late L. margila, marl; dimin. of Late L. marga, marl (a common word); Ducauge. It occurs in Pliny, xvii. 6. 4, § 42, who considers it to be a word of Gaulish origin. — The Irish and Gael. marla, W. marl, must be borrowed from F.; the G., Du., Dan., and Swed. marvel are from the L. margila. Der. marly, marl-pit.

MARLINE, a small cord used for binding large ropes, to protect them. (Du.) 'Some the galled ropes with dauby marling bind'; Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, st. 148. — Du. marling, marlijn, a marline; also called marlreep (corruption of marreep). So called from its use in binding ropes. — Du. marren, to tie (MDa. marren, marren, 'to bynde, or to tie knots', Hexham); and lijp (corruptly ling), a line, borrowed from F. ligne, L. linea, a line. Similarly mar-reep, from reep, a rope. The M19a. marren = E. moor, in the expression 'to moor a ship'. See Moore (2) and Line. Der. marline-spike.

MARMALADE, a jam or conserve, gen. made of oranges, but formerly of quinces. (F.—Port.—L.—Gk.) Marmaleit*, Marmelade, a kind of confection made of quinces, or other fruit? Phillips. Spelt marmalad, marmaleit in Levins; marmaleit in Bacc; marmelad in Tyndall, Works, p. 229, col. 2. — MF. marmelade; 'marmelade'; Cot. Mod. F. marmelade. — Port. marmelada, marmelade; orig. made of quinces. Formed with suffix -ada (like that of a fem. pp.) from marmel-o, a quince; thus the sense is 'made of quince'. — L. medimētum, lit. a honey-apple, sometimes applied to a quince, as shown by the allied word medimeli, the syrup of preserved quinces. — Gk. μηλίμυλον, a sweet apple, an apple grafted on a quince; cf. μηλόμυλον, honey flavoured with quince. — Gk. μήλα, honey, cognate with L. mel, honey; and μύλον, an apple. See Mellifluous and Melon.

MARMOSET, a small variety of American monkey. (F.—L.) Formerly applied to a different animal, as the word is older than Columbus. ME. marmosette, marmozette. 'Apes, marmozettes, babewynes [baboons], and many other diverse bestes'; Mandeville's Travels, ed. Halliwell (1866), p. 210; see Wright's note to Temp. ii. 2. — F. marmoset (OF. marmoset), 'the cock of a cestern or fontaine, made like a woman's dug; any antick image, from whose teats water trilleth; any puppet, or antick; any such foolish or odd representation; also, the minion, favorite, or flatterer of a prince'; Cot. It would seem that the word was applied to some kind of ape because of its grotesque antics. β. The origin of OF. marmoset (Cotgrave) looks uncertain; and Scheler's statement that the Late L. vicus mar- moritūrum occurs as a translation of F. rue des Marmosettes turns out to be a mistake; as the L. form is marmositūrum. γ. At the same time, it is perfectly clear that one reason for the use of this particular word as meaning a kind of ape was due to a connexion with the F. word marmot (not to be confused with E. marmot, which may be a different word). Cotgrave has: 'Marmot, a marmoset, or little monkey'; also: 'Marmotte, a she marmoset, or she monkey.' The etym. of this F. marmot is uncertain; the most likely explanation is Scheler's; he takes it to be a dimin. with suffix -ot from OF. merme, little, tiny, lit. very small. This OF. merme is a curious derivative of L. minimus (like OF. arme from L. animus); see Minim. This gives to F. marmot the sense of 'dear little creature', and accounts for the mod. use in the senses of 'puppet' and 'little child' (Hamilton); cf. Ital. marmotta, 'a marmoset, a babie for a child to play withall, a puggle'; Florio. Körtig, § 1678.

MARMOT, a mountain-rat, a rodent animal. (F.—Rom.—L.) Sometimes introduced into Eng. from Ital. Ray speaks of 'the Marmotto or mus Alpinus, a creature as big [as] or bigger than a rabbit'; On the Creation, pt. ii (R.). 'Marmotto, a mountain-rat'; Kersey, ed. 1715. Also Englished from F. marmotte; cf. Ital. marmotta, 'a marmotte, Baretti; substituted for marmotana, 'the mountain-rat, a marmotan'; Torriano. [Cf. OF. marmotaine, marmotan, 'the Alpine mouse, or mountain-rat'; Cot.] — Romansch (Grisons) murmot; cf. O.H.G. murmunti, murmuntio, a marmot. — L. mūr, for mūs, a mouse, and montis, gen. of mons, a mountain. Thus the sense is 'mountain-mouse'. See Mountain and Mouse. ¶ So in Diez. But Körtig (§ 6387) rejects this etymology, and proposes to refer marmot to OF. merme, very small, from L. minimus; cf. Romanian, xlii. 237, and see Marmoset.

MARROON (1), brownish-crimson. (F.—Ital.) Not in Todd's Johnson. 'Marroons or great chestnuts'; Passenger of Benvenuto (1612). Lit. 'chestnut-coloured'. — F. marron, 'the great chestnut'; Cot. — Ital. marrone; Florio gives the pl. as marroni, maroni, 'a kind of greater chestnuts than any we have.' Of unknown origin; Diez suggests a connexion with the L. name Maro. Cf. late Gk. μαράριον, the fruit of the cornel-tree, in Eustathius (12th cent.).

MARROON (2), to put ashore on a desolate island. (F.—Span.—L.—Gk.) It occurs in Scott, The Pirate, c. xlii. Dampier has: 'I was . . . marooned or lost'; Voy. (1699); v. ii. pt. 2, p. 84; cf. p. 95. And see Maroons in Haydn, Dict. of Dates. — F. marron, adj., an epithet applied to a fugitive slave; négre marron, a fugitive slave who takes to the woods and mountains (Littré); hence the E. verb to maroon = to cause to live in a wild country, like a fugitive slave. See Scheler, who points out that the F. word is a clift form of Span. cimarron, wild, unruly; hence, savage. Of unknown origin. β. Some have connected it with Span. cima, a mountain-summit. Cf. Ital. and Port. cima, F. cime, a mountain-top; according to Diez, the OSpan. cima also meant a twig, sprout; from L. cyma, a young sprout of a cabbage. — Gk. κύμα, anything swollen, a wave, young sprout. ¶ Mr. Wedgwood says that 'the fugitive negroes are mentioned under the name of symarons in Hawkins' Voyage, § 68, where they are said to be settled near Panama.' He also cites the following: 'I was in the Spanish service, some twenty years ago in the interior of Cuba, and negro cimarrón or briefly cimarrón, was then an everyday phrase for fugitive or outlawed negroes hidden in the woods and mountains'; Notes and Queries, Jan. 27, 1866. Verified by Granada's Vocab. Rioplatense, which has cimarron, adj., belonging to the hills, said of animals and plants; applied in Span. to slaves.

MARQUE, LETTERS OF, letters authorising reprisals. (F.—Prov.—G.) The old sense of letter of marque was a letter signed by a king or prince authorising his subjects to make reprisals on another country, when they could not otherwise get redress. It is now only used in naval affairs, to show that a ship is not a pirate or a corsair. Falsgrave has: 'I sende forth a letter of marke,' &c. Law of Marque, or [corruptly] Mar; this word is used 27 Edw. III, stat. 2, c. 17, and grows from the German word mark (which, however, is the English form of the word), i. e. limes, a bound or limit. And the reason of this appellation is because they that are driven to this law of reprisal, take the goods of that people (of whom they have received wrong and can get no ordinary justice) when they catch them within their own territories or precincts; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Marque . . . signifies in the ancient statutes of our land as much as reprisals; as An. 4 Hen. V, c. 7, Marques and Reprisals are used as synonyma; and letters of marque are found in the same signification in the same chapter'; id. See also Ducauge, s. v. Marcha. In one instance, cited by Wedgwood and Littré, the OF. marquer seems to mean 'to pillage,' the lit. sense being 'to catch within one's borders.' Littré also shows that the spelling marke was used in the same sense as marque, in this connexion; it would hence appear that marque is lit. a border, and hence a catching within one's borders, as explained by Blount above. — OF. marque, properly a boundary; explained by Cot. as 'a distresse, arrest, or seizure of body or goods.' He also gives: 'Droiet de Marquis, power to arrest the body, and seize the goods of another; granted by the king, and in old time given by the parliament, against a stranger or forreiner.'—Prov. marca (mod. marro), verbal sb. from marcar, to seize by way of reprisal (Hatzfeld); cf. also Prov. marca, a mark.—MHG. marke, OHG. marcha, a march, boundary, border. See MAROH (1) and MAROK (2). The corrupt form letters of mart occurs in Beaum. and Fletcher, Wife for a Month, ii. 1 ('Tony').

MARQUEE, a large field-tent. (F.—G.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. This is one of the words in which a final s has been cut off, from a false idea that marques is a plural form; so also we have sherry for sherris, pen for pease, and 'Chinese' for Chinese, &c. Marquess is nothing but an E. spelling of F. marquis, an officer's tent, large tent, marquee. β. Littré says that marquise, a tent, a little elegant construction, was no doubt so named from marquisse, a marchioness, or lady of rank who was to be protected from the inclemency of the weather. That is, it is short for 'tent of the marchioness.' The F. marquise is the fem. of marquis, a marquis; see MARQUIS.

MARQUETRY, inland work. (F.—MHG.) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 146.—F. marquetrie, 'inlaid work of sundry colours'; Cot.—F. marquetier, 'to work, to diversify, flourish, or work all over with small pieces of sundry colours, also, to spot'; id. Lit. 'to mark slightly, or with spots'; iterative form of marquer, to mark.—F. marque, a mark.—MHG. mark, G. marke, a mark, token; cognate with E. mark; see MARK (1).

MARQUIS, a title of nobility. (F.—Low L.—G.) ME. markis, marquis; Chaucer, C. T. 7940, 8473 (E. 64, 597).—OF. marquis (Hatzfeld), later marquis, 'a marchioness, in old time the governor of a frontier, or frontier town'; Cot. Cf. Prov. and Span. marques, Port. marquis, Ital. marchese.—Low L. marchenis, a prefect of the marches.—Low L. marca, a march, boundary.—OHG. marcha, a march, boundary; see MAROH (1) and MARK (2). ¶ The true OF. form was marquis; altered to markis by the influence of Ital. marchese (with ch as k); Hatzfeld. Der. marquis-ate, in Minshew; also marchioness—Low L. marchionissa, formed with fem. suffix -issa (= Gk. -issa) from Low L. marchion-em, acc. of marchio, a prefect of the marches, which is a variant of marchenis. Also marquee, q.v. Doublet, marquess, Merch. Ven. i. 2. 125, from Span. marques; cf. margrave, q.v.

MARROW (1), pith, soft matter within bones. (E.) ME. marow, marowe, maruqe (with one r), Prompt. Parv. p. 326. More commonly mary, Chaucer, C. T. 12476 (C. 542). AS. meark, marrow, dat. mearge, Voc. 150. 32. OMerc. merg, dat. merg, Corpus gloss. 1308. †Du. merg, marrow, pith; Icel. mergr, marrow; Swed. merg; Dan. marv; G. mark, OHG. marag, marrow. Teut. types mazgom*, mazgoz, m. Further allied to Russ. mazg, marrow; Zend mazga-, ners. magh; and Skt. majjan (for mazjan*), marrow of bones, pith or sap of trees. Root unknown. ¶ The Gael. smior, marrow, strength, Irish smear, grease, W. mer, marrow, do not belong here, but are related to E. smear. Der. marrow-bone, ME. mary-bone, Chaucer, C. T. 382.

MARROW (2), a companion, partner. (Scand.) ME. marow, 'socius'; Prompt. Parv.—Icel. margr, (1) many; (2) friendly; see Vigfusson. Cognate with E. marry; see MARRY.

MARRY, to take for a husband or wife. (F.—L.) Properly 'to provide with a husband.' ME. marien (with one r), Rob. of Glouc. p. 30, l. 700.—F. marier, to marry.—L. maritare, (1) to give a woman in marriage; (2) to take a woman in marriage.—L. maritus, a husband; the fem. marita means lit. provided with a husband, or joined to a male.—L. mar-, for mās, a male. See MALO. Der. marriage, ME. marriage (with one r), Rob. of Glouc. p. 31, l. 726, from F. marriage, which from Late L. maritūticum, a woman's dowry, in use A. D. 1062, later maritūgium (Ducange); marriage-able, marriage-able-ness. And see MARITAL.

MARSALA, a wine. (Ital.) From Marsala, a town on the W. coast of Sicily.

MARSH, a morass, swamp, fen. (F.) ME. mersche, Wyclif, Gen. xli. 8 (earlier text). AS. mersc, a marsh; Grein, ii. 234. [The change from sc to sk is usual and regular.] Mersc is a contraction of mer-isk, orig. an adj. signifying full of meres or pools (= mere-isk); Teut. type mar-isk*; formed with suffix -isk (ish) from Teut. mar-*, AS. mere, a mere, pool, lake; see MERE.—Low G. marisch, Bremen Wörterbuch, iii. 133. Der. marsh-y, marsh-iness.

MARSHAL, a master of the horse; variously applied as a title of honour. (F.—OHG.) The orig. sense is 'horse-servant,' a farrier or groom; it rose to be a title of honour, like constable, q.v. ME. mareschal, Rob. of Glouc. p. 491, l. 10081; marshall, P. Plowman, B. iii. 200.—OF. mareschal (mod. F. maréchal), 'a marshall of a kingdom or of a camp (an honourable place), also, a blacksmith, farrier'; Cot.—OHG. maraschalk (MHG. marshalc, G. marschall), an attendant upon a horse, groom, farrier.—OHG. marah, a battle-horse, whence the fem. marika, a mare, cognate with E. mare, q.v.; and schalk, MHG. skol, a servant, whence G. schalk, a knave, a rogue (by a change of sense parallel to that of E. knave). β. The latter element is cognate with AS. scealc, a servant, man (Grein). Du. schalk, a knave, Icel. skálfr, a servant, knave, rogue, Swed. skalk, a rogue; the oldest form and sense being preserved in Goth. skalks, a servant, Mat. viii. 9. Der. marshal, vb., Mach. ii. 1. 42, the sense being 'to act as marshal,' it being orig. a part of his duty to arrange for tournaments and to direct ceremonies; marshall-er, marshall-ship. ¶ The syllable -skál occurs also in one-schal, q.v.

MARSUPIAL, belonging to a certain family of animals. (L.—Gk.) Modern. Applied to such animals as have a pouch in which to carry their young.—L. marsūpium, a pouch.—Gk. μαρσπιον, μαρσπιον, a little pouch; dimin. of μαρσπος, μαρσπος, a bag, pouch (Xenophon, Anab. 4. 3. 11).

MART, a contracted form of Market, q.v. In Hamlet, i. 1. 74. MARTELLO TOWER, a circular fort on the S. coast of England. (Ital.—L.—Gk.—Pers.) 'The English borrowed the name of the tower from Corsica in 1794'; Webster. More correctly Mortella, because the fort taken in 1794 by the English was situate in Mortella bay, Corsica (Davies). The Ital. martella means a myrtle. ¶ Some have thought that these towers were called torri di martello because the watchmen gave the alarm by striking the bell with a hammer; Sir G. C. Lewis, Letters, 1862, p. 419 (see quot. in Davies, Suppl. Glossary). Torrisano has sonare le campane a martello, to sound the bells with a hammer, to give an alarm; and see Aristosto's Orlando, x. 51; xiv. 100. Hence the mistaken spelling. Cf. N. and Q. 10. S. iii. 193. See MYRTLE.

MARTEN, a kind of weasel. (F.—Low L.—Teut.) s. Marten is a contraction of the older form martern, in Harrison's Description of England, b. ii. c. 19, ed. Furnivall, p. 310, and in Palgrave; ME. martyn, properly 'marten's fur,' used by Lydgate (Halliwell's Dict.). β. Again, martin is an adj. form; from OF. martin, adj., belonging to the marten (Godefroy); cf. OF. martine, f., marten's fur. The E. sb. is marter or martre; it is spelt martre in Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 112, l. 118.—F. martre (also martr), 'a marten,' Cot.; spelt martre in the 11th cent. (Littré). Cf. Ital. martora, Span. marla, Low L. marturis, of which Ducange gives the pl. marturēs, as being a common word; also martialis (with the common change of t for r).—Teut. type marþ-u-z*, a marten; cf. MHG. and G. marder; Du. marer; AS. mearb, a marten, Orosius, l. 1; see Sweet's A. S. Reader: Icel. márbr (gen. marbrar); Swed. mård; Dan. maar (for maard*). Root unknown. ¶ The supposed L. martes, a marten, is due to a doubtful reading in Martial, 10. 37. 18, and cannot be relied on. It is curious that the AS. name was lost, and replaced by the F. one; but many terms of the chase are Norman.

MARTIAL, warlike, brave. (F.—L.) In Shak. Hen. V. iv. 8. 46; Lydgate, Minor Poems, p. 5.—F. martial, 'martial'; Cot.—L. Martialis, dedicated to Mars.—L. Marti-, decl. stem of Mars, the god of war; see MAROH (3). Der. martial-ly; also martial-ist (obsolete), Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 2. 16.

MARTIN, a bird of the swallow kind. (F.) In Minshew, ed. 1627, the name of the bird is given as martin, marten, martinet, and marielet. Palgrave has martynet. Of these forms, martien is corrupt; and martinet, marielet are dimin. forms, for which see MARTLET.—F. martin, (1) a proper name, Martin, (2) the same name applied to various birds and animals (Scheler); thus martin-pêcheur is a king-fisher (Hamilton), and oiseau de S. Martin is 'the ring-tail or hen-harm,' Cot.; whilst the MF. name for the martin was martinet; Cot. A note to Dunbar's Poems (S. T. S.), ii. 223, says that the hen harrier was called in F. oiseau de Saint-Martin because it traverses France about Nov. 11 (St. Martin's day). Der. mart-let, q.v. Also (from the name Martin) Martin-mas or (corruptly) Marle-mas, 2 Hen. IV. ii. 2. 110; martin-et, q.v.

MARTINET, a strict disciplinarian. (F.) 'You martinet rogue'; Wycherley, Plain Dealer (1677), A. iii. sc. 1. 'So called from an officer of that name, whom Voltaire describes as the regulator of the French infantry under Louis XIV' (A. D. 1643–1715); Todd's Johnson. See Sir S. D. Scott, The British Army, iii. 302. The name is a dimin. of the name Martin; see MARTIN.

MARTINGALE, MARTINGAL, a strap fastened to a horse's girth to hold his head down; in ships, a short spar under the bowsprit. (F.—Prov.) The ship's martingale is named from its resemblance, in situation, to the horse's. The word, spelt martingale, is given in Johnson only with respect to the horse. Minshew, ed. 1627, speaks of 'a martingale for a horse's tail'; the word also occurs in Cotgrave.—F. martingale, 'a martingale for a horse'; Cot. He also gives: 'a la martingale, absurdly, foolishly, untowardly, . . . in the homeliest manner.' β. See the account in Littré, who shows that the term arose from an oddly made kind of breeches, called chausses à la martingale, a phrase used by Rabelais. Cf. Span. martingal, an old kind of breeches; Ital. martingala, an old kind of horse. γ. The explanation of Ménage is accepted by Littré and Scheler. He says the breeches were named after the Martingues (pl. of Martigal), who were the inhabitants of a place called Martigues in Provence (S. of France). See Mistral, who gives Prov. martingalo, martigalo, a martingale (both for horse and ship). —Prov. Martingau, Martegau, an inhabitant of Marteguc. —Prov. Marteguc, Martigue, near the mouths of the Rhone; said to be named from St. Martha, who was supposed to be buried at Tarascon.

MARTINMAS, MARTEMAS, the feast of St. Martin; Nov. 11. (Ilybrid; F. and L.) Palgrave has Martylmas. The corruption to Martlemas (2 Hen. IV. ii. 2. 110) is due to the easy change of n to l; see Lilac. ME. Martynnesse, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 230, l. 1. Compounded of the F. proper name Martin; and ME. messe = AS. masse, from L. missa, a mass. See Martin and Mass (2).

MARTLET (1), a kind of bird, a martin. (F.) In Levins; and in Shak. Merch. Ven. ii. g. 28. Martinet in Baret (1580). A corruption of the older name martnet or martinet by the same change of n to l as is seen in Martlemas for Martynmas. 'Martnet, martinet, byrd.' Prompt. Parv. p. 327. —F. martinet, a martlet or martin; Cot. Picard martinet, a martin; also martlet, in the department of la Meuse (Corbillet). Dimin. of F. martin, a martin; with suffix -et. See Martin.

MARTLET (2), a swift; in heraldry. (F.—L.) The name was orig. merlette, altered to martlet by confusion with martlet (1), which meant 'a martin'; a bird closely allied to the swift. The alteration was earlier than Cotgrave's time, as he gives F. merlette, L., 'a martlet, in blazon.' But the true sense of merlette was 'a little blackbird.' —F. merle, a blackbird. —L. merula; see Merle. ¶ We find OF. merlos, pl. of merle, in the sense of 'martlets' or swifts, in the Roll of Caerlaverock (1300), p. 7. See Notes on E. Kym, p. 179.

MARTYR, one who suffers for his belief. (L.—Gk.) Lit. 'a witness' to the truth. ME. martir, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 185, l. 10. AS. martyr, Ælfred, tr. of Bede, lib. i. c. 7. —L. martir. —Gk. μάρτυρ, μάρτυρ, a witness; lit. one who remembers, records, or declares. Cf. Skt. smṛ, to remember, desire, record, declare. —SMER, to remember; whence also E. memory, Gk. μνήμη, care, &c. Der. martyr-dam, AS. martyr-dām; also martyr-logy, from Gk. μάρτυρ, decl. stem of μάρτυρ, with the common suffix -logy of Gk. origin, from μάτην, to speak; martyr-logy.

MARVEL, a wonder. (F.—L.) ME. marveille; King Alisaunder, l. 218. —F. merveille, 'a marvel'; Cot. [Cf. Span. maravilla, Ital. maraviglia, Port. maravilha,] —L. mirabilia, neut. pl., wonderful things; according to the common confusion in Late L. between the fem. sing. and neut. pl.; from the adj. mirabilis, wonderful. —L. mirāri, to wonder at. —L. mirus, wonderful; formed with suffix -rus from the base mi-, later form of smi-. See Miracle. Der. marvellous, ME. marvailous, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 174, l. 20; marvellous-ly, marvellous-ness; also marvel, vb., ME. meruailen, meruailen, P. Plowman, B. xi. 342.

MASCLE, in heraldry; a perforated lozenge. (F.—L.) An erroneous spelling of OF. macle. —OF. macle, a mascle, or lozenge-shaped plate of steel, used in making scale-armour (Godefroy); MF. (and F.) macle, 'the mash [mesh] of a net; also, in blazon, a mascle, or short lozenge, having a square hole in the middle'; Cot. —L. macula, a mesh; whence also Mail (1), q. v. Perhaps confused with OHG. masca, a mesh. Doublet, mail (1). See Notes on E. Kym, p. 181.

MASCULINE, male. (F.—L.) ME. masculin, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 3. l. 28. —F. masculin, 'masculine'; Cot. —L. masculus, lengthened from masculus, male; see Male. Der. masculine-ly, masculine-ness.

MASH, to beat into a mixed mass. (E.) The old sense was 'to mix.' To masche, miscere; Levins, 35. 10. 'Maschyn, yn brewynge, misco; Maschyng, mixtura, mixtio.' Prompt. Parv. Also ME. misken, to mash; Owl and Nightingale, 84; as if from AS. mascan*, from masc*, sb. To mask is, in particular, to steep malt; the tub into which the refuse grains are put is called the mask-tub, whence pigs are fed. A mask for horses is a mixture of malt and bran. Cf. Lowland Scotch mask-fat, a vat for brewing; masking-fat, a mashing-vat; masking-pot, a tea-pot, lit. a pot for steeping or infusing tea (see Burns, When Gulliford good our pilot stood, st. 1). See Halliwell and Jamieson. Apparently E.; cf. AS. māsc-uſſſ (for māsc-uſſſ*), wort, new beer, Cockayne's Leechdoms, ii. 87, 97, 107. Here māsc stands for māsc, as usual, whence Sc. mask, E. mask; the sense of māsc was probably a mixture, esp. brewers' grains. —Swed. dial. mask, brewers' grains (Rietz), Swed. mask, grains; Swed. māska, to mash; Dan. mask, a mash; whence mask-har, a mashing-tub; masker, to mash, to fatten pigs (with grains); North Frisic māsk, grains, daff (Outzen); Norw. meisk, sb., meiska, vb.; G. meisch, a mash (of distillers and brewers); whence meisch/fas, a mash-vat, meischen, to mash, mix. β. Thus the verb to mash is due to the sb. mask (from AS. māsc, with vowel-shortening), meaning 'a mixture'; and it is probable that the base māsc* (Teut. maisk-*) is allied by gradation to misc-, as in AS. miscian, to mix; see Mix. The Irish masgaim, I infuse, mash malt, Gael. masg, to mix, infuse, steep, are borrowed from E. But Irish measgaim, I mix, Gael. measg, to mix, W. mysgu, to mix, as well as Lithuan. maisyti, to stir things in a pot, from miszti, to mix (Nesselmann), are cognate. ¶ Unconnected with OF. mascher, F. mācher, which is merely L. masdicare, to chew.

MASK, MASQUE, a disguise for the face; a masked entertainment. (F.—Span.—Arab.) It is usual to write mask in the sense of visor, and masque in the sense of masquerade; there is no reason for this distinction. Perhaps we may call mask the E., and masque the F. spelling. No doubt it is, and long has been, gen. supposed that the entertainment takes its name from the visor, according to the F. usage; but it is remarkable that the sense of entertainment is an old one, the use of the visor being accidental. The sense of entertainment is a common one in old authors. 'A jolly company in manner of a maske;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 5. 'The whiles the maskers marched forth in trim array;' id. iii. 12. 6. 'Some haue I sene ere this, full boldlye come daunce in a maske, whose dauncing became theym so well, that yf theyr vsours had bene of [off] theyr faces, shame woulde not haue suffred theym to set forth a foote;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1039 e. 'Cause them to be deprehended and taken and their maskers taken of [off] and theyr hypocisie to be dyscouered;' id. p. 758 h. Note here the use of maskers in the sense of masks; it is not a mistake, but correct according to the Span. spelling, as will appear. —F. masque, 'a mask, a visor;' Cot. β. This F. masque is probably due to the Late L. masca, a mask, or a spectre, in the Corpus Glossary, l. 1275. But we must further consider the fuller forms evidenced by MF. masquarize, 'masked,' Cot.; as well as by masquerie, masquerade, mascarade, 'a mask or mummery.' γ. The last form, mascarade, is plainly borrowed from Span. mascarada, a masquerade, assembly of maskers, from mascara, a masker, masquerader, also a mask. Cf. Ital. mascherata, a masquerade; mascherare, to mask, maschera, a mask; so that Sir T. More's use of masker=mask, is fully accounted for. —Arab. maskharat, 'a buffoon, a fool, jester, a droll, a wag, a man in masquerade; a plesantry, anything ridiculous or mirthful, sport; Pers. maskharā kardān, to ridicule or deride, to play the buffoon;' Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1416. —Arab. root sakhr, he ridiculed; id. p. 815. ¶ Both sources seem real; as M. Dev. remarks, in the Supplement to Littre, it is needless to give all the details in full by which the latter etymology can be proved. It is sufficient to refer to Dozy, Glossaire des Mots Espagnols tirés de l'Arabe. Der. mask-er; also masquer-ade, explained above; whence masquarad-er.

MASON, a worker in stone. (F.—Late L.—G.) In early use. ME. mason, King Alisaunder, l. 1. 2370; spelt masoun, Floris and Blancheflor, l. 316. —F. maçon, maçon (F. maçon), 'a mason'; Cot. —Late L. macināre, acc. of macio, a mason; we find also the forms machio, macho, maco, and even marcio, machio, matio, matio. β. The difficulty is to tell the true Low Lat. form; marcio is probably wrong, and macio may be a misreading of matio. If we take matio or matio as the standard form, we may perhaps suppose machio, macho, macio, maco to come from it; the difficulty of distinguishing between e and i in MSS. is often very great. γ. Matio may be referred to a Teut. stem majon-, m., f., a cutter, from a base mat-, to hack, or cut; whence possibly E. mat-toe. Cf. OHG. mezzo, a mason, G. steinmetz, a stonemason. Der. mason-ry; also mason-ry, Rom. of the Rose, l. 302, from F. maçonnerie, from the verb maçonner, to do mason's work.

MASQUE, MASQUERADE; see Mask.

MASSE (1), a lump of matter, quantity, size. (F.—L.—Gk.) ME. masse, Prompt. Parv. —F. masse, 'a masse, lump;' Cot. —L. masse, a mass. (Prob. not a true L. word, but taken from Gk.) —Gk. μάζα, a barley-cake, closely allied to μάζα, any kneaded mass. —Gk. μάζω (for μάζω-ναι*), to knead. Cf. Lith. minkyti, to knead. Der. mass, vb.; mass-ive, from F. massif, 'massive,' Cot.; mass-ive-ly, mass-ive-ness; also mass-y (an older adj., with E. suffix -y = AS. -ig), Spenser, F. Q. iii. 11. 47; mass-iness.

MASSE (2), the celebration of the Eucharist. (L.) ME. masse, masse, P. Plowman, B. v. 418, C. vii. 27; Chaucer has masse-peny, C. T. 7331 (D 1749). Spelt masse in Havelok, 188. [Not from F. masse, but directly from L.] OMer. masse, Matt. vii. 4. AS. masse: (1) the mass, (2) a church-festival, Grein, li. 226; Ælfred, tr. of Bede, b. iv. c. 22, ed. Whelock, p. 319. —Late L. missa, (1) dismissal, (2) the mass; see Ducange. β. The name is usually accounted for by supposing that the allusion is to the words ite, missa est (go, the congregation is dismissed), which were used at the conclusion of the service. 'Come I to ite, missa est, I holde me yssuerd' = 'If I come in time to hear the last words of the service, it suffices for me'; P. Plozman, B. v. 419. Wedgwood suggests that it meant rather the dismissal of the catechumens who were not allowed to remain during the celebration of the eucharist; for which he cites the following passage from Papias: 'Missa tempore sacrificii est quando catechumeni foras mittuntur, clamante lenita [the deacon], Si quis catechumenus remansit, exeat foras; et inde missa, quia sacramentis altaris interesse non possunt, quia nondum regenerati sunt.' γ. It matters little; for we may be sure that missa is, in any case, derived from L. missa, fem. of missus, pp. of mittere, to send, send away; see Missile. ¶ The change of vowel from L. i to AS. æ is remarkable, but we find a similar change in Icel. messa, Swed. mesa, Dan. messe; and still more clearly in G. messe from OHG. messa and missa; also in OF. messe, Ital. mesa. (All these words are, of course, borrowed from Romanic, which substitutes e for L. short i; cf. F. vert from L. uridem.) Der. Candle-mas, Christ-mas, Hallow-mas, Lam-mas, Martin-mas, Michael-mas; q.v.

MASSACRE, indiscriminate slaughter, carnage. (F.—O. Low G.) Pronounced masserd in Spenser, F. q. iii. 11, 29; he also has massierd, id. iii. 35.—F. massacre, 'a massacre'; Cot. Also massacrer, 'to massacre'; id. The OF. sb. is massacre, massacre (Godefroy). β. Of disputed origin; perhaps extended from Low G. matsen, to cut, to hew (Bremen Wörterb. iii. 137), Du. matsen, to maul, to kill. Cf. G. metzeln, an extension of metzen, to cut, to kill (Flügel); G. metzeln, a massacre, butchery, slaughter; see MASON. ¶ The F. word is one of much difficulty; the above solution is very doubtful. See Norm. dial. massacrer, a massacre (Moisy), allied to ONF. machetier, a butcher (Wace); cf. Late L. macellarius, a butcher (Ducange), from L. macellum, shambles, meat-market. Cf. also OF. macellier, macellier, macarier, macarier, &c., a butcher (Godefroy). This seems to lead to a right solution, though the forms are abnormal.

MAST (1), a pole to sustain the sails of a ship. (F.) ME. mast, Chaucer, C. T. 3264. AS. mast, the stem of a tree, bough, mast of a ship; Grein, I. 226 (whence Icel. mast was prob. borrowed). + Du. mast; Swed. and Dan. mast; G. mast. Prob. cognate with L. mānus (< māziō), a mast; Brugmann, i. § 587. Der. mast-less, dis-mast. MAST (2), the fruit of beech and forest trees. (E.) The origin sense is 'edible fruit', with reference to the feeding of swine. ME. mast. 'They eat mast'; Chaucer, Asias Prima, l. 7. AS. mast, 'prim hund swina mast' = 'mast for three hundred swine'; Thorpe, Diplomatarium Aevi Saxonicæ, p. 70. + G. mast, (1) mast, (2) stall-feeding, fattening; whence māsten, to fatten. β. Doubtless allied to Gk. μάδα, sb. fat; see Brugmann, i. § 698.

MASTER, a superior, lord, teacher. (F.—L.) In early use. ME. maister, meister, spelt maister; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 41, l. 29.—OF. maistre, maistre; mod. F. maître, a master.—L. magister, acc. of magis, a master. β. L. mag-ister is a double comparative form; the base mag- is the same as in mag-nus, great, Gk. μέγας, great; so that the sense is 'great-er-er'—much more great. Der. master, verb; master-ly, master-ship, master-y, q.v.; also master-builder, hand, key, less, piece, work, &c.

MASTERY, lordship, dominion. (F.—L.) In early use. ME. maistrerie, maistrerie; spelt maistrerie in Ancrer Riwle, p. 140.—AF. maistrerie, Philip du Thaum. Libre des Creatures, l. 1564; OF. maistrerie, maistrerie, mastery (Burguy).—OF. maistre, a master; see MASTER.

MASTIC, MASTICHE, a kind of gum resin. (F.—L.—Gk.) The true yielding it is also called maistic, but should rather be called the maistic-tree, spelt maistic-tree in the Bible, Story of Susanna, v. 54. Another name for the tree is lentisk. 'The lentiskies also have their rosin, which they call maistic'; Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xiv. c. 20. ME. mastyk, Prompt. Parv.; maistic, Palladius, xl. 410.—F. maistic, 'maistic', a sweet gum'; Cot.—L. maisticā.—Gk. μαρτύριον, the gum of the tree oxyris, called in L. lentiscus. β. So called because it was used for chewing in the East; from the base uor-, seen in uoraf, the mouth, uoráfew, to chew.—Gk. μαρτύριον, I chew. Der. maistic-ate, q.v.
